ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Special thanks to Jumi-imo for her invaluable knowledge, wit, and companionship; Yeong-gyu imo for letting me take her little car around the country again; and great-aunt, Mangyu-samcheon, and the rest of the family for letting me crash at their place for weeks at a time. To Kelly Regan, Jamie Ehrlich, and the rest of the Frommer's staff for their patience and hard work; and to my husband, Tim Maloney, for putting up with the piles of maps, late nights, and a sometimes crazed wife.

South Korea is very much a land of contradictions. Rugged mountain ranges slope down to pristine beaches, and bustling, cosmopolitan cities are surrounded by farmland. An exotic land of colorful celebrations and beautiful landscapes, it’s rife with traces of its thousands of years of history. At the same time, the country has industrialized so profoundly and so rapidly that, in urban areas, you may sometimes have to look a bit deeper to see the beauty amid the high traffic and towering concrete apartment blocks.

Looking at a map, you might think it would be easy to traverse South Korea’s 99,237 sq. km (38,316 sq. miles). But nearly 70% of South Korea is made up of seemingly impenetrable mountainous terrain. That terrain has helped many of South Korea’s regions maintain their unique charms and has gifted the country with some of the most stunning national parks in all of Asia.

Viewing a larger map, traces of South Korea’s tumultuous past emerge. Extending south from China, and just north of Japan, the Korean Peninsula has long been strategically desirable to both countries. As a result, Korea has fought off invaders from Mongolia, Manchuria, China, and Japan over the course of its 5,000-year history. But the most traumatic moment in Korea’s past came after a 35-year Japanese occupation that ended with the close of World War II. The Soviet Union was to oversee the northern half of the peninsula, while the U.S. oversaw the south, ostensibly until fair elections could be held. But it was not to be. The Soviets and the U.S. were unable to agree on how to reunify the country, and on June 25, 1950, Soviet-backed troops from what had become known as North Korea crossed the 38th parallel and invaded South Korea. The United Nations sent troops (predominantly American soldiers) to the South’s defense, but Korea had fallen victim to the Cold War.

Though an armistice was signed on July 27, 1953, it resulted in the formal division of the peninsula into North and South with a buffer, the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), in between. Its name is a tragically ironic one, as the DMZ is one of the world’s most heavily guarded places. But while North Korea remains essentially sealed off to outsiders, South Korea, which makes up 45% of the peninsula (making it the same size as Portugal), is one of the most fascinating tourist destinations in the world.

Most visitors to the country see Seoul and think that they’ve experienced all that South Korea has to offer. Sure, Seoul is an exciting city with crowded markets, centuries-old palaces, and gourmet restaurants. But the real excitement of South Korea lies outside its modern confines.

All the more reason then to get out of the major cities and explore. You’ll be well rewarded by the quiet beauty of the mountains and the sea, and the mystical charms of South Korea’s ancient temples and fortresses, as you explore a vast countryside rarely visited by international tourists. Although English speakers are hard to find in some of these more remote areas, it’s all part of the excitement and adventure of taking the roads less traveled.
1 THE MOST UNFORGETTABLE TRAVEL EXPERIENCES

- Staying Overnight in a Buddhist Temple: Many temples in South Korea offer overnight stays, where you can enjoy true solitude and quiet, and perhaps a bit of inner peace. Wake up early to the sound of prayers, and cleanse your mind, body, and spirit with a bath and a meal of mountain vegetables. See chapter 4.
- Sipping Tea in a Traditional Teahouse in Insadong (Seoul): In the middle of Seoul’s cosmopolitan madness, you’ll find a bit of tranquillity within the walls of a traditional teahouse. Enjoy the music of a gayageum (a traditional stringed instrument) while calming your spirits with a cup of history. See p. 127.
- Haggling with a Vendor in an Open Market: South Korea’s markets are bustling centers that can be found along winding alleyways and crowded streets. You haven’t truly experienced South Korea until you’ve elbowed your way through the crowd and convinced a vendor to drop the price on something by at least a couple of won. Even if that souvenir is already dirt-cheap, it’s fun to get caught up in the excitement of bargaining.
- Being Naked in Front of Hundreds of Strangers: Okay, so nudity isn’t the real attraction. That would be the traditional bathhouses (or even better, the water parks featuring hot springs) scattered throughout South Korea. Don’t leave the country without relaxing in a hot sauna with a bunch of old ladies (or old men) or getting a water massage at one of South Korea’s many spas.
- Seeing a Traditional Performance: Whether you’re in Seoul or hanging out in a rural village seemingly in the middle of nowhere, there is probably a festival going on nearby. Try to catch a performance of pansori (Korea’s wailing blues), a mask dance, or just the hallowed sound of the bamboo daegeum (flute).
- Visiting the DMZ: The Demilitarized Zone is probably one of the least aptly named places on the planet. A result of the last vestiges of animosity between Soviet Russia and the U.S., since the Berlin Wall fell Korea has been the only divided country in the world. See chapter 6.

THE BEST SMALL TOWNS

- Icheon (Gyeonggi-do): Just outside of Seoul, this town is one of the foremost ceramics centers in the country, famous for its traditional artisans. The dozens of active kilns in the area are a vital part of Korea’s cultural heritage. Don’t miss the famous rice meals. See chapter 6.
- Boseong (Jeollanam-do): In late March and early April, the first new tea leaves peek out from tea bushes along these terraced farmlands. The hillsides here are gorgeous even in the dead of winter, but seeing dozens of older women hand-picking green tea is quite a treat. Finish off your visit with a cup of (what else?) green tea, green tea noodles, or some green tea ice cream. See chapter 8.
- Damyang (Jeollanam-do): The bamboo capital of South Korea, this town is famous for its bamboo forests and for producing pretty much anything and everything you could imagine from this versatile plant. My advice is to lose yourself in the midst of the bamboo... and listen as the leaves of these tall grasses whisper secrets to the wind. See chapter 8.

- Gurim (Jeollanam-do): A tiny village located just outside of Wolchulsan National Park, this historic locale is known for its ancient pottery and its replicas of antique works. See chapter 8.

- Andong (Gyeongsangbuk-do): Andong's folk village is the best in the country, bar none. It even warranted a visit from Queen Elizabeth II, if you can spare the time, the rest of Jirisan is worth exploring as well. See p. 241.

- Shilleuksa (Yeoju, Gyeonggi-do): Perched on a precarious mountainside, this former hermitage is now a temple complex. Wake up early to climb up its steep steps and catch the sunrise over the ocean. You’ll also miss the bus loads of tourists, who usually arrive in the late afternoon. See p. 233.

- Songgwangsa (Suncheon, Jeollanam-do): It’s quite a trek to reach this temple, but once you do, you will be rewarded with both a fabulous view of the surrounding foliage and some brilliant red and gold murals representing a range of religious figures. Try to time your visit for the noon or evening prayers, as you’ll be treated to the echoing of the meditative gong. See p. 234.

- Unjusa (Hwasun, Jeollanam-do): This temple complex not only is easy to reach (no giant mountains to climb to get here!), but also houses the most fascinating array of Buddhist statuary in the country. See p. 245.
and pray to the Bodhisattva of Compassion. If you’re pure of heart, your wishes will be granted. Even if you’re not, you’ll be treated to a spectacular view. See p. 306.

• Bulguksa (Gyeongju): A testament to Shilla architectural ingenuity, this famed temple—possibly the country’s most visited—has had its wooden structures rebuilt multiple times, but its stone statues have hung on since A.D. 528. Early mornings are best to enjoy a taste of its former tranquillity. See p. 256.

• Naksansa (Gangwon-do): Although this expansive temple was largely destroyed by a fire in 2008, a bright new temple has been constructed in its place. Including the cliffside Hongryeon-am hermitage on its grounds, visit during lunchtime and be treated to a free bowl of janchi gooksu (feast noodles). See p. 357.

• Changdeokgung (Seoul): If you want to see how Korean royalty used to live, this palace is a prime example. Its famed Biwon (“Secret Garden”) alone is worth the visit. See p. 95.

• Jongmyo Royal Shrine (Seoul): There’s a reason this myo (royal shrine) is a World Heritage site—it’s the most important one in the country and is home to the longest traditional wooden building left in Korea. Try to time your visit for the spectacular annual memorial ceremony for the dead Joseon kings (usually the first Sun in May). See p. 102.

• Suwon Hwaseong (Suwon, Gyeonggi-do): The best restored fortress in the country, this impressive wall has historic gates and towers climbing a mountain in the middle of the now-modern city. See p. 134.

• Ganghwa-do (Incheon, Gyeonggi-do): This island off the coast of Incheon is home to about 80 dolmen, prehistoric rock tombs, dating back thousands of years. See p. 147.

• Gwanghallu-won (Namwon, Jeollabuk-do): Home of the legend of Chunhyang (a traditional love story about a nobleman’s son who falls in love with a courtesan’s daughter), this garden is not only a mecca for lovers, but a spot where pansori made its debut. Try to visit between April and October and catch the free performances at noon. See p. 211.

• Daereung-won Tumuli Park (Gyeongju): There’s something eerily peaceful about the tumuli (tombs) that house the remains of Shilla kings. Although only one of the tombs has been excavated, just seeing the soft, grassy mounds is interesting enough. See p. 256.

5 The Best Places to Enjoy the Scenery

• Cheonggyecheon (Seoul): Years ago, a small river that flowed through Seoul was paved over. Although Cheonggyecheon is no longer a “natural” stream, this restored green space in the middle of the city gives new perspective to the skyscrapers towering on either side. See p. 110.

- Songnisan (Chungcheongbuk-do/Gyeongsangbuk-do): This national park has some of the best hiking trails in South Korea. In a country where hiking is the unofficial national sport, that’s saying something. See p. 194.

- Juwangsan (Gyeongsangbuk-do): The smallest of the country’s national parks, it is still one of the prettiest. Jusanji Lake, whose clear waters reflect the surrounding peaks, is well worth the hike. See p. 279.

- Hong-do (Jeollanam-do): If you have a day to spare, take a ferry to this “red island” in the middle of Dadohae Maritime Park. A protected area, its pebble beaches and quaint seafood restaurants are overshadowed only by its magnificent scenery. See p. 246.

- Inner Seorak (Gangwon-do): Although all of Seoraksan boasts beautiful landscapes, the less traveled inner section is worth the extra trek, especially in the fall when the autumn colors light up the mountainsides. See p. 353.

- Sanbang-gulsa (Jeju-do): This island grotto and nearby Yongmeoli Haebyeon (Dragon Head Beach) are stuff of legend and wonderful examples of the volcanic island’s natural beauty. See p. 403.

- Seongsan Ilchulbong (Jeju-do): This isn’t called “Sunrise Peak” for nothing, since it’s a choice spot for watching the morning’s rays. This former parasitic volcano is now home to beautiful rape flowers that bloom in the spring. See p. 404.

- Namdaemun (Seoul): If you shop in only one market in the entire country, this is the one to visit. They say that if you can’t find it here, the oldest and largest traditional market in Korea, it probably doesn’t exist. See p. 116.

- Jang-anpyeong (Seoul): The best place to find antiques, Jang-anpyeong is one of the largest specialized markets in all of Asia. If you’re looking for a unique treasure, this is the place to go digging. See p. 119.

- Noryangjin Seafood Market (Seoul): This is the city’s oldest and largest fish market. Try to make it here at the crack of dawn to see the fish auctions while the fishermen unload their night’s catch. See p. 116.

- Yongsan Electronics Market (Seoul): Even if you’re not a computer geek, you can appreciate the electronic mayhem in this marketplace that spans 22 buildings. See p. 120.

- Hanbok Street (Daejeon, Chungcheong-do): Whether or not you’re in the market for a traditional Korean outfit, check out the hundreds of stores that specialize in the national costume (a short bodice and voluminous skirt for women; a vest, an overcoat, and pants that tie at the waist and ankles for men), which is still worn for weddings and other formal occasions. See p. 169.

- Yakjeon-golmok Market (Daegu): The city of Daegu’s biggest draw is this 350-year-old market that sells all manner of traditional oriental herbs and medicines. See p. 265.

- Jagalchi Market (Busan): Korea’s largest seafood market, they have everything squiggly, shiny, wet, and fresh from the ocean. See p. 342.
THE BEST OF SOUTH KOREA

The Best Festivals & Celebrations

As a general note, most celebrations happen in the spring or autumn. For dates and contact information, see also “Calendar of Events,” on p. 23.

• The Day the Buddha Came (aka Buddha’s Birthday; throughout the country): During what is sometimes referred to as the “Festival of Lanterns,” every temple in the country gets lit up like a Christmas tree in celebration of the birth of the Enlightened One.

• Baekje Cultural Festival (Buyeo or Gongju): Every October, this historical event celebrates the great Baekje kings with over 100 traditional performances and events throughout the area.

• Boryeong Mud Festival (Daecheon, Chungcheongnam-do): Held on the muddy beaches of Daecheon every July, this is basically organized mud play. Not only is it a great photo op, but you also get a beneficial skin treatment while rolling around in the mud. The dirty activities include mud wrestling, mud slides, and making mud soap. Mud pies are optional.

• Pusan International Film Festival (PIFF; Busan): The largest and most renowned of Korea’s film festivals, it is a wonderful showcase for current films from throughout Asia. Usually held sometime in October.

• Andong Mask Dance Festival (Andong, Gyeongsangnam-do): Although the highlight of the festival is the Korean talchum (mask dance), performers from other countries show off their masked splendor, as well.

• Gangneung Danoje Festival (Gangneung, Gangwon-do): Celebrating the traditional “Dano” (the fifth day of the fifth month of the Lunar year), it is one of the few places you can see traditional shamanistic rituals. It usually happens sometime in June.

THE BEST LOCAL ACCOMMODATIONS

• Holiday In Korea Hostel (02/3672-3113): Great for budget-conscious travelers in Seoul, this hostel is cozy and centrally located. The owners throw a party every Saturday night, which is especially great for single travelers looking to make new friends. See p. 77.

• Kim’s Guest House (02/337-9894): It’s hard to find a better bargain in Seoul with this kind of hospitality. You’ll get a simple dorm-style room, but the owner makes you feel like you’re visiting family. See p. 78.

• Sarangchae (054/773-4868): Walking distance to Tumuli Park, this family-run minbak (homestay) in Gyeongju is not only a bargain, but a great way to experience warm Korean hospitality firsthand. See p. 259.

• Busan Youth Hostel Arpina (051/731-9800): For the price, the location, and the convenience, this is the best budget accommodation in Busan. The rooms are modest, but some of them have views of Haeundae Beach. Suites are great for traveling families or groups. See p. 320.

• Jazz Village (064/738-9300): This Korean-style pension in Jeju-do has both hotel-style rooms and “condo”-style facilities, complete with kitchens. A bit off the beaten path, its facilities are great for vacationing families, and the piped-in soft jazz is a fun touch. See p. 396.
9 THE BEST HOTELS

• Westin Chosun (☎ 02/771-0500): Just like an old standard, this hotel is dependable and delightful for travelers who want a place that’s high-tech and centrally located. Leave your shoes by the door and they’ll be shined by the next morning. The friendly, professional staff is helpful with everything from dining recommendations to hail- ing you a cab. See p. 71.

• The Shilla Seoul (☎ 02/2233-3131): It’s located in the green oasis of Namsan in the middle of the city, and you won’t find quieter digs anywhere else in town. The service is also nearly perfect. Spacious rooms and polite staff add to a nice stay. See p. 75.

• Chungmu Marina Resort Condo (☎ 055/643-8000): Convenient for traveling families or groups, this resort has oceanview rooms complete with kitchens and living rooms. This apartment-style spot is a great place to enjoy the dramatic beauty of Tongyeong. See p. 298.

• Novotel Ambassador Busan (☎ 051/743-1234): With a prime location on Haeundae Beach, the Novotel is perfect for spur-of-the-moment beach strolls. Here, at one of the best luxury hotels in Busan, you’ll find up-to-date facilities and 24-hour dining on-site. See p. 319.

• Hyatt Regency Jeju (☎ 064/733-1234 or 800/492-8804 in the U.S. and Canada): A Jungmun Beach standard, this elegant resort hotel is one of the best on the island. Unlike the newer tourist properties, this hotel has kept its understated elegance. The open lobby with glass elevators is a nice touch. See p. 395.

• Jeju Lotte Hotel (☎ 064/731-1000): The top hotel in the Lotte chain, this expansive resort overlooks the ocean in the Jungmun beach complex. Look past its cheesy Las Vegas-style water show to see its expansive grounds and spacious rooms. See p. 395.

10 THE BEST DINING EXPERIENCES

• Noshing in the Food Alley in Nam- daemun Market (Seoul): You haven’t really experienced the charm of an outdoor market until you’ve had a bite to eat from the street vendors in this shi- jang (market). Fuel up for your next round of shopping with a fresh flatcake hot off the griddle or a plate of soondae (blood sausage). See p. 116.

• Enjoying a Cup of Tea while Over- looking the City’s Shoppers (Seoul): Seoul’s Insadong district is chock-full of traditional tea shops. Opt for one on the second floor and watch the world pass by on the streets below, while sipping a fragrant brew from a hand- crafted teacup. See p. 127.

If that doesn’t keep the doctor away, nothing will.

You can walk into any restaurant and get an excellent meal without breaking the bank. A hanjeongsik (Korean traditional meal) is a great way to enjoy the area’s seasonal vegetables and rice.
South Korea in Depth

The history of the Korean Peninsula spans more than 5,000 strife-filled years. That’s ironic for a place that has been called the “Land of the Morning Calm.” But because of its strategic location, the peninsula suffered a seemingly endless series of invasions by China and Manchuria from the north and Japan from the east. In fact, the last war, the Korean War, never actually ended—rather, it was halted by a cease-fire in 1953. That cease-fire solidified a painful split, with a communist dictatorship ruling the North and a more democratic regime ruling the South. The Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), the area that marks the boundary between the two Koreas, is a painful reminder of the country’s war-torn past.

While North Korea has suffered poverty and famine, South Korea has made incredible strides in the past few decades in its race toward modernization. South Korea, a country roughly the size of Great Britain, is the 15th-largest economy in the world. The city of Seoul, with its towering high-rises and modern infrastructure, is a testament to the innovative spirit of the Korean people.

The country is a land of contrasts and contradictions. The leader in developing technology for high-speed Internet and mobile phones, South Korea still holds dear its history and traditions. Just a few hours beyond Seoul’s skyscrapers, you’ll find tranquil temples nestled in verdant hillsides holding secrets of the land’s past.

South Korea’s history after the Korean War is marked by turbulent governments. The country has undergone five major constitutional changes, along with decades of authoritarian governments and military rule. Although an electoral college was created in the 1970s, South Korea did not hold its first democratic and fair presidential election until 1987. Despite its violent past, South Korea grew by leaps and bounds, especially in the decades from the 1960s to the 1990s. It is now the 4th largest economy in Asia and the 15th largest in the world. It is also one of the most wired countries in the world.

The president is the head of state of the Republic of Korea and is elected by direct popular vote for a 5-year term (with no possibility for reelection). Rhee Syngman took power in 1954 with an anticommunist platform, but his administration collapsed in the face of a student antigovernment movement, the April 19 Revolution, in 1960. In 1963, Park Chung-hee was elected president, and he ruled with military might until he was assassinated by his own men in 1979 (Im Sang-Soo’s 2005 film, The President’s Last Bang, is an excellent satire of the assassination). In 1980, Chun Doo-hwan came to power and continued his predecessor’s authoritarian rule until a massive 1987 protest demanding democracy. At that point, Roh Tae-woo came to power, the country hosted the 1988 Olympics, and it joined the United Nations in 1991. Kim Young-sam became the country’s first nonmilitary president in 1993 and saw the International Monetary Fund (IMF) collapse during his presidency. In 1997, Kim Dae-jung was elected... and made efforts toward reviving the economy, and he hosted the FIFA World Cup in 2002. The 16th president of South Korea, Roh Moo-hyun was elected in 2003 and committed suicide in May 2009, when he was embroiled in a bribery scandal.

After one of the lowest voter turnouts in history, Lee Myung-bak of the conservative Grand National Party was elected president in 2007. The largely unpopular President Lee was the former CEO of Hyundai and served as the mayor of Seoul. Lee's term began in 2008 and will continue through February of 2013.

2 LOOKING BACK AT SOUTH KOREA

PREHISTORY

The first human beings on the Korean Peninsula can be traced as far back as the Paleolithic period (about 500,000 years ago). Researchers believe that Neanderthals lived here until Paleo-Asiatic people moved in around 40,000 B.C. Very little is known about the Paleo-Asiatics, but the tools and other relics they left behind suggest that they were hunter-gatherers who also fished. It is very likely that these early inhabitants of the Korean Peninsula moved to what is now Japan about 20,000 years ago, when the Korea Strait was narrower and easier to cross.

Archaeological remains suggest that nomadic Neolithic tribes migrated from central and northeast Asia (mostly Mongolia, China’s Manchu region, and southeast Siberia) to the Korean coastline around 8000 B.C. These are the ancestors of modern Koreans, and they are responsible for the earliest versions of Korean culture and language (the Tungusic branch of the Ural-Altaic language group).

At around 3000 B.C. a larger wave of immigrants from the same areas brought more developed pottery and better tools. These new arrivals contributed to the founding of small villages of pit dwellings. With the domestication of animals and the development of farming, these tribes ventured farther inland and became increasingly less nomadic. Clans developed around the start of the Bronze Age.

However, the beginning of Korean history is generally considered to be the birth of King Dang-gun in 2333 B.C. Legend has it that Dang-gun was born of a son of Heaven and a woman from one of the bear-totem tribes (shamanism was predominant in ancient Korean religions). He established the Old Joseon Kingdom, which literally translates to the “Land of the Morning Calm.” This walled kingdom was located near present-day Pyongyang, the capital of North Korea.

THE THREE KINGDOMS

Ancient Korea was made up mostly of clan communities that combined to create small city-states. By the first century B.C., three dominant kingdoms had emerged on the peninsula and part of what is now Manchuria. The first and largest was Goguryeo (37 B.C.–A.D. 668), in the northern part of the peninsula, encompassing part of Manchuria and what is now North Korea. It served as a buffer against aggression from China. Baekje (18 B.C.–A.D. 660) developed in the southwestern part of the peninsula and Shilla (57 B.C.–A.D. 935) in the southeastern section. This time is known as the Three Kingdoms Period, even though a fourth, smaller kingdom, Gaya (A.D. 42–532), existed between Shilla and Baekje in the southern part of the peninsula.

Goguryeo was the first to adopt Buddhism in A.D. 372. The Baekje Kingdom followed in 384. Shilla was later and did not adopt the religion until 528. The three kingdoms had similar cultures and infrastructures, based on Confucian and Buddhist hierarchical structures with the king at the top. Legal systems were created, and Goguryeo annexed Buyeo and Shilla took over Gaya. The kingdoms became refined aristocratic societies and began competing with each other in development of Buddhist-Confucian power and an eye toward territorial expansion.

UNIFIED SHILLA

The Shilla Kingdom developed a Hwa-rang (“Flower of Youth”) corps, a voluntary military organization for young men, in the 600s. This popular movement helped build up Shilla’s military strength. The kingdom was also looking outward, learning from its neighboring kingdoms and building amicable relations with the Tang Dynasty China.

In the meantime, Goguryeo was in fierce battle with Tang China and the Sui emperor, with heavy casualties on both sides. Tang China eventually turned to Shilla for help. The Shilla-Tang forces were able to defeat Goguryeo and its ally Baekje, but Tang wasn’t about to let Shilla have control of the land. Chinese officials took the Baekje king and his family to Tang and appointed a military governor to rule Baekje territory. Goguryeo’s king and hundreds of thousands of prisoners were also taken to China. Shilla launched a counterattack against China and retook all of Baekje. In 674 China invaded Shilla, but the kingdom was able to defend itself, forcing the Tang army out of Pyongyang. Still, the Chinese forces were able to hold onto part of the Goguryeo kingdom, which is now Manchuria.

The Shilla Kingdom officially unified the peninsula in 668. Despite some turbulence, the Unified Shilla period (668–935) maintained close ties to China and its culture. Many Shilla monks traveled there to study Buddhism and bring back their cultural learnings. During this cultural flowering, there were new technological innovations, temples were built, and the world’s oldest astronomical observatory was constructed in Gyeongju, the Shilla capital.

GORYEO DYNASTY

At the end of the 9th century, the Shilla Kingdom had grown weak and local lords began fighting for control. It was a period of civil war and rebellion. In 918, Wang Geon, the lord of Songak (present-day Gaesong), defeated the other warring lords and established the Goryeo Dynasty (918–1392). Goryeo, a shortened version of the former Goguryeo kingdom, is where the name Korea came from.

New laws were created based on Chinese law as well as Buddhist and Confucian beliefs. During a period of relative peace, culture flourished under the Goryeo aristocracy. Goryeo celadon pottery was developed; the Tripitaka Koreana, a set of more than 81,000 wood blocks used to print the Buddhist canon, was created; and movable type was invented. As the official religion, Buddhism flourished under Goryeo rule—new temples were built, wonderful paintings were commissioned, and various manuscripts were created.

Unfortunately, peace didn’t last long. Although Goryeo was able to thwart attacks early on, in the 12th century it suffered internal conflicts, with civilian and military leaders fighting for control. In the 13th century, the peninsula was invaded several times by the Mongolians. Luckily for Goryeo, Mongol power declined rapidly from the middle of the 14th century on, giving the kingdom some respite, though it did not quell the conflicts brewing internally. At the same time, Japanese pirates started becoming more sophisticated in their military tactics. General Yi Seong-gye was sent to fight both these pirates and the Mongols, and his victories helped him consolidate power. He forced the Goryeo king to abdicate and named himself King Taejo ("Great Progenitor"), the first emperor of the Joseon Dynasty.

JOSEON DYNASTY

When the Joseon Dynasty (1392–1910) was founded, King Taejo created a Confucian form of government that promoted loyalty to the country and respect for parents and ancestors, and in 1394 he moved the capital to what is now Seoul. His family, the Yis, ruled what was to become one of the world’s longest-running monarchies.

Again, Korea flourished both artistically and culturally, and major advances in science, technology, literature, and the arts were made. One of the most celebrated emperors of the time was King Sejong, who took reign in 1418. He gathered a team of scholars to create Korea’s first written language, Hangeul. From 1592 to 1598, Korea was attacked relentlessly by Japanese aggressors during what is called the Imjin Waeran and is sometimes referred to as the Hideyoshi Invasions. Successive attacks by its eastern neighbor and Qing China from the north led to the country’s increasingly harsh isolationist policy. By the time Admiral Yi Sun-shin and his fleet of iron-clad ships had fended off the Japanese for good, Korea had shut itself off completely from the rest of the world. It became known as the Hermit Kingdom, and it managed to remain relatively untouched by outsiders until the 1800s.

JAPANESE OCCUPATION

In the 19th century, Korea again became the focus of its imperialist neighbors, China, Russia, and Japan. By 1910, Japan, which had been exerting more and more control over Korea’s destiny, officially annexed the country, bringing an end to the Joseon Dynasty. The Japanese tried to squelch Korean culture, not allowing people to speak their own language, and attempted to obliterate Korean history.

When King Gojong, the last of the Joseon rulers, died, anti-Japanese rallies took place throughout the country. Most notably on March 1, 1919, a declaration of independence was read in Seoul as an estimated two million people took part in rallies. The protests were violently suppressed, and thousands of Koreans were killed or imprisoned. But independence-minded Koreans were not deterred, and anti-Japanese rallies continued until a student uprising in November of 1929 led to increased military rule. Freedom of expression and freedom of the press were severely curbed by Japanese rule.

A Korean government in exile was set up in Shanghai and it coordinated the struggle against Japan. On December 9, 1941, after the attack on Pearl Harbor, the exiled Korean government declared war on Japan. On August 15, 1945, Japan surrendered to the Allied forces, ending 35 years of Japanese occupation. Ten days later Korea became one of the earliest victims of the Cold War: It was divided in half, with the United States taking control of surrendering Japanese soldiers south of the 38th Parallel, while the Soviet Union took control of the areas north. The division was meant to be temporary, until the U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R., and China could come to an agreed-upon trusteeship of the country.

THE KOREAN WAR

A conference was convened in Moscow in December 1945 to discuss the future of Korea. A 5-year trusteeship was discussed and the Soviet-American commission met a few times in Seoul, just as the chill of the Cold War began to set in. In 1947, the United Nations called for the election of a unity government, but the North Korean regime, dominated by the Soviet Union, refused to participate, and two countries were formally established in 1948.

But on June 25, 1950, North Korea, aided by the communist People’s Republic of China and the Soviet Union, invaded the South. The South resisted with help from United Nations troops, most of whom were American. Fighting raged for 3 years, causing much damage and destruction. The war has never officially ended, but the fighting stopped with the signing of a cease-fire on July 27, 1953.

3 SOUTH KOREA’S ART & CULTURE

CULTURE
Centuries-old Confucian principles still govern the daily lives of Korean people. Among those ideals are a dedication to hard work and a devotion to family and society. Although Koreans use the Gregorian calendar like the West, they also keep a lunar calendar, with its ties to the land and its awareness of the changing of the seasons, values long ingrained in this traditionally agricultural society. The dates of many holidays and festivals are based on the lunar calendar, so be sure to double-check when you’re planning your visit.

Another part of Confucianism deeply ingrained in Korean culture is the patriarchal system. Fathers are the responsible members of the family and elders are honored. Outside of the traditional jesa (ancestral honoring ceremony), these ideals are practiced in daily life. At the dinner table the eldest person sits first and no one else can begin until he or she has taken the first bite. Elders are always addressed with an honorific—no one would call older people by their first names—and it is considered polite to bow to them in greeting.

ARTS
Ceramics
The earliest form of art found on the Korean Peninsula is pottery. Pottery shards from the Neolithic era are prevalent. By the time of the Three Kingdoms, ceramics were in common use in everyday life. But it was during the Unified Shilla period that the pottery began taking on interesting shapes and decorative patterns.

In the Goryeo period, ceramics culture evolved, with the creation of cheongja (celadon) pottery. In the Joseon era, the white ceramics of baekja and buncheong-sagi were developed. Unusually, Joseon ceramics were simpler in design than those from the Goryeo period. Of course, the tradition of Korean ceramics continues today.

Painting
The earliest-known Korean paintings are murals found on the walls of tombs from the Three Kingdoms period (although painted baskets were found in the area of the ancient Lelang kingdom around 108 B.C.). The ones from Goguryeo were more dynamic and rhythmic, while those of Baekje were refined and elegant. Those from Shilla were meticulous. Unfortunately, only one example survived from the Unified Shilla period.

During the Goryeo period, painting flourished with the heavy influence of Buddhism, as shown in murals in temples and religious scroll paintings. No examples of secular paintings remain from this time, but writings talk about them and Koreans often traveled to China to buy paintings.

The rise of Confucianism during the Joseon period had a profound effect on Buddhist painting, and it has not enjoyed such artistic prominence since the Goryeo time. Paintings during this time were influenced by works of Chinese scholar-artists. The 17th century saw less effect of China on Korea, due to successive invasions from the Japanese and Manchus, but it was during the 18th century that Korean painting finally came to its own. Examples of this are the development of the chingyong sansu (“real landscape”) style and depictions of everyday life.
During the Japanese occupation, Korean painting suffered, but the introduction of modern Western painting styles influenced Korean artists. After World War II, an interest in both Western and traditional styles grew rapidly and today both continue to flourish.

Sculpture

The oldest known sculptures in Korea are some rock carvings on a riverside cliff, Ban-gudae, in Gyeongsangbuk-do. Smaller sculptures were made of bronze, earthenware, and clay during the Bronze Age. The art form, however, did not gain prominence until the introduction of Buddhism during the Three Kingdoms period. Buddhist images and pagodas became a main form for sculptors during this time. Buddhas from Goguryeo had long faces on mostly shaven heads and were characteristic of the more rough style of the kingdom. Baekje Buddhas had more human features and stately but relaxed bodies with more volume under the robe. Early Shilla sculptures showed influences of Sui and Tang China, with round faces and realistically depicted robes.

Buddhist sculpture continued to be popular during the Goryeo period. A large number of pagodas and Buddhas were created with more Korean facial features, but stiffer bodies. Of course, Buddhist sculpture suffered during the Joseon period and declined even more under Japanese rule, when sculptors just began imitating Western styles. Modern Korean sculpture came to its own in the 1960s. Contemporary Korean sculpture continues to develop today.

ARCHITECTURE

Several architectural remains exist from Neolithic culture on the peninsula. Dolmens, primitive tombs of important people from ancient times, are found all over the southern areas of Korea. Other ancient structures of interest are the royal tombs from the Baekje and Shilla eras. One interesting thing of note is that evidence of ondol, the uniquely Korean system of under-floor heating, can be found in primitive ruins.

In general, historical Korean architecture can be divided into two broad styles—one used for palaces and temples and the other for houses of common people.

The natural environment was always an important element of Korean architecture. When choosing a site for building, Koreans took into consideration the natural environment. An ideal site had appropriate views of the mountains and water and aligned with traditional principles of geomancy.

The ideal hanok (traditional house), for instance, is built with the mountains to the back and a river in the front. The homes were built with ondol underneath for the cold winters and a wide daecheong (front porch) for keeping the house cool during the hot summers. In the colder, northern areas, homes were built in a closed square to retain better heat, while homes in the central region were generally L-shaped. Houses in the southern region are built in an open L-shape.

Traditional homes of upper-class people, or yangban, took into consideration Confucian ideas, with the age and gender of the residents being taken into consideration. Males older than 7 slept in the sarangebae, while women and children (and sometimes married couples) slept in the anchae, which was a place in the inner part of the home to restrict the movement of women. The servants slept in the haengnang and the ancestors were honored in the sadang. The buildings had tiled roofs and were often called giwajib. The entire complex was housed within stone walls with a large main gate/front door.

Lower-class homes had a much simpler structure of a large main room, a kitchen, Buddhism continued its popularity as the state religion throughout the Goryeo period. However, as the Joseon Dynasty came into power on the peninsula, Neo-Confucian ideology overtook the Buddhist faith. Monks fled major towns and found enclaves in hidden mountain temples. Only after warrior monks helped defend against the Japanese Hideyoshi invasion did the government end its persecution against Buddhists. However, the religion remained subdued until the end of the Joseon period, when it gained more strength during the Japanese occupation.

Today many factions of Buddhism exist in Korea since Buddhism is not a centralized religion. Popular are Seon (which became Zen in Japan) Buddhism; Taego, a modern revival of Cheontae; and the more contemporary Won Buddhism. It’s still a bit odd in modern society to see a monk in his gray robes talking on a cellphone, but within the different factions some monks are allowed to marry and have worldly goods. About 45% of the Korean population is Buddhist.

Confucianism, although not a religion, has had the greatest influence on Korean culture. It was an important part of government systems starting from the 7th century and became the official system of belief in the 14th century, during the Joseon Dynasty. Its philosophical systems are still part of the undercurrent of Korean society.

Christianity came to the peninsula when Roman Catholic missionaries arrived in 1794 (although Jesuit writings were brought into Korea more than a century prior). Mostly because Catholic converts refused to perform Confucian ancestral rites, the government prohibited Christianity. Some early converts were executed during the early 19th century, but anti-Christian laws were not strictly enforced. By the 1860s, there were thousands of Roman Catholics in the country, which caused the government to start their persecution. Subsequently, thousands of Catholics were killed.

In the 1880s, Protestant missionaries and more Catholic priests came to Korea, converting a large number of the population. During the Japanese occupation, Christianity has now become the majority religion in the country.

BOOKS

Although classic texts and popular English-language literature are often translated into Korean, the reverse is not true. Very few Korean books are translated into English. However, the newer generations of Korean immigrants, foreign-born Koreans, and non-Koreans are writing interesting books about the culture.

FILMS

Since the late ’90s, South Korean films have been gaining international recognition and winning prizes at festivals worldwide. Though not comprehensive by any means, the following is a list of films I found notable in the past decade or so.

Secret Sunshine (Milyang; 2007) is Lee Chang-dong’s film about a woman trying to start a new life in a small town, Milyang (hence the name). The performance by Jeon Do-yeon won her the best actress prize at Cannes, but her co-star, that swept through the rest of Asia in the early 2000s.

There are literally hundreds of dramas to choose from, so it’s difficult to recommend titles. The most popular ones from the past few years have been My Girl, Princess Hours, Autumn in My Heart, and My Lovely Sam-soon. Also, historic dramas, like The Legend (aka Four Gods, starring Bae Yong-joon of Winter Sonata fame and the talented actress Moon So-ri from Oasis), although fictionalized, are a great way to learn more about Korea’s colorful history. You can even visit some of the sets built specifically for productions. I’ve included some throughout the book.

YesAsia (www.yesasia.com) is an excellent online source for Korean dramas with English subtitles.

MUSIC

You may have heard of the KPop sensation Rain (real name Jeong Ji-hoon) or seen him in such films as Speed Racer or Ninja Assassin. Although he may be the most internationally famous, there are plenty of other KPop groups popular in South Korea. Of these, female vocalist Boa is one of the few who has been able to make a crossover album in English. Still, Korean pop singers and performers quickly rise and fall. Kpopmusic.com is a good source for checking out the latest hits and bands.

Despite the temporary nature of today’s pop music in South Korea, the country’s musical roots go back centuries, back to its shamanistic roots. Korea’s traditional music grew from some outside influences (for example, Buddhism), but has its own origins. Special court music and ensembles were performed for royalty and aristocrats. Dating back to the beginning of the Joseon Dynasty, it’s very rare to be able to catch a court music performance these days, aside from special events put on by the National Center for Korean Traditional Performing Arts.

On the other end of the spectrum were the folk musicians, who traveled from... town to town putting on impromptu concerts for commoners. The villagers would throw the roving musician a few coins or feed them in return for the entertainment.

Pungmul is a type of folk music tradition that grew from shamanistic rituals and Korea’s agricultural society. A pungmul performance is led by drumming, but includes wind instruments and well as dancers. Because it’s a kinetic, colorful performance, a recording of pungmul music rarely does it justice. However, samul nori, which also has its roots in nogaek (farmer's music), makes use of four of the drums found in pungmul. Each drum represents various elements of weather—rain, wind, clouds, and thunder. It’s a good entry into Korean traditional music, especially for those who like percussion.

Pansori is one of the most famous types of traditional performance. Sometimes called the Korean “blues” (not because of the style but more of the sadness in the music), pansori is a long, drawn-out performance by one singer and one accompanying drummer. The lyricist tells a narrative song, inviting audience participation and joke telling along the way.

Sanjo (which translates literally as “scattered melodies”) is one of the most advanced forms of Korean music. It describes a solo performance on a traditional instrument in which the performer begins slowly, but builds up to a faster, more spontaneous tempo, adding improvisations and showing off his or her skills with each successive movement. In an entirely instrumental performance, the rhythms shift as the performance progresses. There are sanjo for piri (bamboo oboe), daegeum (bamboo flute), haegeum (two-string bowed instrument), ajaeng (bowed zither), geomungo (six-stringed zither), and the gayageum (12-string zither).

One of my favorite modern gayageum masters was Hwang Byungki (www.bkhwang.com), who played both traditional and original compositions on the Korean zither. His album The Labyrinth (2003) contains some of the most experimental of his works, while Spring Snow (2001) is a more meditative and minimal presentation.

A celebrated performer of the daegeum is Yi Saeng-gang (www.leesaengkang.com). His album Daegeum Sori (2007) is an excellent introduction to the sounds of the bamboo flute, but his Sound of Memory Vol. 2 is a more haunting study of the daegeum.

5 EATING & DRINKING IN SOUTH KOREA

Korean cuisine encompasses foods from the land and the sea. You can enjoy a simple bowl of noodles, a 21-dish royal dinner, or anything in between. From a humble vegetarian meal at a Buddhist temple to elaborate banquets in Seoul’s most expensive restaurants, South Korea has something for even the pickiest of eaters.

Koreans enjoy dishes with bold flavors, such as chili peppers and garlic, but usually traditionally royal cuisine and temple food is not spicy. Each town in the country is famous for a certain dish, a regional specialty, seafood, or a particular fruit or vegetable that is grown in the area.

THE KOREAN TABLE

A Korean meal usually is made with balance in mind—hot and cool, spicy and mild, yin and yang. At the core of every meal is bap (rice), unless the meal is noodle- or porridge-based. Koreans don’t distinguish among breakfast, lunch, or dinner, so it’s not unusual to eat rice three times a day.

In addition to individual bowls of rice, you may get a single serving of soup. Hot pots (jjigae or jungol), which are thicker and saltier, are set in the middle of the table for everyone to share. Because beverages are order galbi (ribs) or other meat you cook yourself on a tabletop grill, your rice will arrive last so that you don’t fill yourself up too fast. When you have hwae (raw fish), you will be brought a starter, the fresh fish (quite often the fish is netted for you fresh from a tank), and then a mae-un-tabng (spicy hot pot) made from whatever is left of your fish. Also, there is no such thing as dessert in Korean tradition; however, an after-dinner drink of hot tea or coffee is generally served with whatever fruit is in season.

Korean meals were traditionally served on low tables with family members sitting on floor cushions. Some restaurants still adhere to this older custom, but others offer regular Western-style dining tables. Although certain traditions have gone by the wayside, mealtime etiquette still applies, especially for formal meals. For starters, you should always wait for the eldest to eat his or her first bite, unless you are the guest of honor—if you are, then everyone will be waiting for you to take your first bite before digging in. Koreans usually eat their rice with a spoon, not with chopsticks. Unlike in other Asian countries, rice bowls and soup bowls are not picked up from the table. Completely taboo at the dining table is blowing your nose.

What Is Kimchi?

Kimchi is a spicy dish, the most popular of which is made from fermented cabbage, and it is a source of national pride for South Koreans. When hungry, any Korean would swear that a bowl of rice and some kimchi are all that’s needed to complete a meal. The most popular type is the traditional version made from napa cabbages, called baechu kimchi. Not only is kimchi eaten as a side dish, but it is also used as an ingredient in other dishes. For instance, there is kimchi bokkeum bap (fried rice with kimchi), kimchi jjigae (a hot pot of kimchi, meat, tofu, and vegetables), kimchi mandu (kimchi dumplings), kimchi buchingae (kimchi flatcakes), kimchi ramen (kimchi with noodles)—the list is endless. Koreans love their kimchi so much that many homes even have separate, specially calibrated refrigerators designated just to keep kimchi fresh. When taking a photo, Koreans say “kimchi” instead of saying “cheese.” If you like spicy, salty food, be adventurous and try some kimchi. You’ll have over 167 varieties to choose from!
Sweet Goldfish & Silkworm Casings: Street Food

Wandering around the streets of South Korea, you can eat your fill without setting foot in a restaurant. You can choose from a wide variety of venues and dishes—everything from little old ladies roasting chestnuts on the street corners (only in the winter) to pojang macha (covered tents), where you can get a beer or soju (rice or sweet potato “vodka”), too. Typical fare includes the following:

- Dduk bokgi—seasoned rice cake sticks that are spicy, a little sweet, and a lot tasty
- Boong-uh bbang—goldfish “cookies” filled with sweet red-bean paste (also available round with a flower print or in other shapes)
- Ho-ddeok—flat, fried dough rounds filled with sugar
- Soondeh—Korean blood sausage
- Gimbap—rice and other things rolled in seaweed (also available in miniversions)
- Yut—hard taffy usually made from pumpkin (may be rough on your fillings!)
- Bbundaegi—boiled silkworm casings, a toasty treat for the adventurous
- Sola—tiny conch shells

Inappropriate. During informal meals, however, these rules are often broken. For a list of popular menu items in Korean and English, see section 3 in chapter 13.
Planning Your Trip to South Korea

Outside of Seoul, South Korea is a land little known to foreign travelers. Yet with its mountainous terrain, expansive beaches, modern cities, and traditional temples, it has much to offer first-time and repeat visitors alike. This chapter details everything you need to know to make your trip to South Korea easier, from how to get there and advice on accommodations to tips on money, safety, and special festivals.

For additional help in planning your trip and for more on-the-ground resources in South Korea, turn to “Fast Facts,” on p. 430.

1 WHEN TO GO

South Korea has four distinct seasons, and the best times to visit are in the spring and fall, since summers are hot and wet and winters are dry and very cold—though the mountainous terrain makes for great skiing. More detailed weather information is given below, but a far bigger factor in your planning should be avoiding major Korean holidays. Domestic tourists take to the roads in the tens of thousands, crowding all forms of transportation, filling hotels, and making it difficult to visit popular attractions. By contrast, Seoul empties out and traffic is almost nonexistent.

PEAK TRAVEL TIMES

Seol (Lunar New Year) Although January 1 is also celebrated in South Korea, Seol (also known as Seollal) is a bigger holiday. It can be difficult for tourists to figure out when the Lunar New Year will fall, as Westerners rely on a solar calendar. The solar calendar equivalents of the Lunar New Year for the next few years are February 3, 2011; January 23, 2012; February 10, 2013. Most Koreans get 3 days off during the holiday and use that time to travel to their hometowns. Others take the opportunity to go on ski holidays or travel abroad. Bus and train tickets go on sale 3 months before the holiday and people line up for hours in order to get their passage out of town. Driving is a bad option, since the normal 5- to 6-hour drive from Seoul to Busan, for example, can take up to 14 hours due to ridiculous traffic.

Children’s Day Though not necessarily in prime travel season, May 5 is the day South Koreans celebrate their little ones. Parents dress up their kids and take them to amusement parks, zoos, theaters—pretty much anywhere children love to go. If you want to avoid big crowds, stay away from kiddie hot spots on this day.

Summer Holidays It’s not as insanely busy as the Lunar New Year or Chuseok (see below), but when the kids go on summer break, many families head out of Seoul to vacation on the beaches and in the mountains. Korean children have only about 6 weeks of summer vacation, usually from mid-July to late August, but university students keep trains and buses busy throughout the season. Be sure to book rooms in popular destinations (such as Busan’s beaches, which get super-crowded June–Aug) well in advance.
Spring starts by the end of March, when warm air begins to move north off the Pacific Ocean. Temperatures usually average 51°F (11°C), and rainfall is unpredictable. By the end of May, summer brings a period of warmth and humidity with heavy rainfall that starts in July and lasts until the end of September. Summer temperatures average 77°F (25°C), but often approach 86°F (30°C) in July and August. It’s not the heat; it’s the humidity. South Korea gets about 125cm (49 in.) of rain annually, 60% of which falls during the summer months. In general, the southern and western regions see more rain, with Jeju-do having the highest average rainfall per year. The summer is also typhoon season in South Korea. Although most typhoons lose their strength by the time they make it to the peninsula, some cause flooding, structural damage, and, in extreme cases, even death.

By late September, the cool, dry winds from Siberia change the weather again. Temperatures fall to about 59°F (15°C) and skies generally remain clear and crisp, with very little rainfall. Koreans consider autumn the best season, marked by the most important national holiday, Chuseok, when people visit their ancestral homes and give thanks for the harvest. Trees throughout the country exchange their summer greens for autumn colors.

PUBLIC HOLIDAYS
South Koreans celebrate both holidays from the traditional lunar calendar (dates vary from year to year) and holidays adopted from the Western calendar. National public holidays are New Year’s Day (celebrated Jan 1 and 2), Lunar New Year’s Day (usually in Jan or Feb, and the 2 days following it—see “Peak Travel Times,” above, for exact dates), Independence Movement Day (Mar 1), Arbor Day (Apr 5), Children’s Day (May 5), Buddha’s Birthday/Feast of the Lanterns (the eighth day of the fourth month, usually in Apr or May), Memorial Day (June 5), Constitution Day (July 17), Liberation Day (Aug 15), Foundation Day (Oct 3), Harvest Moon Festival (14th–16th days of the eighth month—see “Peak Travel Times,” above, for exact dates), and Christmas Day (Dec 25).

Banks, schools, post offices, and government departments are all closed on the above dates, as are many museums and attractions. Although not a national holiday, Labor Day is observed on May 1, and banks and many businesses close.

CALENDAR OF EVENTS

With festivals for everything from fireflies to pine mushrooms to swimming in icy-cold water, Koreans will most likely be celebrating something when you visit. Regional festivals are a great way to get a sense of just how varied Korean culture is while experiencing traditional costumes, performances, and music.

For an exhaustive list of events beyond those listed here, check http://events.frommers.com, where you’ll find a searchable, up-to-the-minute roster of what’s happening in cities all over the world.

JANUARY
Seol (Lunar New Year) is still one of the biggest holidays of the year. Koreans get up early, put on their best clothes (usually the traditional hanbok), and bow to their elders. Families celebrate with feasts of dduk guk (rice-cake soup) or mandu guk (dumpling soup), and the palaces in Seoul host special events. See “Peak Travel Times,” above, for dates.

Hwacheon Mountain Trout Festival (☎ 033/441-7575) is a charming festival celebrating the mountain trout (the “Queen of the Valleys”). Thousands of people descend upon this small town in Gangwon-do (see chapter 11) to catch this fish and enjoy a variety of winter sports. Through most of January.

FEBRUARY
Inje Ice Fishing Festival (☎ 033/460-2082) occurs every winter, when Soyang lake freezes over and hundreds of people flock to this mountain village in the inner Seoraksan area (p. 358). Not only will you be able to ice fish, but you also can play ice soccer, go sledding, watch a dog sled competition, and enjoy a meal of freshly caught smelt. Late January through mid-February.

MARCH
Jeongwol Daeboreum Fire Festival celebrates the first full moon of the lunar year. The celebrations involve both livestock—there are duck and pig races—and nods to the island’s history. The festival arose from the island’s ancient practice of burning grazing farms, which served the dual purpose of razing the land for new crops of grass and getting rid of pests. Don’t miss the spectacular fireworks show. February or March on the 15th day of the first lunar month.

Gyeongju Traditional Drink & Rice Cake Festival (☎ 054/748-7721 or 2; www.fgf.or.kr) is held at Hwangseong Park in Gyeongju (p. 251) every March or April (dates vary wildly, so be sure to check ahead of time) and is the perfect place to sample everything from rice cakes to rice wine. You can also try your hand at pounding rice into cakes the old-fashioned way (it requires more upper-body strength than you might think), see traditional folk performers, and enjoy the marketlike atmosphere.

APRIL

Gwangalli Eobang Festival (☎ 051/610-4062, ext. 4) celebrates the arrival of spring and was founded in 2001, when three smaller festivals (the Millak
Live Fish Festival, the Gwangalli Beach Festival, and the Cherry Blossom Festival) were combined. The festivities are kicked off when hundreds of Busan residents parade in masks and costumes. The masks and costumes are a mix of old and new, and represent a traditional play called “Suyeong Yaryu,” which originated from Suyeong-gu (an area in central Busan) and which mocks the yangban (noble class). Other events include the local custom of praying for the safe return of fishermen (with a big catch, of course). At night, you can enjoy the fireworks and the lights of the Jindu-coha, where fishing boats are lit to reenact traditional torchlight fishing.
Early April.

Jeonju International Film Festival
(www.jiff.or.kr) is held in (where else?)
Jeonju (see chapter 8). You won’t catch many blockbusters here—the festival is more focused on short independent films—but you may discover a new star on the rise. Late April to early May.

Hi Seoul Festival (☎ 02/3290-7150; www.hiseoulfest.org) highlights the history and culture of South Korea’s capital. Most of this festival’s events, including everything from classical music to rock music concerts, happen in the downtown area. Don’t miss the spectacular lighted boat parade in the evenings in Yeoui-do. Lasts about a week, usually in early May.

Icheon Ceramic Festival (☎ 031/644-2944, ext. 4. Want to experience the history and craftsmanship of Korean pottery? Then head to Icheon (see chapter 6) for this festival, where you can buy even handmade ceramics from the artists themselves. Late April.

MAY

Boseong Green Tea (Da Hyang) Festival (☎ 061/852-1330; www.boseong. go.kr) is held in South Korea’s most important tea-producing region. This is a great way to enjoy Jeollanam-do (Jeol-lanam province, chapter 8) and to taste some of the finest nokcha (green tea) in the world. You can also try foods made with green tea, try a tea facial, and participate in traditional tea ceremonies.
Early May, in odd-numbered years
(2011, 2013, and so on).

Lotus Lantern Festival (☎ 02/2011-1744, ext. 7; www.llf.or.kr) coincides with Buddha’s Birthday (also known as “The Day the Buddha Came”), and it is not to be missed. Hundreds of thousands of people parade along the Han River with lanterns. The opening ceremony for the parade starts at Dongda-emun Stadium. Other events happen at Jogyesa Temple in Seoul and throughout the country in mid-May.

Gangneung Danoje Festival (http:// english.visitkorea.or.kr/enu/SI/SI_EN_3_2_1.jsp?cid=293063) celebrates Dano (the fifth day of the fifth month of the lunar year) with brewing of sacred wine. Although there are month-long events, the main festivities happen in the 3 to 4 days surrounding Dano. Highlights include the Gwanno mask drama—a pantomime combining Korea’s ancient shamanistic beliefs with traditional dance and mask play that was performed and handed down by government servants during the Joseon Dynasty—and daily shamanistic rituals. The festivities have been deemed an important, intangible cultural property by UNESCO. Late May through June in Gangwon-do.

JUNE

Muju Firefly Festival (☎ 063/322-1330; festival@firefly.or.kr) honors the local ecosystem. This is the only place in South Korea where fireflies are found, and the people of Muju use the insect’s annual appearance as an excuse to celebrate. The festival also includes tae kwon do demonstrations, since Muju is the site of the World Taekwondo Park. Early June in Jeollabuk-do.

JULY

Boryeong Mud Festival (☎ 011/438-4865; www.mudfestival.or.kr) is all about rolling around in the mud. Supposedly very good for your skin, mud from this region is used in cosmetics and massages. Great fun for kids, events include mud wrestling, mud slides, and making mud soap. For 1 week in mid-July in Chungcheongnam-do (see chapter 7).

AUGUST

Busan International Rock Festival (www.rockfestival.co.kr) turns Dadaepo Beach into an open-air concert venue. This free festival attracts over 150,000 fans to see musicians from South Korea and all over the world. Early August.

Muan White Lotus Festival (http://tour.muan.go.kr) is held at Asia’s largest field of the rare white lotus. Other than walking through the gardens, you can take a boat ride to see the blooms up close, enjoy contemporary and traditional performances, and eat a variety of foods made from lotuses. Try the lotus ice cream and the lotus noodles. Mid-August in Muan-geun in Jeollanam-do.

SEPTEMBER

Chuseok (Harvest Festival) is another important traditional holiday and is held on the 15th day of the eighth lunar month. Also called Korean Thanksgiving, this holiday celebrates the bountiful harvest and hopes for another good year to come. Although most Koreans will be traveling to their ancestral homes, festivities are held at the palaces and at the National Folk Museum in Seoul. See “Peak Travel Times” to see dates for the next few years. Usually sometime in September.

OCTOBER

Pusan International Film Festival (PIFF; www.piff.org) is one of the largest showcases for new films in Asia. The festival attracts over 200 films from dozens of different countries (with an emphasis on Asian films, of course). Just to confuse matters, it is held in Busan, which used to be known as Pusan (hence the name of the festival). Usually happening in mid-October.

Jagalchi Festival (☎ 051/243-9363; www.ijagalchi.co.kr) is South Korea’s largest seafood festival. Celebrating the sea, traditional fishing rituals are performed and you can enjoy raw fish and discounts on pretty much everything that’s sold at the Jagalchi Market (p. 342). Mid-October in Busan.

Icheon Rice Cultural Festival (☎ 031/644-4121; www.ricefestival.or.kr) celebrates the agriculture (particularly rice) from the plains of Icheon, which once grew the rice served to royalty. Held at Icheon Seolbong Park; stop in at a neighborhood restaurant for rice and

 ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

PASSPORTS
For information on how to get a passport, go to “Passports” in the “Fast Facts” section on p. 432. The government requires that passports be good for 6 months past your date of arrival, so make sure your passport is up-to-date.

VISAS
A visa is not needed for most visitors staying for 30 days and under.

British, Australian, and New Zealand citizens can visit for up to 90 days without a visa. Canadian citizens can visit for up to 90 days without a visa and can extend their stay for up to 6 months.

U.S. and South African citizens visiting for fewer than 30 days do not require a visa. For trips up to 90 days, Americans need a C-3 short-term visitor visa. For short-term business trips (up to 90 days), you’ll need a C-2 short-term business visa. Both are valid for multiple entries within a 5-year period (or until your passport expires). In order to get the visa, you’ll need to file the application (available for download at www.mofat.go.kr), along with a photo and fee (generally $45 for U.S. citizens, though you should check the website to see if additional fees apply). Business travelers need an additional letter, invoice, or contract showing the nature of their business in South Korea. Submit visa applications by mail or in person to a South Korean embassy or consulate near you. I’ve listed many of those offices below.

3 GETTING THERE & GETTING AROUND

GETTING TO SOUTH KOREA

By Plane

Most international flights into South Korea fly to Seoul’s Incheon Airport (ICN), while the airports in Busan (Gimhae), Jeju, Gwangju, Ulsan, and Daegu serve international destinations mostly in Asia. South Korea has two national airlines, Korean Airlines (www.koreanair.com) and Asiana Airlines (us.flyasiana.com), which sometimes provide cheaper fares than their competition abroad, and usually have better service and food.

Note that when you leave the country from Seoul there’s a departure tax, currently ₩17,000, which may or may not be included in your airfare price. Transit passengers and infants 1 and under are exempt. There is also a ₩3,000 airport tax for domestic flights within South Korea.

Tip: Try to book a flight that arrives before 10pm, since buses and subways stop running at midnight. Your only choice of transportation into the city will be via taxi, which can cost you ₩60,000 to ₩90,000 plus an additional ₩7,100 toll charge.

FROM NORTH AMERICA

Flights from North America to Seoul are usually cheaper from western cities such as Vancouver, Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. North American airlines that fly to Seoul include Air Canada (www.aircanada.com), with nonstop flights from Vancouver and Toronto; Northwest Airlines (www.nwa.com), with nonstops to Seoul from Seattle and Chicago and several flights from other cities via Tokyo or Osaka; United Airlines (www.united.
from Sydney to Seoul. The flight takes about 10½ hours.

Arriving at the Airport

More than likely you will be arriving at Seoul’s Incheon International Airport (☎ 032/1577-2600), which is 52km (32 miles) west of Seoul on Yeongjong Island. Arrivals are on the first floor, where you will find global ATMs; foreign currency exchanges (daily 6am–10pm); the Incheon Tourist Information Center (daily 7am–10pm; ☎ 032/743-0011); the KTO Tourist Information Center (daily 7am–10pm; ☎ 1330); and the Hotel Information Center (daily 9am–10pm; ☎ 032/743-2570), a private company that offers some discounts to midrange and high-end hotels. The second floor has a few domestic flights to and from Jeju-do and Busan, and an Internet cafe lounge (+3,000 per hour; daily 8am–7:30pm; ☎ 032/743-7427).

Getting into Seoul from the Airport

Special airport buses (called “limousine buses”) run daily every 10 to 30 minutes, starting around 5:30am until 10pm. A trip to downtown Seoul takes around 90 minutes (longer during high-traffic times). Limousine buses cost about ₩8,000, while KAL deluxe limousine buses cost ₩12,000 and stop at 20 of the major hotels in Seoul. Regular taxis charge around ₩40,000 to ₩60,000 to downtown Seoul. Deluxe taxis (they are black) charge around ₩63,000 to ₩90,000. Deluxe taxis are especially useful for business travelers, since the drivers can speak basic English, have free phone service, take credit cards, and will offer a receipt. Taxi fares can be considerably more during high-traffic times, since their fares are based on distance and time. Also, your taxi driver may make you pay the ₩7,100 toll charge for the expressway.

FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM

Flights to South Korea from the U.K. originate from London and fly to Seoul, taking about 11 hours. KLM Royal Dutch Airlines (www.klm.com), which sometimes stops in Amsterdam, Korean Airlines, and Asiana Airlines fly nonstop. Several other providers fly with at least one stopover, including British Airways (www.ba.com) via Tokyo or Hong Kong, Air France (www.airfrance.com) via Paris, Cathay Pacific via Hong Kong, Singapore Airlines via Singapore, Lufthansa (www.lufthansa.com) via Frankfurt, China Eastern Airlines (www.chinaeastern.co.uk) via Shanghai, Aeroflot Russian Airlines (www.aeroflot.com) via Moscow, Emirates (www.emirates.com) via Dubai, and Qatar Airways (www.qatarairways.com) via Doha.

Malaysia Airlines (www.malaysiaairlines.com) and Singapore Airlines (www.singaporeair.com) fly from Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, and Brisbane; Air China (www.airchina.com) from Sydney; Korean Air from Brisbane, Sydney, and Auckland to Seoul and Busan; and Asiana Airlines from Sydney to Seoul. The flight takes about 10½ hours.

The Airport Railroad (AREX) connects Incheon to Gimpo Airport. From there you can take the subway to anywhere in the city. The AREX from Incheon Airport to Seoul Station will be running in 2010.

By Car
You can't get into South Korea by car (since it's surrounded on three sides by water and on the top by the DMZ and North Korea). Once you're in the country, however, you can get around easily by car. Although I wouldn't recommend driving in the large cities, like Seoul and Busan, the rest of the country is easily traversed by car.

See the “By Car” section under “Getting Around,” below, for additional details.

By Train
South Korea has an extensive domestic rail system operated by the Korean National Railroad (02/1544-7788; www.korail.go.kr). Tickets can be purchased up to a month in advance at many travel agents and up to an hour before departure at train stations.

There are three types of trains—the KTX (Korea Train Express; http://ktx.korail.go.kr/eng) bullet train, which runs at speeds up to 300kmph (186 mph); the express Saemaeul; and the Mugunghwa trains. You can purchase tickets up to 2 months in advance or as close as an hour before departure. Tickets are available online, at most travel agents in Seoul, or at ticket counters and automatic ticket machines at the station.

Visitors can buy a voucher for a KR Pass in their home country and exchange them in Seoul for passes for unlimited travel on the railways. The passes are not available for purchase in South Korea, so be sure to get it at least 3 days in advance if you're planning on extensive train travel. The KR Passes are good for rides during consecutive days in increments of 3 ($76/£38), 5 ($115/£58), 7 ($145/£73), and 10 ($166/£83) days. A Saver Pass can be purchased for two to five people traveling together at a 10% discount. Those 24 and under can get a Youth Pass for 20% less. Check the Korean Railroad website (www.korail.go.kr) for more info or contact STA Travel (800/777-0112 or 02/733-9494 in Seoul; www.statravelgroup.com). In Seoul, STA Pass vouchers can be exchanged for train tickets at Kises Tour, located in the YMCA Building, Suite 505, Jongno 2-ga. Take Seoul subway line 1 to Jonggak Station, exit 3 (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat 9am–3pm).

By Boat
There are ferry connections from South Korea to domestic destinations and cities in Japan and China. At the Incheon International Ferry Terminal, 1-2 Hang7-dong, Jung-gu, Incheon (032/888-0116), there are boats to and from Dandong (Dandong Ferry; 02/713-5522; www.dandongferry.co.kr), Tianjin (Jincheon Ferry; 02/517-8671; www.da-atour.co.kr; takes 25 hr.), Qingdao (Weidong Ferry; 02/3271-6753; www.weidong.com; 18 hr.), Weihai (also Weidong Ferry; 14 hr.), Dalian (Da-In Ferry; 02/3218-6550; www.dainferry.co.kr; 17 hr.), and Yantai (Hanjung Ferry; 02/360-6900; www.hanjoongferry.co.kr; 16 hr.) in China. The ships go only two or three times per week to each destination and schedules change, so be sure to confirm actual departure times and days.

From Busan Port, 15-3 Jung-ang 4-dong, Jung-gu, Busan (051/999-3000; www.busanferry.com or http://busanpa.com), the most frequent boats travel daily to Shimoseki (Bugwan Ferry; 02/738-0055) and three times a week (usually Mon, Wed, and Fri) to Hakata, Japan (Korea Marine Express; 02/730-8666).

From the Mokpo Ferry Terminal (061-240-6060, ext. 1) you can take a boat to Shanghai on Mondays and Fridays.
GETTING AROUND

By Plane

There are two large national airlines that operate domestic flights, Korean Airlines (☎ 02/1588-2001; www.koreanair.com) and Asiana Airlines (☎ 02/1588-8000; http://us.flyasiana.com). The majority of domestic flights are serviced out of Seoul’s Gimpo Airport, which is reachable by Seoul subway or to and from Incheon Airport via the high-speed AREX train. Other international airports include Busan’s Gimhae, Jeju International Airport, Daegu, Gwangju, Cheongju, and Yangyang. Domestic airports include those in Yeosu, Sacheon, Ulsan, Pohang, Gunan, and Wonju.

Budget airlines offer flights to and from Jeju-do and the mainland. Jeju Air (☎ 02/1599-1500; www.jejuair.net) provides flights from Gimpo and Busan’s Gimhae airports to and from Jeju-do. Jin Air (☎ 02/3660-6000; www.jinair.com) has only flights to and from Gimpo and Jeju-do.

By Car

Driving around Seoul (and Busan, too) can be a hair-raising experience and is not recommended. However, driving in the rest of South Korea is easier, although not the most economical way to get around. Car rentals start at around W70,000 per day. Prices are cheaper if you rent multiple days, of course. You have to be at least 21 years old and have an International Driving Permit (IDP), which you can get in your home country before you leave. Most rental agencies will ask that you show your regular driver’s permit as well. In the U.S. only two authorized organizations provide IDPs—the American Automobile Association (www.aaa.com) and American Automotive Touring Alliance (through the National Automobile Club) (☎ 800/622-7070; www.thenac.com). The AAA charges $15 for an IDP, which you can get at any of their offices or by mail.

The best place to rent a car in advance is online from the KTO website (http://english.tour2korea.com) or in person at the Incheon Airport. Check prices at South Korea’s largest car-rental company, Kumho-Hertz (☎ 02/155-1230; www.kumhorent.com), or Avis (www.avis.co.kr).

A safer option for Seoul is to rent both a car and a driver, which cost about W75,000 for 3 hours and W142,000 for 10 hours. Your hotel concierge should be able to help you. Some high-end hotels also have their own limousine service.

The minimum driving age is 18 for cars and 16 for motorcycles.

Unfortunately, there are no detailed driving maps in English, though the KTO will provide a country map showing major highways and roads. Luckily, most highways and major cities have street signs in both Korean and English.

South Korean cities are connected via an extensive network of toll expressways run by the Korea Expressway Corporation. There are very few exits (which means, if you missed an exit for your town, you may have to wait for the next town to get off the highway). If you plan on doing extensive driving around the country, we recommend getting a Hi-pass, an electronic toll pay system, available at highway business offices, major highway rest stops, many gas stations, and some shopping malls. The Hi-pass not only allows you to pass through tollbooths without having to stop, but also provides a 5% to 50% discount depending on where and when you travel. You can load the card with amounts ranging from W10,000 to W480,000, which can be topped up at any bank. There is an initial W5,000 deposit. Make sure you get a rental car with an OnBoard Unit (OBU) to be able to use your Hi-pass. OBUs are available where Hi-passes are sold as well as some banks, including Hana Bank, Shinhan Bank, and the Industrial Bank of Korea, but not worth the W128,000 for one, if you’re on a short trip.
If you're planning on extensive rail travel in the country, I recommend getting a voucher for a KR Pass in your home country before you leave, since these passes are not available for purchase in South Korea. Once you arrive, you'll need to exchange the voucher in Seoul for the actual pass, which is good for unlimited travel on the railways. The KR Passes are good for rides during consecutive days in increments of 3 ($76/£38), 5 ($115/£58), 7 ($145/£73), and 10 ($166/£83) days. A Saver Pass can be purchased for two to five people traveling together at a 10% discount. Those 24 and under can get a Youth Pass for 20% less. Check the Korean Railroad website (www.korail.go.kr) for more info or contact STA Travel (800/777-0112 or 02/733-9494 in Seoul; www.statravelgroup.com). In Seoul, STA Pass vouchers can be exchanged for train tickets at Kises Tour, located in the YMCA Building, Suite 505, Jongno 2-ga. Take Seoul subway line 1 to Jonggak Station, exit 3 (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat 9am–3pm). Be sure to purchase the pass at least 5 days in advance of travel.

There are three types of trains in South Korea, the fastest of which is the bullet train, the KTX. The KTX (Korea Train Express; http://ktx.korail.go.kr/eng) has two lines with stops in major cities. The Gyeongbu line goes to Busan (Seoul to Busan tickets are $44,800) in under 3 hours via Daejeon and the Honam line, which travels through west Daejeon, and ends at Gwangju ($33,300 from Seoul) or Mokpo ($37,200 from Seoul). You can also buy individual tickets for the cheaper Saemaeul (first-class) or Mugung-hwa (second-class) trains.

By Train
Traveling by train can be the most comfortable way to get around the larger cities.

The speed limit is generally 60kmph (37 mph) on regular roads, 80 to 100kmph (50 to 62 mph) on expressways, and 30kmph (19 mph) near schools and hospitals. Be sure to follow posted speed limits, even though other drivers may not, since Korean police can be harsher to foreigners. Watch your speed especially on expressways, which are littered with speed cameras. Although you won't see any traffic cops, you may get an unfortunate surprise in the mail after your speeding vacation.

Painted blue lines (usually on the left side of the road) are bus lanes. Buses are given priority in these lanes during rush hours (weekdays 7am–9pm, 7am–3pm on Sat). Bus lanes on expressways are in effect 9am to 11pm daily.

Always fasten your seatbelt or risk the chance of a $30,000 fine. One exception to this rule is that you don't have to wear a seatbelt in the back seat of a taxi (buckle up in the front seat, however). It’s illegal to drive while talking on a cellphone unless it’s a hands-free set.

Gas and LPG (diesel) stations are readily available throughout the country, but prices are by the liter and can be expensive for long-distance driving. At the time of writing this book, gas was $1,400 to $1,900 per liter.

Outside of holiday times, driving to Chuncheon in Gangwon-do takes about 2 to 3 hours from Seoul, Cheongju in Chungcheongbuk-do takes about 3 hours, Daegu takes 2 to 3 hours, Gyeongju takes about 5 hours, and Busan takes about 6 hours. Travel to Suwon is only about an hour and a half, to Daejeon in Chungcheongnam-do about 2 hours, Jeonju 4 hours, and about 4 hours to Gwangju. Jeju-do can accessed only by boat or plane. (Although you can take your car to the island by ferry for a ridiculously high fee, it’s best to rent a car when you get to the island.).
One of the most popular lines is the Jung-anseon, which runs southeast from Seoul’s Cheongnyangni Station to Busan, stopping at Wonju, Jecheon, Danyang, Pung-gi, Yeongju, Andong, Yeongcheon, Gyeongju, and Ulsan along the way. Another way to get to Busan by train from Seoul is via the Gyeongbuseon (the Gyeongbu Line), which has stops in some western cities like Cheonan, Jochiwon, and Daejeon, before curving east toward Gimcheon, Dongdaegu, Samrangjin, and Gupo before terminating at Busan.

From Daejeon, the Honamseon goes all the way to Mokpo, with stops at Seodaeyeon, Nonan, Ik Sans, Jeongup, and Songjeong-li along the way. From Ik Sans, the Jeollaseon runs to Jeonju, Namwon, Gurye, and Suncheon with a terminus at Yeosu. From Songjeong-li, a line runs east through Gwangju, Suncheon, Jinju, and Masan and ends at Samrangjin, which connects to the Gyeongbu line.

From Cheonan, the short Janghang line runs out to Janghang. From Seoul’s Cheongnyangni, the even shorter Gyeongchun line provides trains to Chuncheon. An east-west route connects Jochiwon to Taebaek, crossing the Jung-ang line at Jecheon with a stop at Jeungsan. The Taebaek line connects Taebaek to Gimcheon, passing through Mungyeong and Yeongju on the Jungang line. A short rail line connects Dongdaegu and Yeongcheon, as well.

See chapter 5 for details and directions to various train stations in Seoul.

By Bus
Buses are the least expensive way to get around South Korea and even the smallest of towns will have bus service, albeit infrequent. Express buses to major stations originate from either the Seoul Express Bus Terminal, 19-4 Banpo-dong, Seocho-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/535-4151), or the Central City Terminal, 19-4 Banpo-dong, Seocho-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/6282-0114), next door. To get to smaller stations, generally those outside the larger cities, you can change buses or take a direct bus from one of Seoul’s smaller bus stations. You can contact the Korean Express Bus Lines Association (☎ 02/536-6460, ext. 2, 24 hr.; www.exterminal.co.kr) for schedules and other info.

Express buses to the Gyeongsang area (Gyubu Line), Chungcheong area (Guma line), and Gangwon-do (Yeongdong Line) start from the Seoul Express Bus Terminal. Buses on the Honam Line that go to Jeolla-do to the south and the Namhaseon (southern coastal line) start from the Central City Terminal.

Buses from the DongSeoul Bus Terminal, 546-1 Guui-dong, Gwangjin-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/446-8000), go primarily north and east from Seoul. You can catch a bus to Andong, Gangneung, Sokcho, and Wonju from here. Also, buses from this terminal take the scenic (but longer) route to Seoraksan National Park in Gangwon-do.

The Nambu Bus Terminal, 1446-1 Seocho-dong, Seocho-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/521-8550), services mostly the southern region. Popular destinations from this station include Osan, Pyongtaek, and Songnisan National Park.

Buses from the Sangbong Bus Terminal, 83-1 Sangbong-dong, Jungnang-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/435-2122, ext. 8), go generally east and north. You can get to Chuncheon and Sokcho from this station.

Most cities and large towns within South Korea have their own bus terminals in the center of town. Goseok buses travel long distances and make few, if any, stops between cities. Shiwe buses operate between shorter distances and make more frequent stops.

Even the smallest of towns will have some sort of bus service operated by the local government. Bus drivers generally don’t speak English, so it’s best to know the Korean name of your destination. Fares vary, but usually range from W900 to W1,100 per trip, so be sure to carry small bills and change for frequent bus trips. Cities like Seoul and Busan have

Major ferry terminals are located in Busan (051/660-0256), Incheon (032/880-7530), Jeju-do (064/720-8500), Mokpo (061/240-6011), Yeosu (061/663-0117), Tongyeong (055/642-0116), Geoje (051/660-0256), and Pohang (054/242-5111). Busan, Incheon, Mokpo, and Donghae ferry terminals offer international travel while the other ferry terminals are dedicated to domestic destinations, usually nearby islands off the coasts. See the Jeju-do chapter for overnight ferry information to and from Busan.

By Bicycle

South Korea is not a country easily explored solely on two wheels, but there are some excellent biking opportunities, especially for mountain bikers. Biking on city streets can be extremely dangerous because there are no dedicated bicycle lanes and bus, taxi drivers, and truck drivers regard traffic rules more as suggestions than laws. In Seoul, however, the mayor introduced a bike program in late 2009 in which they will create a citywide bike-rental system and expand trails, starting from those in Han River Park and expanding to Namsan and the city center. The pilot program started in Yeouido and Sangam Digital Media City. Bike rentals along the Han River, which has miles and miles of trails on both sides, costs $3,000 per hour ($6,000 for tandems). Unmanned bike-rental kiosks, run by such companies as Victek and Initus, allow people to rent bicycles using a credit card. Cities like Daejeon and Busan are following Seoul’s lead.

If you’re bringing your bike into the country, collect it from the oversized luggage pickup at the airport. Taking your bike is much easier on buses than on the train, since trains have no storage capability for bicycles.

Since about 60% of South Korea’s terrain is mountainous, it can make for exciting or exhausting rides. However, Gyeongju and Jeju-do are some of the best places to pedal and enjoy the scenery.

Independent tour guide Victor Ryashencev offers a 5-day eco-tour of hiking and biking on Jeju Island (www.earthfoot.org/kr.htm). He will take groups as small as 2 people and up to 10 and he’s flexible for tours of any length. Ibike (www.ibike.org/ibike) offers three biking itineraries in South Korea.

On Foot
South Korea is not a country that can be explored solely on foot, although Simon Winchester, author of Korea: A Walk Through the Land of Miracles, attempted it. Even he resorted to some hitchhiking and free rides to cover the territory. However, travelers who love to walk or hike will find no shortage of places to stretch their legs. Be sure to pack comfortable shoes.

If the throngs of Koreans on mountain trails are any indication, hiking is the unofficial sport of South Korea. Weekends are filled with Seoulites walking the trails around the city as well as getting out to far-flung places. So, if you want to avoid the crowds, weekdays are your best bet.

Frommer’s lists exact prices in the local currency. The currency conversions quoted above were correct at press time. However, rates fluctuate, so before departing consult a currency exchange website such as www.oanda.com/convert/classic to check up-to-the-minute rates.

Currency

South Korea’s official monetary unit is the won (₩). Currency is available in ₩10,000, ₩5,000, and ₩1,000 notes and ₩500, ₩100, ₩50, and ₩10 coins (which are less in use). At the time this book went to press, the U.S. dollar was trading around ₩1,152, the pound sterling at ₩1,896, the euro at ₩1,711, the Canadian dollar at ₩1,098, and the Australian dollar at ₩1,055. Bear in mind that conversion rates may fluctuate depending on economic conditions. The latest rates can be found at www.xe.com/ucc.

ATMs

In South Korea, there are regular ATMs and cash dispenser machines (CDs), which give out cash but don’t accept deposits. CDs generally offer directions in English and are more convenient for travelers since most ATMs in South Korea require that customers have an account with a Korean bank. Citibank (© 02/2004-1004 Mon–Fri 9am–6pm;

CREDIT CARDS

Visa, American Express, MasterCard, and sometimes Diners Club are accepted at major hotels, department stores, large restaurants, and stores. Koreans frequently pay with their credit cards, but just because an establishment accepts a Korean credit card doesn’t mean it’ll accept yours. Many stores and restaurants may have trouble processing foreign cards, so make sure that you have enough cash on hand for your purchase. Also, remember to alert your credit card provider that you will be traveling overseas. You wouldn’t want your credit card company to see a series of overseas charges and block your card. Always carry a backup card with you just in case.

TRAVELER’S CHECKS

Visa, American Express, and Thomas Cook traveler’s checks are used in South Korea and can be exchanged at some banks and exchange bureaus.

Traveler’s checks are also accepted at major hotels, department stores, and large restaurants and shops. Outside most major cities and at open markets, smaller shops, and local restaurants, it’s best to use credit cards or cash.

You can buy traveler’s checks at most banks. The most popular traveler’s checks are offered by American Express (© 800/807-6233, or 800/221-7282 for cardholders); Visa (© 800/732-1322; AAA members can obtain Visa checks for a $9.95 fee for checks up to $1,500 at most AAA offices or by calling 866/339-3378); and MasterCard (© 800/223-9920).

American Express, Thomas Cook, Visa, and MasterCard offer foreign currency traveler’s checks, handy at locations not accepting foreign checks.

STAYING HEALTHY

No official vaccinations are required to visit South Korea.

General Availability of Healthcare

Modern medical facilities are widely available in South Korea. However, treatment can be expensive for foreigners and English-speaking doctors can be difficult to find outside the major cities. Contact the International Association for Medical Assistance to Travelers (IAMAT; © 716/754-4883, or in Canada 416/652-0137; www.iamat.org) for lists of local, English-speaking doctors. Medical facilities usually require an upfront deposit or proof of insurance before providing care.

BUGS, BITES & OTHER WILDLIFE CONCERNS

Although mosquitoes can be fierce in South Korea in the summertime, the risk of contracting malaria is quite low in most of the country. Malaria risk is limited to the areas near the DMZ and rural areas in northern Gyeonggi and Gangwon provinces. Malaria is transmitted by infected mosquitoes, usually between dusk and dawn. Try to remain indoors or in screened-in areas during peak times. If you must be outside, wear a long-sleeved shirt, long pants, and a hat. Be sure to use an insect repellent that contains DEET for any exposed areas of skin. The U.S. CDC recommends chloroquine as the antimalarial drug in South Korea, but check with your doctor before taking any medication.

RESPIRATORY ILLNESSES

Air pollution used to be a severe problem in South Korea, but tighter environmental controls have improved the air somewhat. However, in the larger cities, especially Seoul, air pollution is still a major problem. If doesn’t hurt to pack an antidiarrhea drug, just in case. Also, remember to bring any prescription medications with you, since most doctors and pharmacists outside of Seoul do not speak English. If you do run out of a prescription, don’t worry. Most major medications are available in the big cities, and Koreans’ knowledge of English is much better in reading and writing than in speaking—if you write down the name of the drug you need, you’ll likely get it.

COMMON AILMENTS

DIETARY RED FLAGS

Food and water-borne diseases are the most common ailment travelers experience. Take precautions and make sure you bring an antidiarrhea medicine. Children are at a higher risk of getting dehydrated, so make sure they get plenty of fluids.

Drinking tap water in South Korea is not recommended, but all restaurants and even offices and banks offer free filtered or bottled water. You can purchase 500ml bottles of water at convenience stores for ₩500.
you have asthma or respiratory issues, travel by subway and avoid long exposures to automobile exhaust.

Sporadically in the springtime, Asian/yellow dust storms form the deserts of Mongolia, northern China, and Kazakhstan kick up dense soil particles that winds carry all the way to South Korea. This wouldn’t be such a problem if the dust didn’t also carry so much pollution from Chinese industry. If you have a sensitive respiratory system, it’s best to stay indoors when these dust storms are severe, since even face masks won’t filter out the fine particles.

AVIAN & SWINE FLUS South Korea experienced its first cases of avian (H5N1) flu at the end of 2003 when 400,000 chickens on a farm were infected. In late 2006, 6,000 chickens on a farm, which lay in the path of migratory birds, died of avian flu. There were several confirmed cases of people contracting the flu, but no confirmed deaths. Still, make sure that any poultry you eat is well cooked.

South Korea confirmed its first cases of swine (H1N1) flu in May 2009 and thousands of cases were reported by the end of 2009. There were nine confirmed deaths (mostly elderly and frail patients). By the end of 2009, over nine million people (mostly soldiers, children, medical workers, and the elderly) were given free vaccines.

Take precautionary measures like washing your hands often with soap and water (or use an alcohol-based hand cleaner) and avoiding touching your eyes, mouth, and nose.

STAYING SAFE Although the crime rate in South Korea is very low, petty crime (such as pickpocketing) exists in big cities such as Seoul and Busan. As in any city, be aware of your surroundings, don’t walk alone at night, and use only official public transport and taxis.

SUN/ELEMENTS/EXTREME WEATHER EXPOSURE Summers are hot and humid in South Korea. If you plan on spending any time outdoors, be sure to bring a hat, sunblock, and sunglasses. Summer is also typhoon season. Although most typhoons lose their strength by the time they make it to the peninsula, some have caused deaths in rare cases. Avoid areas along the coast when there are typhoon warnings.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU GET SICK AWAY FROM HOME Before leaving home, find out what medical services your health insurance covers. Consider buying extra insurance (see “Insurance” in chapter 14).

Medical facilities are modern and widely accessible in South Korea. English-speaking doctors are available at hospitals and international clinics in Seoul and other larger cities, but in rural areas they’re difficult to find. We list hospitals and emergency numbers under “Fast Facts,” p. 431, as well as in each city and region chapter.

If you suffer from a chronic illness, consult your doctor before your departure. Pack prescription medications in your carry-on luggage, and carry them in their original containers, with pharmacy labels. Carry the generic name of prescription medicines. Most medicines are available in South Korea and most pharmacists can read English, but may require a Korean doctor’s slip to fill a prescription.

We list additional emergency numbers in the “Fast Facts” chapter, p. 431.
Every so often, political and student riots become violent and have been terminated by the release of tear gas by riot police. Demonstrations are usually held in front of universities, near U.S. Army installations, in front of city halls, and at Seoul Station. If you see police in riot gear or groups of protestors, avoid the area.

Possessing illegal drugs is frowned upon in the country—so don’t do it. Penalties for possession of, use of, or trafficking in illegal drugs in South Korea are severe. Korean authorities scan suspicious postal packages. If convicted, you can expect long jail sentences, heavy fines, and deportation at the end of the sentence.

Check with the U.S. State Department (☎ 888/407-4747 or 202/501-4444; http://travel.state.gov) for last-minute travel warnings before departing.

DEALING WITH DISCRIMINATION

South Korea is a homogeneous country. Koreans can be xenophobic, but they are usually quite friendly. When traveling in South Korea, you may experience some gawking (staring isn’t considered particularly rude) or an occasional student wanting to practice his or her English. For tips on what to expect, see “Etiquette & Customs,” in Chapter 2.

Ever since the Korean War, Koreans have had a love-hate relationship with Americans. There have been reports of harassment of Westerners (and fights, especially in bars) in the Hongdae and Sincheon areas of Seoul. Some nightclubs and certain establishments may not let you in if you are a foreigner, if you’re not dressed properly, or if you’re considered too old. See “Specialized Travel Resources,” below, for additional info.

GAY & LESBIAN TRAVELERS

Although an increasing number of Koreans are coming out of the closet every day, most gays and lesbians keep their orientation a secret from their families and coworkers, even as younger generations become more tolerant than their parents. Gay and lesbian travelers who publicize their orientation should expect some shock and even some hostile reactions.

However, you will see same-sex friends walking around hand-in-hand or arm-in-arm. Public display of physical affection between same-sex friends is actually more common than between heterosexual partners.

Seoul, Busan, and Daegu have gay neighborhoods with clubs, bars, and saunas, but they generally maintain a low profile. Seoul even has a GLBT Film Festival and a Queer Culture Festival (☎ 0505/336-2003; www.kqcf.org). See the “Gay & Lesbian” sections in the city chapters for recommendations and visit www.utopia-asia.com (click on the “Korea” link) for in-depth information and current events.

The International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association (IGLTA; ☎ 800/448-8550 or 954/776-2626; www.iglta.org) offers an online directory of gay- and lesbian-friendly travel businesses and tour operators. San Francisco–based Now, Voyager (☎ 800/255-6951; www.nowvoyager.com) offers worldwide trips and cruises.

Gay.com Travel (☎ 800/929-2268 or 415/644-8044; www.gay.com/travel or www.outandabout.com) is an excellent successor to the popular Out & About magazine. British travelers should click on the “Travel” link at www.uk.gay.com for advice and gay-friendly trip ideas.

TRAVELERS WITH DISABILITIES

South Korea is not the best equipped for accessible travel. However, in Seoul and other major cities, this is changing, albeit slowly. Most subway stations in Seoul now have elevators and public restrooms with wheelchair access and handrails. And there’s a plan to have half of Seoul’s buses equipped with wheelchair ramps by the end of 2012. Most of the high-end hotels are accessible, but sidewalks and certain attractions are not. Many tourist attractions, especially those run by the government, offer discounts (and sometimes free entry) to people with disabilities. Some even provide a wheelchair (a passport is required) or an assistant. An accessible map of Seoul is available from the KTO offices and more info is available at www.easyaccess.or.kr.

At Busan’s Gimhae airport, Braille maps are provided on the first floor of both terminals for visually impaired travelers and all toilets are wheelchair accessible. Lifts are available in both terminals.

Organizations that offer a vast range of resources and assistance to travelers with disabilities include MossRehab (800/CALL-MOSS [225-5667]; www.mossrehab.org); the American Foundation for the Blind (AFB; 800/232-5463; www.afb.org); and SATH (Society for Accessible Travel & Hospitality; 212/447-7284; www.sath.org). Access-Able Travel Source (303/232-2979; www.access-able.com) offers a comprehensive database on travel agents with experience in accessible travel. Travel agencies such as Flying Wheels Travel (507/451-5005; www.flyingwheelstravel.com) and Accessible Journeys (800/846-4537 or 610/521-0339; www.disabilitytravel.com) offer customized tours and itineraries.

Mobility-Advisor (www.mobility-advisor.com) offers a variety of travel resources to persons with disabilities. Flying with Disability (www.flying-with-disability.org) is a comprehensive information source on airplane travel. Avis Rent a Car (888/879-4273) has an Avis Cares program that offers services for customers with special travel needs.

British travelers should contact Holiday Care (0845/124-9971 in U.K. only; www.holidaycare.org.uk) to access a wide range of travel information for those with disabilities and elderly people.

FAMILY TRAVEL

South Korea can be a great place to travel with family, since many hotels offer family suites and there are plenty of things for kids to do and see.

To locate accommodations, restaurants, and attractions that are particularly kid-friendly, refer to the “Kids” icon throughout this guide. Also, see the recommended itinerary for families in chapter 4.

Recommended family travel websites include Family Travel Forum (www.familytravelforum.com), a comprehensive site that offers customized trip planning; Family Travel Network (www.familytravelnetwork.com), an online magazine providing travel tips; and TravelWithYourKids.com (www.travelwithyourkids.com), a comprehensive site written by parents for parents.

WOMEN TRAVELERS

A woman traveling alone in South Korea is as safe as in most major cities in the world. Still, you should avoid walking around alone at night in small alleys. If you want to avoid unnecessary stares, be sure to dress conservatively, avoiding crop-tops, miniskirts, or flip-flops. You’ll want to dress especially conservatively when visiting temples, since you may not be admitted. Also, always ride in the back of a taxi, not in the front seat next to the driver.
Check out the award-winning website Journeywoman (www.journeywoman.com), a “real-life” women’s travel-information network where you can sign up for a free e-mail newsletter and get advice on everything from etiquette and dress to safety. The travel guide Safety and Security for Women Who Travel by Sheila Swan and Peter Laufer (Travelers’ Tales Guides), offering common-sense tips on safe travel, was updated in 2004.

SENIOR TRAVEL
Seniors are generally well respected in South Korea. People usually offer their seats to older people and help elders with their bags. As Koreans are dealing with a rapidly aging population, the government is offering discounts to seniors (ages 65 and older), such as lower rates on public transportation and discounted (or even free) entry fees to tourist attractions. You’ll need to show your passport or other form of identification showing your age.

Many reliable agencies and organizations target the 50-plus market. Elderhostel (800/454-5768; www.elderhostel.org) arranges worldwide study programs for those ages 55 and over.

AFRICAN-AMERICAN TRAVELERS
There aren’t many blacks in South Korea, and most are stationed here with the U.S. military or are here from countries in Africa to study or work. In general, Koreans don’t discriminate any more against blacks than they do against any other foreigners. Those who take issue with foreigners will do so regardless of skin color. That said, Koreans have culturally found lighter skin more attractive, since historically, those who worked in the fields got darker, while royalty and the aristocratic yangban class kept their complexions hidden from the sun. Since black travelers are rare in South Korea, you may get some curious stares.

Agencies and organizations that provide resources for black travelers include Rodgers Travel (800/825-1775; www.rodderstravel.com) and the African American Association of Innkeepers International (877/422-5777; www.africanamericaninns.com).

STUDENT TRAVEL
Students in South Korea receive discounts on everything from subway passes to entry fees to museums. You need to have a photo ID to receive most discounts.

The International Student Travel Confederation’s International Student Identity Card qualifies students for substantial savings. It also provides students with basic health and life insurance and a 24-hour help line. The card is valid for a maximum of 18 months. You can apply for the card online or in person at STA Travel (800/781-4040 in North America; www.statravel.com). If you’re 25 or under, you can get their International Youth Travel Card (IYTC), which entitles you to some discounts.

Travel CUTS (800/592-2887; www.travelcuts.com) offers similar services for both Canadians and U.S. residents. Irish students may prefer to turn to USIT (01/602-1904; www.usit.ie).

VEGETARIAN TRAVEL
Luckily for you, vegetarian fare can be found all over South Korea, though with some difficulty if you don’t speak the language. Vegetarian cuisine is historically linked to Buddhism, but a new wave of Korean vegetarianism is growing in popularity. All Buddhist restaurants are vegetarian, and temple stays (http://eng.templestay.com) offer vegetarian meals. Korean tea ceremonies are vegan. For more info on vegetarian options, visit Happy Cow’s Vegetarian Guide to Restaurants & Health Food Stores (www.happycow.net) and VegDining.com list of veg restaurants around the world. Vegetarian Vacations (www.vegetarian-vacations.com) offers vegetarian tours and itineraries.
Each time you take a flight, CO₂ is released into the atmosphere. You can help neutralize this through “carbon offsetting”—paying someone to reduce their CO₂ emissions by the same amount you’ve added. Carbon offsets can be purchased in the U.S. from companies such as Carbonfund.org (www.carbonfund.org) and TerraPass (www.terrapass.org), and from Climate Care (www.climatecare.org) in the U.K.

Although South Korea is not particularly eco-friendly, the nation has been making more effort toward green living. Cities now have recycling (city dwellers are required to sort their trash) and buses with reduced emissions.

The municipality and national government have launched several efforts to make South Korea more environmentally conscious. Programs like the preservation of wetlands in places like Upon-eup, Junam, and Suncheon-man provide sanctuary for migrating birds as well as maintaining natural environments friendly to other wildlife. Unfortunately, the more they create awareness of certain areas, the more people come to visit, making it not so friendly for the birds and other animals there.

The good thing about South Korea is the country’s extensive national park system (http://english.knps.or.kr). The government-run organization maintains the scenic mountains and the fragile environments of its islands and coastal locations as well.

In Seoul and other cities, the government has launched a bicycle program, building more trails and providing a standardized bike-rental program. See the “By Bicycle” section under “Getting Around,” in the early part of this chapter.

Another form of eco-tourism the Koreans are trying out is hands-on experiences and tours of organic farms throughout the country. I’ve highlighted some options in the following regional chapters.

Although South Korea has no organized dolphin or whale-watching opportunities, 41 different species of these marine mammals can be found off the coasts of the peninsula. For information about the ethics of swimming with dolphins and other outdoor activities, visit the Whale and Dolphin Conservation Society (www.wdcs.org) and Tread Lightly (www.treadlightly.org).

9 SPECIAL-INTEREST TRIPS & ESCORTED GENERAL-INTEREST TOURS

SPECIAL-INTEREST TRIPS
Since South Korea is still a mystery to most travelers, there aren’t that many specialized tours offered. However, some show off specific areas of the country’s cultural kaleidoscope.

Aju Incentive Tours (www.ajutours.co.kr) has a 5-day culinary tour of Seoul, which includes a cooking class, an opportunity to sample temple fare, and a cultural performance. They also offer an interesting qi (“chi” in Chinese) tour exploring different aspects of Oriental medicine, including foot massages, a visit to the traditional herbal market, and a direct experience with acupuncture. Their other tours highlight different aspects of South Korea’s arts and culture or explore the country’s historical religions; they also offer ski tours, and even a bird-watching tour. Although bird-watching is a relatively new hobby in the country, Birds Korea (www.birdskorea.
ter class,” a 6-week workshop where well-known Korean artists, filmmakers, writers, or musicians provide insight from their experiences in their particular field of expertise. You can also enroll in their regular 10-week language courses year-round.

ADVENTURE & WELLNESS TRIPS

Adventure Travelers (www.adventure-travelers.com) offers specialty tours of South Korea, including a week of tae kwon do training, a 2-week trip with hands-on ceramics, and trips focusing on watersports or skiing. One of the best tours from an Australian operator is by The Imaginative Traveller (1300-135-088; www.imaginative-traveller.com), which provides a 15-day “adventure” tour that hits the major destinations as well as Seoraksan and the caves in Samcheok.

FOOD & WINE TRIPS

Unfortunately, no tour company offers regular culinary tours in South Korea. However, special tour packages are offered from time to time, usually in conjunction with a special event.

Traditional food classes are offered at the Institute of Traditional Korean Food at the Tteok Museum (02/741-5447). For W70,000, you can choose two dishes to cook from a list of traditional recipes. They require a minimum of two people and reservations at least a week in advance. Classes aren’t offered on Sundays or national holidays.
VOLUNTEER & WORKING TRIPS

Habitat for Humanity (☎ 02/2267-3702, ext. 403; http://eng.habitat.or.kr) has special volunteer trips to help build homes for poor South Koreans. No special skills are required, just a willingness to learn and roll up your sleeves. They have a home-building opportunity in Chuncheon from July 3 to 17, 2010. The trip costs US$1,990, which includes accommodations, meals, local transportation, and trip insurance. Airfare is not covered. Check their website for other volunteer trips.

CADIP (the Canadian Alliance for Development Initiatives and Projects; www.cadip.org) has several volunteer opportunities working with schoolchildren in areas like Muju, Namwon, Uiryeong, or even Busan. Most of their programs cost $590 Canadian dollars (about US$470), but that covers shared accommodations and three meals daily. They also provide W100,000 of pocket change per month. Visit their website for details and to apply.

SPECIAL-INTEREST TRIPS

If you've found yourself engrossed in the latest Korean drama offering, tissue in hand, yelling at the screen, you may want to tear yourself away to see some of the locations in person. Good Morning Tours (☎ 02/757-1232; goodmorningtours.com) has several 1-, 2- or even half-day tours centered on specific dramas. My favorite is the “Autumn in My Heart”/“Winter Sonata” combo tour, which takes you to Hawjimpo, Sokcho, Nami-do, and Chuncheon. The W320,000 includes hotel, all admission fees, and an English-speaking guide.

Ichon Tour (☎ 82-31-631-3302; www.ichontour.com) has a pottery-based tour with hands-on experiences in Icheon city, South Korea’s ceramics center.

ESCORTED GENERAL-INTEREST TOURS

Escorted tours are structured group tours, with a group leader. The price usually is all-inclusive.

All4uKorea (☎ 010/7576-0018; www.all4u-korea-tour.com) is a group of tour operators based out of Seoul that offer customized tours with private drivers. You can also contact them about designing your own tour. Root Travel Ltd. (☎ 02/549-8605; www.roottravel.co.kr), also based out of Seoul, provides 12- to 20-day general tours spanning Seoul, Busan, and Gyeongju.

Alumni Travel (☎ 02/9290-3856; www.alumnitravel.com.au), based in Sydney, offers a specially guided tour of South Korea that spans 17 days.

Tour East Holidays (☎ 416/929-6688; www.toureastholidays.com), a Toronto-based company, offers a brief South Korea tour that hits the three major cities.

AffordableTours.com (☎ 800/935-2620 or 281/269-2600) offers a handful of general and cultural tours that hit the major cities (usually breakfasts and lunches are included, but you're on your own for dinner). R&C Hawaii Tours (☎ 808/942-3388; www.rchawaii.com) offers summer and autumn tours.

A.T. Seasons & Vacations Travel (☎ 91-11-22794796; www.visitsasia.com), based in New Delhi, offers 4- to 7-day general tours of South Korea, starting from Incheon airport. The KTO (http://english.tour2korea.com) also provides a list of travel agencies in your home country that can arrange escorted tours to fit your needs.

For more information on escorted general-interest tours, including questions to ask before booking your trip, see www.frommers.com/planning.
CELLPHONES

The three letters that define much of the world’s wireless capabilities are GSM (Global System for Mobile Communications). In the U.S., T-Mobile and AT&T Wireless use this quasi-universal system; in Canada, MicroCell and some Rogers customers are GSM, and all Europeans and most Australians use GSM. Unfortunately, South Korean cellphone carriers use a different, highly specialized system, called CDMA, which is not compatible with GSM technology. Of special note, South Korea just began sales of iPhones at the end of 2009, and there are high hopes that compatibility issues will be diminished with incoming foreign phones.

For now, if you have a GSM mobile phone, you can rent a “SIM-compatible” handset from KTF and insert your phone’s SIM card into the rental phone. KTF will charge you a cheaper rental fee (₩1,300) per day and you’ll be billed any roaming charges directly from your home cellphone carrier.

Call your wireless operator and ask to get the code to “unlock” your phone and to activate international roaming on your account. Some American and Canadian cellphone companies offer a loaner phone that has CDMA technology. Note that international roaming charges can be exorbitant, from $1 to $5 per minute.

For many, renting a phone is a better option. North Americans can rent one before leaving home from InTouch USA (☎ 800/872-7626; www.intouchglobal.com) or RoadPost (☎ 888/290-1606 or 905/272-5665; www.roadpost.com). For advice on whether your phone will work overseas, call InTouch at ☎ 703/222-7161 from 9am to 4pm EST, or go to http://intouchglobal.com/travel.htm.

Two companies rent cellphones in South Korea. For both, you must reserve online (http://english.tour2korea.com) before you arrive. South Korea manufactures some of the best cellphones in the world and you will be amazed at the clarity of the calls and the availability of service around the country.

SK Telecom has a customer center at Incheon Airport (☎ 02/1566-2011; 24 hr.) on the first floor of the passenger terminal between exits 6 and 7. They also have a location at the Gimpo Airport (☎ 02/1566-2011; daily 7am–11pm) on the first floor of the international terminal on the opposite side of the arrival gates. Their location at Busan’s Gimhae Airport (☎ 02/1566-2011; daily 7am–9:30pm) is on the first floor of the international terminal, across from the departure gates. You need to provide a credit card for deposit and your fee will be due when you return the phone, which you can do at any of the SK Telecom’s three airport locations.

You can also rent a mobile phone from KTF Global Roaming Centers, which has more locations than SK Telecom. At Incheon Airport (☎ 02/2190-1180; 24 hr.), they’re on the first floor of the passenger terminal between exits 10 and 11. At Busan’s Gimhae Airport (☎ 02/2190-1180; daily 9am–9pm), you can find them on the first floor of the international terminal, right next to the information desk. They also have a location at Busan International Port (☎ 02/1588-0608; daily 7am–8pm) on the first floor, near the check-in counter. In Jeju City, they have an office at Jeju KTF Members Plaza (on the first floor of Sung Woo B/D, Leedo-2-dong, Jeju City; ☎ 064/711-8016; weekdays 9am–6pm, closed holidays). Their Gwangju Airport location (☎ 064/1588-0608; daily 7am–8pm) is on the second floor, near the departure gates.

Phones from either company cost ₩3,000 per day to rent (₩2,000 if you sign up as a T2K member for free at http://english.visitkorea.or.kr). Domestic calls cost W100 per 10 seconds and international rates vary. All fees do not include the 10% VAT.

Buying a phone can be economically attractive, as many nations have cheap prepaid phone systems. Once you arrive at your destination, stop by a local cellphone shop and get the cheapest package; you’ll probably pay less than W100 for a phone and a starter calling card. Local calls may be as low as W30 per minute.

INTERNET/E-MAIL

Without Your Own Computer

Internet service is offered in public places such as airports, train stations, and bus terminals in South Korea. PC bahngs (PC rooms), where you can rent an Internet-connected PC, usually populated by gaming enthusiasts (that is, young, nerdy males), and Internet cafes are easy to find throughout the country. Many PC bahngs are open 24 hours and some have snack bars that offer beverages, noodles, and other food. Just look for the letters pc around town. Most of them are on higher floors in commercial buildings.

Many love motels, especially in metropolitan areas, offer high-speed Internet access with an in-room computer. Just be sure to ask for an Internet room when you check in.

With Your Own Computer

South Korea’s Internet connectivity is legendary as it leads the world in Wi-Fi (wireless fidelity) hot spots. However, the plethora of hot spots doesn’t mean that they’re friendly to travelers. Many high-end hotels, resorts, airports, cafes, and retailers offer free high-speed Wi-Fi access or charge a small fee for usage. Most laptops sold today have built-in wireless capability. To find public Wi-Fi hot spots at your destination, go to www.jiwire.com; its Hotspot Finder holds the world’s largest directory of public wireless hot spots. Since the majority of Wi-Fi hot spots are owned by previously government-controlled Korea Telecom (KT), it’s best to get a prepaid Wi-Fi card, available at the KT Plaza at Incheon Airport (in the middle of the second floor; daily 7am–8pm). Prepaid cards come in W3,000 and W12,000 denominations and expire after a few months. The former is good for 60 minutes of access within a 24-hour period, while the latter allows unlimited access. For dial-up access, most business-class hotels throughout the world offer data-ports for laptop modems, and most hotels in South Korea offer free or low-cost, high-speed Internet access.

Bring a connection kit of the right power and phone adapters, a spare phone cord, and a spare Ethernet network cable—or find out if your hotel supplies them. Most of South Korea is on a 220-volt, 60-cycle system (the plugs with two round prongs), but a few major hotels have 110-volt, 60-cycle systems. Be sure you have the right adapter before plugging in your computer. The universal adapter is virtually impossible to find once you’re in South Korea, but they may have some at E-Mart (Korea’s Wal-Mart) or the Electronic Market.

The South Korean government censors certain types of websites, including pornography and political sites. Generally, though, you shouldn’t have any trouble accessing content online.

TELEPHONES

To call South Korea:
1. Dial the international access code: 011 from the U.S.; 00 from the U.K., Ireland, or New Zealand; or 0011 from Australia.
2. Dial the country code 82.
3. Dial the city code (2 for Seoul, 51 for Busan) and then the number.
For example, if you are calling KTO Tourist Information Center in Seoul from the U.K., you would dial 00-82-2-729-9497. Phone numbers in South Korea are either seven or eight digits long (not including the area code).

To make international calls: First dial 001, 002, or 008 and then the country code (U.S. or Canada 1, U.K. 44, Ireland 353, Australia 61, New Zealand 64). Next, dial the area code and number. For example, if you wanted to call the British Embassy in Washington, D.C., you would dial 001-1-202-588-7800. The numbers to dial out for mobile phone carriers vary (for example, 00345, 00365, 00388, 00700, 00727, 00766, and 00770). If you're renting a Korean cellphone, find out the international dialing number from your mobile phone company.

For directory assistance: Dial 114 if you're looking for a number inside the country (0077 for an international operator). You can also call the Korea Travel Phone (1330).

For operator assistance: If you need operator assistance, dial 0077 if you're trying to make an international call and 114 if you want to call a number in South Korea.

Toll-free numbers: Numbers beginning with 800 within South Korea are toll-free, but calling a 1-800 number in the States from South Korea is not toll-free. In fact, it costs the same as an overseas call.

PAY PHONES
There are three kinds of public phones in South Korea—ones that take coins, phone cards, and credit cards. Coin phones will give you change, but only up to W100 coins. Telephone cards can be purchased in small shops near phone booths, convenience stores, or banks and can be used for both local and international calls. Cards come in denominations of W2,000, W3,000, W5,000, or W10,000. A local call costs W70 for 3 minutes, with intercity and long-distance calls costing considerably more. Credit card phones allow you to use your credit card instead of a phone card.

VOICE OVER INTERNET PROTOCOL (VOIP)
If you have Web access while traveling, you might consider a broadband-based telephone service (in technical terms, Voice over Internet Protocol, or VoIP) such as Skype (www.skype.com) or Vonage (www.vonage.com), which allows you to make free international calls if you use their services from your laptop or in a cybercafe. The people you're calling must also use the service for it to work (or otherwise there is an additional charge); check the sites for details. You can also use iChat or AIM to use a webcam to talk to anyone in the world.

11 TIPS ON ACCOMMODATIONS

There are a wide range of accommodations in South Korea, from very inexpensive minbak (guesthouses) and love motels (see below) to luxury hotels, condos, and pensions.

When you're booking a room, make sure to specify that you want a Western-style room, if you want a bed. Korean ondol-style rooms don't have beds, but include blankets for you to sleep on the floor, which is usually heated during cold weather. If you stay in one, make sure you don't leave any electronics or anything plastic on the floor.

Outside of high-end hotels, most accommodations require you to take off your shoes at the front-entry area before entering the room. Bathrooms in lower-priced accommodations usually don't have Tips  Motels for Lovers

In back alleys, on side streets, and along country roads lie discreet love motels, aimed primarily at those who are married and having extramarital affairs, and at young couples desperate for some privacy (most Koreans live at home until they get married). Many have obvious names like Hotel Venus, but others can be more obscure. A sure sign of one is the curtains that cover the parking area (to avoid having anyone recognize your car, they’ll even give you a placard to cover your license plate) and the dimly lit lobby (usually red, but sometimes with colored lights).

But despite these slightly sleazy trappings, many of these places are just fine for tourists, particularly those on a budget. They are inexpensive, ranging from W30,000 to W50,000, depending on the day of the week. For a little extra, you can often get an in-room Jacuzzi or sauna. All of them supply toothbrushes, shampoo, lotions, and even condoms. Some of them have round beds with extras like mood lighting, vibrating options, and strategically placed mirrors. And most provide Internet access and in-room movies. If you don’t mind the connotations, they’re often clean and safe places to stay. It’s also an experience you won’t soon forget! I’ve made note of a few I can safely recommend throughout the book.

YOUTH HOSTELS

South Korea has an extensive hostel network (about 70 locations throughout the country). Contact the Korea Youth Hostels Association, Room 408, Jeokseon, Hyundai Building 80, Jeokseon-dong, Jongro-gu, Seoul 110-756 (© 02/725-3031; fax 02/725-3113; www.kyha.or.kr), for additional information and membership requirements. Most hostels are open 24 hours and have dormitory-style shared rooms. Prices range from about W5,000 to W25,000 for a bed.
Suggested Itineraries in South Korea

Seoul, Busan, Gyeongju, and even Jeju-do are well traveled, and most tour companies to South Korea will cover those areas. But South Korea is an exciting place to explore on your own, so I’ve provided a few itineraries, most of which don’t stray too far from the major cities, to help you plan your trip.

Bear in mind that although South Korea is small in land mass, the hilly terrain and lack of major roads increase travel time between locations and attractions. Although you can rent a car, I don’t suggest it unless you’re planning to go well off the beaten path. The best ways to get around are by rail and by bus.

Trains in South Korea are cheap, reliable, and a comfortable way to travel. High-speed KTX trains will help you save time. Consider buying a KTX pass before you arrive, as it will save you money, too (see the “Getting Around” section in chapter 3).

In general, trains will take you only to stations in major cities, but not to many temples and other remote locations. Luckily, the bus system is quite efficient and all towns have at least one bus that goes to even the most remote locations. A combination of train and bus travel will probably be your best bet.

1 SOUTH KOREA IN 1 WEEK

Although a week may seem like a long time, you’ll just barely get the flavor of the country in 7 days. Still, you’ll be able to experience the hustle and bustle of the capital city, explore ancient temples and other historic sites, and enjoy South Korea’s endlessly fascinating culture.

Day 1: Arrive in Seoul
Arrive at the Incheon Airport and check into your hotel. Have dinner and see a show at Korea House ★★ (p. 123) or dinner with a view at Top Cloud restaurant (p. 84). If you get a chance, soak in a sauna or bath at your hotel or at one of Seoul’s many bathhouses.

Day 2: Explore Seoul
Tour Changdeokgung Palace ★★★ (p. 95)—guided tours in English are held Tuesday to Sunday at 11:30am, 1:30pm, and 3:30pm. Then take a walk around the city’s cultural street, Insadong ★★★ (p. 118), where you may want to stop for a cup of Korean tea or lunch of traditional temple cuisine (always vegetarian, often bland, and usually made with local ingredients) at Sanchon ★★★ (p. 86). Then, squeeze your way between crowded stalls at Namdaemun Market (p. 116). Enjoy a quiet dinner or, if you want a livelier night out, take a dinner cruise on the Han River (p. 111). If you can’t sleep, head for late-night (or early-morning) shopping action at Dongdaemun Market ★★★ (p. 114).

Jongmyo (Royal Tombs)  The oldest Confucian royal shrines left in the world are housed in the Jeongjeon in Seoul. Originally built in 1395 (during the reign of King Taejo), the Jeongjeon had seven rooms and was one of the longest buildings in Asia at that time. More and more rooms were added until there were a total of 19 shrine rooms—one to house memorial tablets for each of the Joseon kings. After it was destroyed by invading Japanese forces during the Imjin Waeran (1592–98; p. 268), a new complex was rebuilt, in 1601. Each of the rooms is simple in design, as is standard for Confucian shrines. Memorial ceremonies are held here every year, usually on the first Sunday in May.

Changdeokgung  The best preserved of Seoul’s palaces, it dates to the 15th century. The Biwon, or Secret Garden, is an elaborate flora lover’s dream, located behind the main palace in the back of the complex, and is a must-see.

Haeinsa and the Tripitaka Koreana  This lovely temple on the slopes of Gayasan houses the Tripitaka Koreana, the world’s most complete collection of Buddhist scriptures. Engraved in Hanja (Chinese script) on over 80,000 wooden blocks, the birch-wood blocks date from 1237 to 1248. The temple is located in Gyeongsang-do and can be easily accessed from Busan or Ulsan.

Seokguram and Bulguksa  The Seokguram grotto is part of the Bulguksa temple complex in Tohamsan, just outside of downtown Gyeongju. Built in the 8th century, this Buddha statue and its surrounding Bodhisattvas and arhats (Buddhist saints) are impressive in their domed grotto.

Gyeongju  The entire city of Gyeongju, the former capital of the Shilla Kingdom, is a historic site. It includes temples, palace ruins, royal tombs, pagodas, Buddhist art, and the world’s oldest observatory.

Hwaseong  This large 18th-century military fortress once surrounded the city of Suwon. Built to protect the tomb of King Chongjo’s father, it still sits majestically overlooking the now-modern city.

Gochang, Hwasun, and Ganghwa Dolmen Sites  The hundreds of dolmens (stone tomb markers) found at the prehistoric burial grounds near Gochang, Hwasun, and Ganghwa are the largest concentration of such dolmens in the world.

Jeju-do and Lava Tubes  On the volcanic island of Jeju, there are a number of natural lava tubes originating from the Geumunoreum volcano. Also part of the natural heritage designation is Seongsan Ilchulbong, a peak formed by a volcanic eruption about 100,000 years ago.

Although traveling with children can be a challenge, South Korea has some truly rewarding fun for the whole family. Koreans take their children everywhere and at most attractions those 5 and under get in free. You’ll only scratch the surface in such a short time, but the little ones will have something to look forward to upon their return.

The staff speak English, and entry is free daily from 7am to 10pm.
Since Buddhism was first introduced on the peninsula over 1,600 years ago, hundreds of thousands of temples have been built. Although the rise of Neo-Confucianism during the Joseon Dynasty (1392–1910) threatened to drive the religion out, Buddhism survived. There are now over 11,000 temples (many of them small) located throughout South Korea. Many of them are hidden retreats perched on the slopes of mountains, overlooking craggy cliffs, or simply sitting pretty next to running streams. This tour will allow you to get a good overview of some of the very best.

Day 1: Arrive in Seoul
Arrive at Incheon Airport and take the limousine bus into the city. Take the afternoon or evening to get acclimated to the city by enjoying a simple meal or a cup of tea at a traditional tea shop in Insadong (p. 86).

Day 2: A Bit of Peace in the City
Enjoy a tour of the Gyeongbokgung Palace (p. 97), Changdeokgung (p. 95), and Biwon (Secret Garden) (p. 96). Have a lunch of traditional temple cuisine at Sanchon (p. 86). Stroll around the Insadong area and visit a temple in the city, such as Jogyesa (p. 106) or Bongeunsa (p. 105).

Day 4: Spend the Day in Nature
Take a bus into Seoraksan (p. 346) and explore the natural beauty of the area. Visit Sinheungsa (p. 352), one of the oldest Zen meditation temples in the world, and Naksansa (p. 357) to see how a temple recovers after a fire. Overnight in Seoraksan, and enjoy a sauna or a soak at a public bath.

Day 5: The Historic Center
Catch a bus to Gyeongju (p. 251) and explore Bulguksa (p. 256) and the Seokguram Grotto (p. 257), one of Asia’s nicest Buddhist shrines. Overnight in Gyeongju.

Day 6: Explore Korea’s Buddhist Heritage
If you want to explore some hidden Buddhist treasures nestled in mountain ranges and valleys, take a bus or taxi to Namsan (p. 258). Be sure to pack a lunch and bring plenty to drink because you’ll spend at least 4 to 5 hours hiking. You’ll be rewarded with over 100 temples or temple ruins, and dozens of stone pagodas and Buddha statues. Take a bus or train to Busan to overnight there.

Day 7: Bustling Busan
Wake up early to catch the sunrise at Yonggungsa (p. 331), with its rocky cliffs overlooking the sea. Then head over to ancient Beomeosa (p. 331) and enjoy its lovely surroundings. Enjoy a seafood dinner in Haeundae (p. 325) or Gwangalli Beach (p. 326).

Day 8: Haeinsa

Take in the early-morning fog and low clouds encircling the mountains. Visit one of Jirisan’s many temples, including Hwaeomsa ⭐⭐⭐ (p. 241) and Songgwangsa ⭐⭐⭐⭐ (p. 234), one of the three Buddhist “jewels” in South Korea. If you have a chance, stop by the Boseong Tea Plantation for some picturesque landscapes and some green tea to cleanse your mind and body.

Day 10: Seaside Views of Bori-am ⭐⭐⭐
Buses run infrequently here, so plan accordingly. Head to Namhae (p. 305) and hike up to Bori-am ⭐⭐⭐ (p. 306), one of South Korea’s three major holy sites. Overnight in Namhae or nearby Tongyeong.

Day 11: Seoul Again
Take a bus back to Seoul and enjoy the afternoon exploring the markets or enjoy a vegetarian temple luncheon at Sanchon (p. 86) before heading to the airport.
Seoul is a rambling, crowded, and exciting metropolis. First-time visitors may have trouble with the congestion (both automotive and human) and the smog, but the city has many wonderful things to offer. City government’s attempts to clean up the traffic and the air have been somewhat successful. The addition of “bus-only lanes” and clean-air buses, and the development of Cheonggyecheon (p. 110), a stream that flows through the city’s center, have improved the look and feel of the city.

Located in the northwestern part of the country, Seoul is bordered by eight mountains and the level plains of the Han River, which bisects the city. Seoul occupies an area of about 605 sq. km (234 sq. miles), but is the second-most-densely populated city in the world (just behind Tokyo). With a population of over 10 million, it’s home to 25% of the country’s population. The greater metropolitan area is home to almost 23 million residents, or roughly half of South Korea’s population.

Seoul became the capital of Korea more than 600 years ago, when King Daejo moved the capital from Gaegyong at the end of the 14th century.

I’ve watched the city transform itself through decades, and the Seoul of my childhood has grown into a modern capital. Love motels have been built on the former site of neighborhood playgrounds, open market stalls have given rise to giant megastores, and the once predominantly vegetarian and seafood-based cuisine has become focused on meat. What used to be Asia’s best-kept secret for great deals on merchandise is now blown wide open, and Seoul has become a world-class shopping city, with high prices to boot (though bargains can be found in traditional markets and tucked around street corners in quieter neighborhoods).

Still, the charm of the city lies in its contradictions and surprises. You’ll see well-heeled young women eating spicy-red ddeokbokgi (rice-cake sticks) from tarp-covered stalls. Centuries-old palaces maintain their stately serenity under the shadows of downtown skyscrapers. Little old ladies still jostle you as they haggle their way through open marketplaces. Even with the world’s best Internet infrastructure, some of the most complete cellphone coverage anywhere, and modern cafes dotting the landscape, parts of Seoul still maintain its distinctly Korean flavor.

There is much to explore here, and I hope you won’t be afraid to see Seoul’s hidden charms. I have no doubt you’ll come to love this ever-changing city as much as I do.

1 ORIENTATION

GETTING THERE & AWAY

By Plane

Seoul is served by two airports, but the majority of international passengers arrive at Incheon International Airport (032/1577-2600; www.airport.or.kr). It was built in 2001, 52km (32 miles) west of Seoul on Yeongjong Island, which is part of the city of Incheon. The third-largest passenger terminal in the world, Incheon Airport was ranked second in Skytrax World Airport Awards 2006 “Best Airport Worldwide” survey by passengers, just behind Hong Kong International. Arrivals are on the first floor, where you will find global ATMs, foreign currency exchanges (daily 6am–10pm), the Incheon Tourist Information Center (☎ 032/743-0011; daily 7am–10pm), the Korea Tourism Organization Information Center (KTO; ☎ 1330; 7am–10pm), and the Hotel Information Center (☎ 032/743-2570; 9am–10pm), a private company that offers some discounts to midrange and high-end hotels. The second floor has a few domestic flights to and from Jeju-do and Busan, as well as an Internet cafe lounge (☎ 032/743-7427). There are a handful of free computers on the bottom level, with a 30-minute maximum usage if there is a wait.

Special airport buses run every 10 to 30 minutes, starting daily around 5:30am until 10pm. A trip to downtown Seoul takes about 90 minutes (longer during high-traffic times). Limousine buses cost around ₩8,000, while KAL deluxe limousine buses cost ₩12,000 and stop at 20 of the major hotels in Seoul. Regular taxis charge around ₩38,000 to go downtown, while deluxe taxis (they’re black) charge around ₩63,000. Taxi fares can be considerably more during high-traffic times. After midnight, regular taxi fares increase by 20% (deluxe taxi fares stay the same).

There is no direct rail service from Incheon Airport to Seoul. However, the relatively new Airport Railroad (AREX) connects Incheon to Gimpo Airport, where you can transfer to Seoul's subway. It takes about 30 minutes to get to Gimpo from the Incheon airport, running at 15-minute intervals.

The older Gimpo International Airport (☎ 02/660-2114; www.airport.co.kr) handles all domestic flights except for a few to and from Haneda (Tokyo) and Osaka, Japan, and a flight to and from Shanghai from a separate international terminal. It is located south of the Han River in western Seoul. Arrivals are on the first floor, where you’ll find a Tourist Information Booth (☎ 02/3707-9465; daily 9am–9pm). Tip: This booth offers free Internet access. The second floor is for check-ins, and the third floor is for departures. You’ll find all the restaurants, duty-free shops, banks, lost luggage, and a medical center on the fourth floor. There’s a pharmacy on the third floor.

The easiest way to get downtown from Gimpo is via subway—take line 5 (₩1,100 to City Hall Station). Taxis to city hall (18km/11 miles) are considerably more expensive, around ₩18,000 for regular taxis and ₩30,000 for deluxe taxis. Limousine buses run anywhere from ₩2,500 to ₩6,000, depending on your destination.

By Train

Seoul is the center of an extensive rail system operated by the Korean National Railroad (☎ 02/1544-7788; www.korail.go.kr). Tickets can be purchased up to a month in advance at many travel agents and up to an hour before departure at train stations. You should book ahead, especially if you plan on traveling during holidays, such as the Lunar New Year (usually early Feb) or Chuseok, Korean Thanksgiving (usually sometime in Sept). See “Peak Travel Times,” in chapter 3, for exact dates.

The KTX (Korea Train Express; http://ktx.korail.go.kr/eng) bullet train is also an option. There are two lines with stops in major cities. The Gyeongbu line goes to Busan (Seoul to Busan tickets are ₩44,800) in under 3 hours via Daejeon and the Honam line, which travels through west Daejeon, and ends at Gwangju (₩33,300 from Seoul) or Mokpo (₩37,200 from Seoul). The second phase, linking Daegu and Gyeongju to Busan, will have limited service beginning in June 2010, and is expected to be operating fully by November 2010. You can purchase tickets up to 2 months in advance or as close to an hour before departure. Tickets are available online, at most travel agents in Seoul, or at ticket counters and automatic ticket machines at the station.

Foreigners can buy a voucher for a KR Pass in their home country and exchange these vouchers in Seoul for passes for unlimited travel on the railways. The passes are not available for purchase in South Korea. The KR Passes are good for travel during consecutive days in increments of 3 ($76/£38), 5 ($115/£58), 7 ($145/£73), and 10 ($166/£83) days. A Saver Pass can be purchased for two to five people traveling together at a 10% discount. Those 24 and under can get a Youth Pass for 20% less. Check the Korean Railroad website for more info or contact STA Travel ([800/777-0112 or 02/733-9494 in Seoul; www.statravelgroup.com]). STA Pass vouchers can be exchanged for train tickets at Kises Tour, located in the YMCA Building, Suite 505, Jongno 2-ga. Take subway line 1 to Jonggak Station, exit 3 (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat 9am–3pm).

Seoul Station ([02/3149-2509]) is the most central of the country’s train stations. Most railroad routes start here, except for the Jung-ang and Gyeongchun lines. From here, you can catch a train to Busan and Gyeongju on the Gyeongbu line. Seoul Station can be accessed via subway lines 1 or 2 (exits 2 or 13).

Yongsan Station ([02/3780-5408]) is a popular station for catching the KTX train to other cities. Trains along the Honam line depart from here. To get here, take subway line 1 to Yongsan Station or line 4 to Sinyongsan Station (exit 4).

Cheongnyangni Station ([02/3149-2509]) has trains that take you to Gyeongju and other places in Gyeongsangbuk-do and cities in Gangwon-do. Popular destinations from here include Gangneung (on the eastern coast) and Andong, a town well-known for its traditional village. Take subway line 1 to Cheongnyangni Station (exit 4).

For trains that run along the Gyeongchun line (a scenic route that travels with the Han River), get tickets at Seongbuk Station ([02/917-7445]). This station is popular, especially for weekenders wanting to get away to Chuncheon, Cheongpyeong, Gapyeong, or Gangchon. Take subway line 1 to Seongbuk Station (exit 1).

By Bus

You can take a bus from Seoul to and from any region and any city in South Korea. Express buses to every major bus station in the country originate from either the Seoul Express Bus Terminal or the Central City Terminal next door. To get to smaller towns, you can change buses or take a direct bus from one of Seoul’s smaller bus stations.

Express buses to the Gyeongnam area (Gyubu line), Chungcheong area (Guma line), and Gangwon-do (Yeongdong line) start from the Seoul Express Bus Terminal, 19-4 Banpo-dong, Seocho-gu ([02/535-4151]). Buses on the Honam line that go to Jeolla-do to the south and the Namhaeseon (southern coastal line) start from the Central City Terminal, 19-4 Banpo-dong, Seocho-gu ([02/6282-0114]), which is located right next to the Seoul Express Bus Terminal. Both bus terminals can be accessed by subway. Take line 3 or 7 (line 3 is easier) to the Express Bus Terminal Station and take the underground passage that leads to the bus terminals.

Buses from the DongSeoul Bus Terminal, 546-1 Gui-dong, Gwangjin-gu ([02/446-8000]), go primarily north and east from Seoul. You can catch a bus to Andong, Gangneung, Sokcho, and Wŏnju from here. Also, buses from this terminal take the scenic (but longer) route to Seoraksan National Park. You can get to the DongSeoul Bus Terminal by taking subway line 2 to Gangbyeon Station (exit 4).

The Nambu Bus Terminal, 1446-1 Seocho-dong, Seocho-gu ([02/521-8550]), services mostly the southern region. Popular destinations from this station include Osan, Pyongtaek, and Songnisan National Park. You can get to the Nambu Bus Terminal by taking subway line 3 to the Nambu Bus Terminal Station (exit 5).

Buses from the Sangbong Bus Terminal, 83-1 Sangbong-dong, Jungnang-gu (☎ 02/435-2122), go generally east and north. You can get to Chuncheon and Sokcho from this station. You can get to the Sangbong Bus Terminal by taking subway line 7 to the Sangbong Station (exit 2). Walk straight for about 5 minutes and the bus terminal will be on your right, across the street from the E-Mart.

VISITOR INFORMATION

The Korea Tourism Organization (KTO), B1, KTO Building (T2 Tower), 40, Cheonggyecheonno, Jung-gu, Seoul 100-180 (☎ 02/7299-497, ext. 499; http://english.tour2korea.com; daily 9am–8pm), publishes a variety of free brochures and maps, and provides transportation reservations and other traveler’s assistance. You can also call ☎ 1330, the 24-hour Korea Travel Phone, for assistance in English. Dial Seoul’s area code (02) for info about the city from elsewhere in the country.

The KTO has several tourist information locations throughout Seoul. There are two at Incheon Airport, between gates 12–13 and gates 1–2 on the arrival floor (☎ 032/743-2600, ext. 3; daily 7am–10pm), which are the easiest places to pick up free maps and other information about the city in English. The headquarters office (address listed above) also offers free Internet access and a travel agency desk (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm). There are other locations at Seoul City Hall, 2nd Floor, Main Hall, Taepyeyang-no 1(il)-ga (daily 9am–9pm); Dongdaemun, near the construction site of the future Dongdaemun design plaza (daily 9am–5pm); Myeongdong, in front of the Metro Midopa building, Namdaenmun-no 2(ee)-ga (daily 9am–5pm); Insadong, Gwanhun-dong, 155-20, Jongno-gu (daily 10am–10pm); and Itaewon, on the basement level of Itaewon subway station (line 6), Itaewon-dong, Yongsan-gu (daily 9am–9pm).

CITY LAYOUT

Your first impression of Seoul may be that it is a sprawling city of hundreds of high-rise apartments and modern buildings with the occasional historic building randomly thrown in. Once you get to know the city, you’ll see that it’s a patchwork of distinct neighborhoods, each with its own flavor and character. The primary landmark is the Han-gahng (Han River), which runs east to west through the city.

Small streets in Seoul rarely have names or signs indicating what they’re called, but larger streets have signs in both Korean and English. Buildings are not always numbered, and when they are, the numbers may not make logical sense (since they were numbered by when they were built, not by physical order). Addresses don’t give street names either, so it’s nearly impossible to find a location by address alone. The easiest way to find a place is to start from a subway station or a major landmark and make your way from there. Luckily, the subway system is widespread and efficient, and announcements and signs are in English and Korean. Of course, residents are usually willing to help with directions, even if they don’t speak English.

NEIGHBORHOODS IN BRIEF

Seoul is made up of districts, neighborhoods, and areas, and it can be difficult to get a sense of where things are. To make matters more complicated, neighborhoods may overlap districts, or be broken down into multiple areas, each with its own name. I strongly suggest using the maps provided here, including the subway map on the back inside cover, and major landmarks to orient yourself.
Jongno  At the center of the city, Jongno (not to be confused with the Jongno-gu district) is the oldest part of downtown Seoul. Here you will find the Gwanghwamun (the large gate) and Namsan (South Mountain), easily recognizable by the massive tower at its peak.

Insadong  This area, nestled within Jongno-gu, used to be the home of royalty and to yangban (aristocratic) families, but that was during the Joseon Dynasty (1392–1910). Insadong is now filled with art galleries, ceramics stores, and traditional handicraft shops. You can also enjoy a traditional Korean meal or take a peaceful break alongside artists and monks in one of Insadong’s many tea shops.

Samcheong-dong  This area has grown into the city’s contemporary art center as galleries have migrated here from Insadong. There are still many stores and galleries in Insadong, but Samcheong-dong has attracted more of the higher-priced, modern collections. Many art centers have their own cafes or restaurants, so you can enjoy a quick bite while admiring the paintings or ceramics.

Myeongdong  The major shopping district for clothing and accessories in Seoul, Myeongdong has more mid-priced and higher-priced items in its boutique shops than the two open markets of Namdaemun and Dongdaemun.

Namdaemun  The oldest and largest traditional market in all of Korea, Namdaemun shijang (market) has vendors selling clothing, local products, and pretty much everything but the kitchen sink. Many of the small shops sell their wares directly from their own factories, so you can get both retail and wholesale prices.

Dongdaemun  The area around the former stadium (and future design plaza) is home to one of the major marketplaces in South Korea, the Dongdaemun shijang. There are two sections, one retail and one wholesale (with shops selling things mostly in bulk), that open at night and get really busy during the wee hours of the morning.

Itaewon  Itaewon is the foreigners’ district, which grew up around the American military base in Seoul. Once a shady red-light district, it’s been cleaned up, and lots of good international restaurants have sprung up here. You can still find ladies of the night walking down certain streets at night, but during the day it’s a shopper’s paradise. You’ll find a great selection of clothing, shoes, luggage, and leather goods, mostly made in South Korea.

Sinchon/Idae-ap (Ewha University area)/Hongdae-ap (Hong-ik University area)  These neighborhoods surround Yonsei, Sogang, Hong-ik, and Ewha universities. The area near the entrance to the Ewha Women’s University is great for shopping for women’s clothes and accessories (that is, if you’re a size 6 or smaller—Korean sizes run very small). The area in front of Hong-ik University (Hongdae-ap) is known for its hopping nightlife and cafe culture. Indeed, all of Seoul’s university neighborhoods are bustling with cafes, restaurants, bars, and plenty of shopping for college students and everyone else.

Daehangno  When Seoul National University moved from this area in 1975, Marronnier Park was created on what had been the university’s campus. Surrounded by other colleges, the park became a cultural and arts center for students. There are outdoor performances and dozens of small movie theaters.

Gangnam  This modern and affluent area, which means “south of the river,”

BY SUBWAY  Seoul is covered by an extensive and modern subway system, the Seoul Metro (www.smrt.co.kr or www.subwayworld.co.kr). The system is fast, clean, safe, and cheap, and runs frequently. But the best things about the Metro are that it can take you anywhere and everywhere you’ll want to go in Seoul, and the maps and recordings are in English.

There are two important things to remember about the subway. The first is to avoid rush hours (weekdays from about 8–9am and 6–7pm) if you can help it. The second is that the trains stop running around midnight (which is also when taxi fares go up about 20%–50%), so it’s best to plan your late-night travel in advance. Trains start running again at 5:30am.

Although you can buy single fares, it is much more convenient (and cheaper) to buy a pass—it will save you the hassle and time of having to wait in line to buy your ticket. The minimum fare is W1,000 or W900 with a T-money card or Seoul City Pass+, which allows you to ride up to 12km (7.5 miles). Note: Remember to hold onto your ticket or card, as you’ll need it to exit the station, as well.

You can buy or recharge a T-money card (www.t-money.co.kr) at subway stations, at kiosks near bus stops, and at convenient stores displaying the T-money logo. The prepaid card has a base fee of W3,000 and, once purchased, can be loaded in amounts ranging from W1,000 to W50,000 from an automated travel card recharge machine, located at every subway station. It can be used on both buses and subways. Just touch the card to the sensor both when you enter and when you exit a station or bus. When you leave the city, any unused amount on the card, up to W20,000, can be refunded at any subway ticket office. See the Metro map on the inside back cover.

If you’re in Seoul for a brief time, the Seoul City Pass (www.seoulcitypass.com) may be a better option for you. You can board any bus or subway 20 times within a 24-hour period (ending at midnight), including unlimited on/off privileges on the Seoul City Tour Bus (the double-decker tour buses run by the city; see box on p. 65). The pass does not include the red buses bound for Incheon or Gyeonggi-do. One-day passes cost W15,000, 2-day W25,000, and 3-day W35,000. Just touch your card to the sensor...

when you get on or off the bus, or enter or leave the subway. Note: The Seoul City Tour Bus does not operate on Mondays.

Your best option is the Seoul City Pass+ (www.seoulcitypass.com), which functions like a T-money card for tourists, so can be used on both buses and subways. It can be purchased at automatic travel card machines in subway stations, GS25 convenient stores, and select tourist info centers. With a base fee of W3,000, you can add value to the card in any amount from W1,000 to W90,000 at an automated travel card recharge machine, located at every subway station, or from 24-hour convenience stores (for example, GS25, Family Mart, Buy the Way, or MiniStop). You can use the card for purchases at these same convenience stores, where you also can get a refund for any unused amount, at the end of your visit. The card can also be used at Kyobo Bookstore, Lotte World, Daemyung Resort, select vending machines, self-serve lockers, KTL public phones, and a few taxis (the ones that have the card reader). It also provides discounts to some theaters, museums, and restaurants.

Subway system maps are available on all trains and above each station’s ticket window, but I recommend carrying a small map with you (there’s one on the back of this book). Neighborhood maps inside the stations can help you decide which of the many exits to take. The stations are generally clean and have restrooms (some may be the old “squat” style, but look for a stall with a toilet, since there usually is at least one in each bathroom). Tip: Public restrooms are sometimes lacking in toilet paper, so always carry a pack of tissues with you.

BY TAXI You can flag down a taxi almost anywhere in Seoul. There are two types of taxis, and both are generally clean and safe. All taxis are metered with fares determined by distance and time. If you don’t see a meter in the taxi, you probably want to take a different one. On the way to Incheon Airport, passengers have to pay the road toll on top of the meter charge. Sharing a cab with strangers is supposedly illegal, but people do it often during rush hour and after midnight, when subways and buses stop running. Tipping is not necessary, but most passengers round up and let the driver keep the change.

Regular (Ilban) Taxis are usually silver, blue, or white and have a light-up “taxi” sign on top. The base fare is usually around W1,900 and goes up every 2km (1¼ miles), going up ￦100 every 144m (½ mile) or 41 seconds. Most drivers usually don’t speak English, so it’s best to have your destination written down in English (since most Koreans learn written English in school), or, even better, in Korean. Fares for regular taxis increase 20% from midnight to 4am.

Deluxe (Mobeum) Taxis, which are black, cost almost twice as much as the regular taxis, but can be convenient for many reasons. The drivers are trained to serve foreigners and can speak basic English. Especially useful for business travelers, deluxe taxis have free phone service, take credit cards, and will offer a receipt.

BY BUS Unlike the streamlined subway system, Seoul’s buses (☏ 02/414-5005; www.bus.go.kr) can be complicated and confusing for visitors. The good news, though, is that with over 400 bus routes in the city, the buses can take you pretty much anywhere you want to go. A few buses have major destinations written in English on the outside and have audio announcing each major stop in Korean (an occasional English announcement will be made at subway stations or major tourist destinations). However, smaller stops won’t have English-language announcements, the maps aren’t in English, and the majority of bus drivers do not speak English.

There are three types of buses and they run on the same schedule as the subways, daily from 5:30am to around midnight (a few routes go as late as 2am). Bus passes can be purchased at newstands near bus stops in increments of ￦5,000, ￦10,000, or ￦20,000. You can also use your T-money card or Seoul City Pass. Just touch your card to the screen when you enter (at the front door) and don’t forget to touch your card when you exit the bus (through the back door).

Express buses, although slightly more expensive, are usually faster and more comfortable than regular buses, since seats are available. There are fewer stops and they provide air-conditioning (a bonus in the summer). The fare is ￦1,100 and can be paid with tokens, cash, bus passes, or the T-money card.

Ilban (regular) buses (blue) have more stops, but are cheaper than express buses. The fare is ￦1,000 (cheaper for students and children) and can be paid with a token, cash, a bus pass, or a T-money card. Route maps are in English on a few bus stops but not on the buses themselves.

Maeul (“village”) buses (green) shuttle people within short distances in a neighborhood. The green buses cost ￦1,000 and travel only within a district. They usually take exact change only, tokens, bus passes, and T-money cards.

Tip: Whichever bus you take, you can get a free transfer if you take a different bus (or transfer from bus to subway) within 30 minutes from when you get off. Just remember to touch your card to the screen before exiting the bus to get the discount.

BY CAR Driving around Seoul can be a hair-raising experience and is not recommended. However, you can rent a car starting at around ￦70,000 per day, cheaper for multiple days. You have to be at least 21 years old and have an International Driving Permit (IDP), which you can get in your home country before you leave. In the U.S. there are only two authorized organizations that provide IDPs—the American Automobile Association (www.aaa.com) and American Automotive Touring Alliance (☏ 800/622-7070). The best place to rent a car is at Incheon Airport. Check prices at South Korea’s largest car-rental company, Kumho-Hertz (www.kumhorent.com), or Avis (www.avis.co.kr). Be sure to be aware of surrounding traffic and be sure not to drive in the blue lanes (usually on the left), which are reserved for buses only, 24 hours a day. Watch your speed limit on expressways, since there are hidden cameras waiting to catch you and administer stiff fines.
A safer option is to rent both a car and a driver, which costs about W75,000 for 3 hours and W142,000 for 10 hours. Your hotel concierge should be able to help you. Some high-end hotels also have their own limousine services.

ON FOOT  Seoul is virtually impossible to explore by walking alone; however, certain neighborhoods are best enjoyed on foot and some degree of walking will be necessary to explore the city. Be careful when crossing streets, since Seoul drivers are not trained to stop for pedestrians and don’t always stop at red lights. Use pedestrian walkways and underpasses where available. Traffic turning right at lights does not give way to pedestrians, nor does any other traffic unless forced to do so by large groups of people bunching up to cross the road.

Fast Facts Seoul

American Express  The main office in Seoul is in the Gwanghwamun Building, 15th Floor #64-8, 1-KA, Taepyeong-no, Jung-gu (☎ 02/399-2929). You may also need to contact authorizations (which operate 24 hr.) for emergency card replacement (☎ 02/1588-8300) or to contact the general service center (☎ 02/1588-8100).

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs  In Seoul, there are regular ATMs (automatic teller machines) and cash dispenser machines (CDs), which give out cash but don’t accept deposits (see “Money & Costs,” in chapter 3). The CDs in train stations, bus terminals, and department stores are the most foreigner-friendly. Some ATMs/CDs are available 24/7, but many operate from 8am to midnight on weekdays and nonholidays. If you have any trouble using an ATM/CD, call the Korea Travel Phone at ☎ 1330 for assistance in English.

At banks in Seoul, you take a numbered ticket and wait until your number is called. If you want to exchange traveler’s checks, make sure you have your passport. Banking hours in Seoul are from 9:30am to 4:30pm weekdays. Most bank employees speak some English.

Business Hours  Government offices: 9am to 6pm weekdays (Nov–Feb, offices close at 5pm), 9am to 1pm Saturday. Major department stores: Daily from 10:30am to 7:30pm including Sunday. Smaller shops: Hours vary, but usually are about the same as those for department stores.

Currency Exchange  You can exchange money at any currency exchange booth, high-end hotels, and most banks in the city. Many exchange desks are in banks such as Shinhan Bank (main office: 120 Taepyeongro 2-ga, Jung-gu), off exit #8 at City Hall Station when taking subway line 2) and Chohung Bank. Some places that exclusively exchange money are in Itaewon and downtown Seoul. There are also many places at Incheon International Airport, including the first (arrival) floor near the east and west greater halls, and on the third (departure) floor. Hard currency, such as U.S. dollars or British pounds, is easier to exchange than traveler’s checks. Exchanging currency from Asian countries other than Japan is virtually impossible, so make sure to change your money back to dollars or pounds if you’re arriving in South Korea from elsewhere in Asia. Tip: Hold onto your receipt, as it will help you secure a better deal when changing your money back before heading home.
Doctors & Dentists  Most doctors and dentists speak some English, but for medical issues, it’s always best to find one who is fairly fluent. You’ll find English-speaking dentists at the College of Dentistry at Yonsei University, 134 Shinchon-dong, Seodaemun-gu, Seoul 120-752 (☎ 02/2228-8622); Kwanghwamun Ye Dental Clinic, 2nd Floor, Seoul Finance Center, 84 Taepyeong-no, Jung-gu (☎ 02/318-3601); Asan Medical Center, 388-1 Pungnap 2-dong, Songpa-gu (☎ 02/222-4384); or Seoul National University School of Dentistry, San 51-6, Sillim-dong, Gwanak-gu (☎ 02/760-3390). You can also visit dentists at international clinics, but they’ll be more expensive. For English-speaking doctors, inquire at your hotel (higher-end places often have them on call) or see “Hospitals,” below.

Embassies & Consulates  The following embassies are in Seoul: U.S., 32 Sejongno, Jongno-gu, Seoul 110-710 (☎ 02/397-4114; http://seoul.usembassy.gov); U.K., Taepyeong-no 40, 4 Jeong-dong, Jung-gu, Seoul, 100-120 (☎ 02/3210-5500; http://ukinkorea.fco.gov.uk/en; take the subway to City Hall Station and take exit 3 or 12; open Mon–Fri 9:30am–noon for fee paying services, 2–4:30pm for general inquiries); Canadian, 16-1, Jeong-dong, Jung-gu, Seoul, 100-662 (☎ 02/3455-6000; www.korea.gc.ca; take the subway line 1 to City Hall Station and take exit 1; open Mon–Fri 8–11:45am and 12:45–4:30pm); and Australian, 11th Floor, Kyobo Building, 1 Jongno 1-ga, Jongno-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/2003-0100; http://www.southkorea.embassy.gov.au; open Mon–Fri 8:30am–5pm, though various services have different operating hours).

Emergencies  Dial 112 for the police. Dial 119 for the fire department and medical emergencies, also 1339 for medical emergencies (operators can understand basic English, but you should find someone who can speak Korean for more complicated situations). Hotel staff can also arrange for a doctor or ambulance.

Hospitals  International clinics charge more than regular hospitals, but you’ll be sure to find a doctor who speaks English. The following is a list of hospitals with international clinics: Samsung Medical Center, Ilwon-dong, Gangnam-gu, Seoul 135-710 (☎ 02/3410-0200; http://english.samsunghospital.com); Sinchon Severance, 134 Sinchon-dong, Seodaemun-gu, Seoul (☎ 02/361-6540); Asan Medical Center, 388-1 Pungnap 2-dong, Songpa-gu (☎ 02/2224-3114); Hannam-dong International Medical Center, Hannam Building, 5F, 737-37, Hannam-dong, Yongsan-gu (☎ 02/790-0857); Seoul Foreign Medical Center (☎ 02/796-1871); Yeouido Catholic Medical Center, Yeouido-dong 62, Yeongdeungpo-gu (☎ 02/789-1114); CHA General Hospital, 650-9 Yeoksam-dong, Gangnam-gu, 135-081 (☎ 02/558-1112); Soochunhyang Hospital, 657, Hannam-dong, Yongsan-gu (☎ 02/709-9881); and Seoul National University Hospital, San 56-1, Sillim-dong, Gwanak-gu (☎ 02/760-2890).

Internet Access  Internet service is offered in public places such as airports, train stations, and bus terminals in Seoul. Internet cafes and PC bahngs (which means “rooms”) are easy to find throughout the city. These rooms are filled with computer terminals where you can rent an Internet-connected PC. Many PC bahngs are open 24 hours and are located on higher floors of buildings, where rents are cheaper. To find one, just head for a commercial area and look up.
Although Seoul leads the world in Wi-Fi connectivity, the city’s hot spots aren’t very traveler-friendly. Since the majority of Wi-Fi hot spots are owned by previously government-controlled Korea Telecom (KT), it’s best to get a prepaid Wi-Fi card, available at the KT Plaza at Incheon Airport (in the middle of the second floor; daily 7am–8pm). Prepaid cards come in W3,000 and W12,000 denominations and expire after a few months. The former is good for 60 minutes of access within a 24-hour period, while the latter allows unlimited access. Most hotels and love motels offer free high-speed Internet access.

Lost & Found The police lost and found number is 02/2299-1282; the train station lost and found is 02/755-7108; the airport lost and found is 032/741-3114.

Maps & Books The Korea Tourism Organization (KTO), B1, KTO Building (T2 Tower), 40, Cheonggyecheonno, Jung-gu, Seoul 100-180 (02/729-9497, ext. 499; http://english.tour2korea.com; daily 9am–8pm), publishes a variety of free brochures and maps, as well as providing transportation reservations and other traveler’s assistance. They have tourist information booths at most major tourist areas throughout the city, including Namdaemun, Dongdaemun, Insadong, Myeongdong, and Itaewon.

The best selection of English-language books in Seoul can be found at the Bandi & Luni’s bookstores or at one of the Kyobo Mungo bookstores (see the “Shopping” section for more info). Unfortunately, there are no maps in English that show the streets of Seoul, and the ones available for purchase aren’t very detailed. Your best bet is to pick up a map from one of the KTO locations.

Pharmacies Simple Western remedies are most likely to be found in the lobbies of international five-star hotels. There are no 24-hour pharmacies in the city, but you can generally find one or two pharmacies in any given neighborhood. Most display a large green cross symbol, but all of them have the Korean word for medicine (葯) on their windows.

Police Dial 112 for the police. There are also police stations and booths throughout the city, clearly marked in English.

Post Office There are numerous post offices across the city, including the central one in Myeongdong. There is also one at the southeastern corner of the Gwanghwamun intersection and one in Itaewon, near the end of the main street. They’re open Monday to Friday 9am to 6pm (until 5pm Nov–Feb). There are also several Federal Express/Kinko’s locations throughout the city, including one in the COEX Mall and one near Seoul Station.

Visitor Information For tourist information in English anywhere in the city, just dial 1330 and someone will help you. If you have a problem with your hotel, or anything else for that matter, you can also call the Tourist Complaint Center (02/735-0101).

Weather For daily weather forecasts, check www.weather.com, or tune your TV to KBS at 8:30am, noon, or 9pm. Although the news will be in Korean, it’s easy to figure out the weather from the icons.
3 WHERE TO STAY

A wide range of accommodations is available in Seoul, with everything from very inexpensive guesthouses and yeogwan (low-end inns) to high-class luxury hotels.

When you're booking a room, make sure to specify that you want a Western-style room if you prefer to sleep in a bed. Korean-style ondol rooms have thick blankets (yo) for you to use to sleep on the floor. The floors are usually heated during cold weather, so make sure not to leave any electronics or anything plastic on the floor.

Outside of high-end hotels, most accommodations require that you take off your shoes in the room's foyer, so you may want to bring slippers. Bathrooms usually don't have shower curtains and are designed so that the water flows into a drain on the floor. Most places don't have cheaper rates for singles (many places have only double or twin rooms anyway), so if you want to save money, travel with a friend.

Yeogwan and love motels (p. 48) can be found all over the city, but if you're looking for one near downtown, there is a good grouping of them near Dongdaemun. They all range from W30,000 to W40,000 per room. If you're really on a tight budget and don't mind sleeping in a large room with a bunch of strangers, you can stay in a jjimjilbang (“steam room” bathhouse) for about W7,000 a night.

Whether you stay in one of over a dozen world-class hotels or a yeogwan, you'll most likely be treated to Korean-style hospitality and friendly service.

Lotte Hotel ★ Located in the same area as the Westin Chosun, the Lotte Hotel is one of the city's largest hotels. Originally built in 1973, the second of the hotel's two towers was added later and connected by a trilevel mall. A world-class hotel, it is central to the financial district and convenient to the subway. Rooms are not huge, but they are more than serviceable. Unfortunately, surcharges seem to be added on for everything from use of the fitness center to Internet access. On the plus side, the efficient and outgoing English-speaking staff is available 24 hours a day. Rooms were undergoing major renovations when I last visited the location, so I can't attest to the quality of the updates. However, at the time of writing, the rooms in the newer wing were more expensive but definitely of higher quality than those in the older wing.

Seoul Plaza Hotel ★ Centrally located right across the street from city hall and the financial district, this high-end business hotel has great facilities, including a wonderful fitness center and pool. The rooms are pleasant and tastefully decorated, but the beds are a bit on the hard side. Rooms on higher floors cost more, but you get a great view of the city. The hotel's restaurants and bar are nice, though a bit overpriced—some of them were just being renovated at press time, so prices may go up even more. Even the in-room minibar is good only for those on an expense account (if your boss won't balk at a W10,000 Coke). You'll get fabulous service with very attentive and professional staff.
Tips
Navigating a Korean Bathhouse

When you first enter a bathhouse, take off your shoes. Either the staff will give you a key or you can take one out of one of the shoe lockers. Usually a number will be assigned to you on your receipt. You then go to your respective gender locker rooms, where you'll find a locker with the same number as your shoe locker (your key will work on that locker as well). Be sure to wear your key around your ankle or wrist so you don't lose it. You should then take off everything (including jewelry and watches, so consider leaving yours at your hotel) and head for the shower facilities. Koreans start going to public baths since they are young, so no one cares about walking around naked in the locker rooms, and you shouldn't feel self-conscious either. Remember, the odds of running into someone you know are pretty low.

Everyone is expected to wash completely before going into the communal hot bath, and you'll be provided with shampoo and shower gel (along with clean towels, brushes and combs, lotion, hair dryers, and even hair spray) if you've forgotten yours. After a good soaking, most Koreans scrub themselves raw with a scratchy towel that feels like sandpaper. You can also try one of the dry or wet saunas as some places have both, or cool down in the cold bath. There is no time limit—even when you're soaked, scrubbed, and thoroughly relaxed—so linger as long as you'd like. If you visit a water park or swimming pool, all of the above applies, except you'll change into your swimsuit before you go out to the public pool or water areas, and you'll wash both before and after you go in the water.

Westin Chosun Hotel ★★★ One of the best hotels in the city, this Seoul classic was built in 1914, but has been recently renovated, and it’s conveniently located in the financial district, with easy access to the subway. The rooms are a bit small for the price, but very efficient and high-tech, with high-speed Internet access and a computer, should you need it. Beds are quite comfortable and there are even antiallergenic carpets or wood floors for those of us who are sensitive to such things. Don’t forget to leave your shoes by the door before you go to sleep and they’ll be waiting for you the next morning, newly shined. The English-speaking concierge and staff are incredibly friendly and helpful. Spa and gym facilities are modern, and if you’ve forgotten to pack your workout clothes, you can pick up complimentary attire in the locker room. The restaurants are a bit on the expensive side, but this is one of the few places where you can get genuine Western-style cuisine. You’ll pay extra for higher floors (it’s a 20-story building), but it’s worth the splurge if you want a view.

Koreana Hotel ★ A pleasant hotel with an equally pleasant staff, this 14-story building is centrally located—it’s within walking distance of Cheonggyecheon, Deoksugung, and city hall. Rooms are spacious enough, with off-white decor and wood furnishings. The work desk is a bit small, but they do provide in-room Internet access (for a fee). Beds are a bit on the hard side, but comfortable. The hotel’s sauna is available for men only, unfortunately.

Somerset Palace Seoul ★★★ This well-located residence hotel (it’s about 3 min. on foot to the Anguk subway station and walking distance to the U.S. Embassy, Insadong, and the Kyobo bookstore) has all the amenities of a small apartment. More like staying in a condo than a hotel, the rooms come complete with efficiency washer and dryer, which is super-convenient if you’re planning a long stay (they require a 7-night minimum stay here anyway). Staff are friendly, but don’t have the extensive knowledge you would get from a dedicated concierge. Bedrooms are decent size, with TVs there and in the living room area. There is also a kitchen and dining area and good-size bathrooms, especially for the price. Rooms are nicely decorated and kept well cleaned (housekeeping is off Sun).

Sofitel Ambassador Seoul ★★ A popular hotel in a central location, the facilities and rooms are modern and clean. The rooms aren’t luxurious or particularly spacious, but the beds are regularly updated, the furnishings are tasteful if simple, and the amenities are up-to-date and well kept. It’s a dependable hotel for those not on an expense account. The eager-to-please English-speaking staff are knowledgeable and can make great recommendations. Added bonus: It’s close to Namsan, and within walking distance of Itaewon and Namdaemun market.

Guest House Korea One of the cheapest places you can sleep in Seoul, this guesthouse has dormitory-style rooms with shared bathrooms and private lockers, or inexpensive single and double rooms with private bathrooms. Facilities are fairly clean, but tired. Still, it’s hard to beat the price.

Seoul YMCA You can’t get any more basic than these rooms. The narrow beds are pretty hard, although the rooms are clean and serviceable. Still, you can get more comfortable accommodations in a yeogwan or love motel. But if you’d rather stick with something familiar, this is not a bad place to spend a few nights. The front desk and guest rooms are all located on the eighth floor.

The Shilla Seoul ★★★ Located on the slopes of Namsan, this 16-story hotel is übercontemporary, with minimalist decor. The location is a bit inconvenient if you want to be in the middle of it all, but it’s great for those looking for a quieter place to stay. Rooms are spacious and comfortable, with goose-down comforters on the beds. There are excellent fitness and spa facilities, and the staff is incredibly polite and professional, almost to a fault.

Grand Hyatt ★★ If you visit this hotel, perched on top of Namsan, be sure to ask for a city view. The renovated rooms make the best use of the limited space. Beds are the usual hard, Korean-style ones, and bathrooms are also on the small side, although they’re quite efficiently designed. Fitness facilities and sauna are state-of-the-art and the restaurants offer great service and good food, though both come at a premium. The staff speaks excellent English and is very polite.

Millennium Seoul Hilton ★★ Conveniently located at the foot of Namsan, it’s within walking distance of Namdaemun Market, but also close to a park and some green areas. Although the building is a bit dated, the rooms and facilities are still upscale. Beds are firm but comfortable, and the rooms are well maintained and tastefully decorated. Bathrooms are a good size, especially given the fight for space in the city. Staff are pleasant, relaxed, and helpful.

Hotel Prince Seoul ★★★ With a nice location in the middle of exciting Myeongdong, this is a solid hotel for those on a budget. The beds are softer than those you’d find in most hotels in South Korea, and rooms are tidy, though not spacious by Western standards; bathrooms are state-of-the-art. Overall, it’s a good value for the central location and modern amenities. Although it’s in the middle of the city, noise isn’t much of a problem, which is a nice bonus. Hotel staff don’t speak much English, but do their best to be helpful.

Ibis Myeongdong ★★★ Value Set in a fantastic location near the shopping district of Myeongdong, this hotel is an exceptional value for the price. The rooms are spotless, contemporary, and comfortable. The decor is simple, with firm beds, and there is good water pressure in the showers. All rooms are on higher floors, so noise isn’t a problem and you still get a view of the action below. The staff is wonderful, but not all of them speak great English. The only peculiar thing is that the lobby is on the 19th floor, but it’s a minor inconvenience.

Metro Hotel Myungdong ★★ Finds Recently renovated, the rooms are comfortable and a decent size, especially given the price and location. Decor is standard beige, but not tacky. The free Internet access is an added bonus.

Myeong Dong Guesthouse Though rooms are pretty basic and spare, this guesthouse is conveniently located and good for those who are looking to save money but don’t want to stay in a love motel. They have both Western-style rooms with beds and Korean-style ondol rooms, which are a tad bit smaller. The bathrooms are tiny, but facilities are clean and well kept by the Parks, an amiable middle-aged couple who own the place. Mr. Park speaks good English and is eager to answer questions and make recommendations.

Fraser Suites Insadong ★★★ Kids Value This all-suite hotel is conveniently located in the old yangban neighborhood of Insadong. Fantastic for families or for long stays, you can choose from one-, two-, three-, or four-bedroom suites, all of which come with kitchens, living rooms, dining rooms, and a small study area. There are not dishwashers in the rooms, but have no fear—the housekeeping staff does the dirty dishes. The hotel doesn’t have a great restaurant, but there are so many options within walking distance that it’s not a problem. The complimentary breakfast is serviceable, but it’s rare to have breakfast included at all in Seoul. The kids will appreciate the playroom and the free DVD rentals from the front desk. There’s no wireless, but there is plug-in high-speed Internet service.

Doulos Hotel ★★★ Although the rooms are a bit small, they are serviceable and kept clean at this hotel hidden down a small alley near Insadong. Rooms have hardwood floors with dark wood, clean-line furnishings. English-speaking staff are warm and friendly and go out of their way to be helpful. Hotel Seokyo  A standard business hotel with no frills, it is convenient to the Hongdae area. Although its facilities are starting to show wear and tear, they do keep their accommodations clean. ITAEWON

Hamilton Hotel  The best thing going for this hotel is its strategic location in the middle of Itaewon. Still, the public areas have been renovated to update this old standard, and while the rooms are a bit dated, they’re relatively spacious, given the price. Be prepared, though: The beds are almost militaristic in their firmness (no down comforters here!). The staff speak English well, which is not a surprise given the hotel’s location.

GANGNAM

Expensive
Grand InterContinental Seoul ★★★  A top-notch hotel, it’s located right next to the COEX Mall and the World Trade Center. Don’t judge a hotel by its exterior, since the interior is much nicer than you would expect by looking at the bland exterior of the building. The lobby, the rooms, and the facilities are all spacious and impeccably clean. The friendly staff speaks excellent English and provides wonderful service. The remodeled rooms are definitely contemporary without feeling too impersonal—they’re tastefully done in dark wood. The beds are a bit on the firm side, as they are at most Korean hotels, but here they’re a notch above, comfort-wise. Bathrooms are spacious—again, a rarity in South Korea. The restaurants are overpriced, even for a hotel of this caliber, but offer good Western and Korean fare.

Park Hyatt Seoul ★★★ An elegant, well-designed hotel, the 24-story Park Hyatt has nice facilities. Also convenient to the COEX Mall, it has all of the modern amenities you would expect from one of Seoul’s newer properties (it opened in 2005). Beds are extremely comfortable, and the lovely floor-to-ceiling windows come with room-darkening shades. The bathrooms are superb, with granite counters and extravagantly deep tubs for soaking away the day’s stresses. The rooms are modern in design, with dark wood and stone furnishings and accents. If you’re sensitive to noise, you may want to request a room facing away from the main street, since not all rooms have great soundproof windows. The English-speaking staff are notably efficient.

JW Marriott ★★ This 35-story contemporary hotel, connected to the COEX Mall and the subway, caters to the area’s business travelers. Rooms are efficient and relatively spacious with nice furnishings. Beds are comfortable with foam pillows and down comforters. Bathrooms are high-tech with seat warmers and a separate tub and shower. Fitness center and sports facilities are top-notch, with a large pool that’s good for laps. The English-speaking staff are accommodating and helpful.

Sheraton Grande Walkerhill Hotel ★★ Overlooking the Han River and nestled in hills surrounded by woodlands, this hotel feels very far away from the commotion and excitement of Seoul. That’s because you are indeed far away, which is a problem if you want convenient access to downtown areas. But if you want to get away from the noise of the city, then this is the hotel for you. The lobby is spacious, the facilities are top-notch, and the English-speaking staff is warm and welcoming. The rooms, though not lavish, are decorated with contemporary style. The restaurants are a bit pricey, but the menus are creative. There is no direct subway access, but the hotel provides free shuttles to two nearby subway stops; otherwise, you’ll have to take a taxi.

W Seoul Walkerhill ★★★ Like W hotels in other cities, Seoul’s is the hippest joint in town. Located away from the downtown area in Achausan like its sister, the Sheraton Grande, it’s great for people who want to get away from it all but still be near a major metropolis. Characteristic of their youthful spirit, the “Wonderful” rooms have round beds, round chairs, and even a round bathtub, while other themed rooms have the usual angular varieties. Beds are comfortable with great sheets in spacious rooms. Bathrooms have rain-type shower heads and separate tubs. Rooms and public areas are nicely decorated. The staff is professional and helpful.

Co-op Residence Ohmok ★★ Value Located about 5 minutes from Yeouido, these accommodations are good for those staying 2 weeks or longer. From studios to two-bedroom units, all have kitchens, dining areas, and a desk. It’s like renting your own apartment in the city; units are relatively spacious with efficient and modern bathrooms. Prices are very reasonable and staff are very responsive if you have any problems. They have locations in other areas, including Sincheon and Euljiro.

4 WHERE TO DINE

Seoul has more eateries per square mile than most large cities in the world, and there is a great deal of turnover. With so many places opening and closing, it’s hard to keep an accurate count. All manner of Korean food from the affordable to the incredibly expensive can be had. However, if you’re looking for familiar Western-style dishes and menus in English, you’ll have a harder time finding suitable options. That said, if you head over to Itaewon or the restaurants in some of the upscale hotels, you can get delicious world-class Western-style cuisine. It’s also getting easier to find a juicy hamburger or just a good old-fashioned steak. Vegetarians will find an increasing array of options as dining has become a healthier affair in South Korea.

American chains like Pizza Hut, Starbucks, and Krispy Kreme have popped up all over the city, but don’t expect the menus you find at home. You’ll get a pizza, but it’ll arrive with pickles and peppers, and the pasta may have squid in it. You’ll also pay more to make up for the fact that many Western-style ingredients have to be imported. If you want an authentic experience and don’t want to spend all your cash, you can stick with purely Korean dishes and still have a different experience at every meal. Tip: Most of the higher-end, non-Korean restaurants charge an additional 10% VAT on your meal, while most Korean restaurants price their items with the VAT included.

The only thing that may take getting used to is the fact that Koreans don’t distinguish between breakfast, lunch, and dinner. So, it’s rice, rice, and more rice all day with little besides noodles to break up the monotony. You’ll be hard-pressed to find good ham and eggs first thing in the morning, and free breakfasts are a rare find, even in luxury hotels. You will find bakeries on practically every corner, but don’t expect the bread and pastries to taste the way they do at home. That’s not to say they taste bad, but while Korean-style bakeries may describe themselves as “French” on their signs, their goods don’t offer the same flavors you’d find in Paris.

Food trends here come and go. Seoul is the origin of the Pinkberry/Red Mango yogurt craze, after all. The good news is that there’s great food in every neighborhood, and for all you night owls, plenty of 24-hour places where you can just point and buy what you want. Some places have Korean “fast-food” courts where you can get a meal for about ₩5,000. You place your order at the counters, but pay at the cash registers. They’ll call your number when your order is ready.

The best places to find good street food are near Namdaemun or Dongdaemun markets, in front of boutique shops in Myeongdong, and in Insadong’s main drag. If you’re not such an adventurous eater but are still budget-conscious, head on over to the basement floors of any of the multistory department stores found all over the city. There you’ll find plenty of items on display where you can just point and buy what you want. Some places have Korean “fast-food” courts where you can get a meal for about ₩5,000. You place your order at the counters, but pay at the cash registers. They’ll call your number when your order is ready.

Value  Street Food & Other Cheap Eats

Affordable Korean food is everywhere in Seoul, and pojang machas (tent-covered super-casual eating joints) are pretty ubiquitous. At practically every bus stop and subway station, you’ll find an ajumma (middle-aged woman) stirring up a spicy red swamp of ddeokbokgi or frying something on a stick. Some of the tastiest options are hoddeok (pan-fried dough cakes stuffed with brown sugar and spices), gim-bap (rice rolled in sheets of seaweed with a variety of different fillings), and beung-uh bbang (goldfish-shaped “cookies” filled with red bean—they also come in other shapes).

JONGNO

In the past few years, cuisine in Seoul has gotten more sophisticated as chefs work up new innovations with traditional Korean fare or other Asian dishes. The Seoul Finance Center has become a hub for gourmet restaurants. Its basement floors are filled with practically anything a gourmand would desire. You can spend days trying each of the places here and not leave for weeks (though your pocketbook will be considerably lighter).

Very Expensive

N’Grill WESTERN  Located at the top of the N Seoul Tower on Namsan, this pricey but lovely rotating restaurant is best known for its view of Seoul (make sure to go on a clear day). It’s a romantic place to enjoy an overpriced steak dinner while enjoying the city lights as the place spins 360 degrees every 48 minutes. Set courses include your choice of entree (steak, fish, or lobster), an appetizer, dessert, soup, and a beverage. At this popular place for anniversaries and birthday celebrations, be sure to book a reservation well in advance—your hotel will likely be happy to make the reservation for you. The accommodating staff here speak English very well.

100-177 Hoehyun-dong 1-ga, Jung-gu. ☎ 02/753-2563. Reservations required. Set-course meals W55,000–W75,000. AE, MC, V. Daily 11am–11pm. Subway line 4 to Myeongdong Station (exit 2 or 3) and walk toward Lila Elementary School for about 10 min. You’ll see Palgakjeong, where you can take a cable car.

Expensive

Chamsutgol ★★★ Finds KOREAN BEEF In a city where galbi (beef short rib) restaurants span multiple levels, it’s difficult to decide which one is the best. But once you’ve tasted the galbi at this place, this may fast be one of your favorites (though it’s not much in the atmosphere department). Just like most other Korean places, they bring you the raw meat to cook on your tabletop grill, but here they provide real sutbul (wood charcoal)—a real treat as it adds a smoky flavor. One of the signature dishes here is the galbitang (stewed beef ribs), but you’d better arrive early because they make only 40 orders of it per day. Their naengmyeon (cold buckwheat noodles) and dolso bibimbap (stone pot mixed rice) are also excellent.

19 Mugyo-dong (2nd floor of the Chaeyuk Hwaegwan Building), Jung-gu. ☎ 02/774-2100. Entrees W20,000–W40,000. MC, V. Daily 11:30am–10pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Subway line 1 to City Hall Station (exit 4).

Ganga ★★ INDIAN Located on the second basement floor of the Seoul Finance Center building, Ganga serves wonderful garlic naan, fragrant tandoori dishes, and curries that will make you forget you’re not in Mumbai. Although it may seem a bit overpriced for Indian food, it’s so difficult to get good Indian cuisine in Seoul that you can hardly complain.

84 Taepyeong-no 1-ga, Jongno-gu (level B2). ☎ 02/3783-0610. Reservations recommended. Entrees W15,000–W35,000. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–3pm and 5:30–10pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Subway line 1 to City Hall Station (exit 4) and walk 2 blocks, or line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 5) and walk 1 block.

Wood & Brick ★★ ITALIAN Just like the name says, this two-story restaurant is made of wood and brick, and you’ll find fantastic pastas and simple European fare. Capriccio appetizers, sandwiches (try the boccadillo!), and soups are also excellent. Weekend lunch hours are usually bustling with staff from nearby foreign embassies. There is also a fantastic bakery here. This original location is just across the street from the Brunei embassy in the Gwanghwamun area. A second location is across the street from Jaedong Elementary School.

1-6 Shinmun-no 1-ga, Jongno-gu. ☎ 02/735-1157 or 735-1160. Another location at 5-2 Jae-dong, Jongno-gu. ☎ 02/747-1134. Reservations not necessary. Entrees W25,000–W40,000. MC, V. Daily noon–10pm. Subway line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 7). 2nd location: subway line 3 to Anguk Station.

Moderate

Ipanema ★★ Value BRAZILIAN What’s a South American churrascaria doing in the middle of Seoul? I’m not sure, but I wasn’t complaining as the waitstaff cooked the meat next to my table (the chef and some of the waiters are from Brazil). At this heaven for meat lovers, you’ll get chicken drumsticks, sausage, roast beef, lamb, pork, and turkey, already flavored and smoky good. There are other things on the menu, but it’s difficult to resist the churrascaria. The salad bar, unfortunately, has a distinctly Korean feel, with soba noodles and an odd corn salad taking the place of Western-style fare. Ipanema has the atmosphere of a beer hall; it’s not the place for a romantic dinner—but no one seems to care as they’re too busy being carnivores.

27-11 Jung-dong, Jongno-gu (on the road behind Deoksugung). ☎ 02/779-2756. Reservations not necessary. Entrees W15,000–W23,000. AE, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–3pm and 5:30–10pm. Subway line 1 to City Hall Station.

Jangchu ★★ KOREAN SEAFOOD  For almost 3 decades this place has been serving up their famous jang-uh gui (grilled eel) to a clamoring clientele. The spicy eel is done with special spices (including cinnamon, of all things) and you probably haven’t tasted anything quite like it. You won’t find much in the way of decor here—the dining room is efficient, though more than a bit boring. Not that the diners (who all seem to work in the area) seem to mind. Look for the squat brick building with a large white sign.
Although the sign is only in Korean, you can’t miss the picture of a cartoon eel wearing a chef’s hat.

Behind the Chungmuro Geukdong Building. ☎ 02/2274-8992. No reservations. Entrees W10,000– W15,000. MC, V. Daily 11:30am–10pm. Subway line 3 or 4 to Chungmuro Station (exit 5), turn right at the Geukdong building, and turn left at the 2nd street; Jangchu is on your right.

Nanxiang Steamed Bun ★★ CHINESE  Shanghai’s famous 100-year-old dumpling restaurant has two branches in South Korea. One of them is (where else?) in the Seoul Finance Center (the other is in Myeongdong). Although you can get dumplings much cheaper in other parts of the city, you’ll never be able to beat the juiciness of the pork buns, or enjoy them in as sophisticated surroundings as these. There are other items on the menu, but the dumplings are what made this place famous. Try one of their signature pork dumplings, or such Korean-inspired specialties as chicken and ginseng, or pork and pine mushroom.

84 Taepyeong-no 1-ga, Jongno-gu.  ☎ 02/3789-8074. Dumplings W8,000–W15,000. MC, V. Daily
11am–10pm. Subway line 1 to City Hall Station (exit 4) and walk 2 blocks, or line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 5) and walk 1 block.

Tosokchon ★★ KOREAN  You can’t miss this old-fashioned building near Gyeongbokgung. Famous for their samgyetang (soup of whole chicken stuffed with rice, ginseng, dates, and more), Tosokchon is usually super-crowded during mealtimes, but the restaurant is large enough that you won’t have to wait long. They also serve an outstanding jeonggigi tongdak (whole roasted chicken) and tasty pajeon (green onion flatcakes), if you’re not in the mood for a hot bowl of healthy goodness.

85-1 Chebu-dong, Jongno-gu.  ☎ 02/737-7444. No reservations. Entrees W12,000–W30,000. No credit cards. Daily 10am–10pm. Subway line 3 to Gyeongbokgung Station (exit 2), walk up the street until you get to the GS25 convenience store and turn left.

Inexpensive
If you’re looking for the perfect meal on a sticky, hot summer day, nothing beats a cold bowl of naengmyeon, a dish that originated in North Korea. The best place in town to get it is in “Naengmyeon Alley” in the Ojang-dong neighborhood. Take Seoul subway line 2 to Euljiro 4-ga Station (exit 8), walk toward Jung Ward office, turn left, and you’ll find the alley across from Mukjeong Park. Most of the restaurants in the area serve mul naengmyeon (cold buckwheat noodles in beef broth) or bibim naengmyeon (spicy mixed buckwheat noodles) for about W7,000 a bowl. One good place is Ojangdong Hamheung Naengmyeon (90-10 Ojang-dong, Jung-gu; ☎ 02/2267-9500), whose interior

Baekje Samgyetang ★★★ KOREAN CHICKEN A great place to get samgyetang, the stuffed chicken soup that’s eaten during the hottest days of summer (though it’s lovely in the winter as well). The chefs here use only young spring chickens, which have the tenderest meat. This oh-so-healthy meal is best enjoyed with some samsang (ginseng wine). So sit down on one of the floor cushions, pull yourself up to one of the shiny wooden tables, and prepare to sweat the summer heat (or warm the winter blues) away with the hot broth.

50-11 Myeongdong 2-ga, Jungs-gu. ☏ 02/776-3267. No reservations. Entrees W60,000–W150,000. MC, V. Daily 9am–10pm. Subway line 4 to Myeongdong Station (exit 2); walk 5 or 6 blocks and it’s on your left, across the street from the Lotte Department Store.

Din Tai Fung ★★ CHINESE More upscale than some of their outlets elsewhere (there are now 25 branches in eight countries), the one here still draws a crowd. In this small, streamlined spot, done up with modern dark wood furnishings and red Chinese-style accents, you’ll find a full menu of dumplings, soup, noodles, and rice dishes. But the absolutely-do-not-miss-it dish is the juicy pork dumplings. Skip them at your peril. The chefs also make good xiaolongbba (small steamed pork dumplings) as a nod to Korean cuisine. Look for the red sign with white Hanja (Chinese characters) and the huge photo of dumplings on the side.

Dine in the Sky at Top Cloud

Located on the 33rd floor of the Jongno Tower (Millennium Plaza) building, Top Cloud (1-1 Jongno 2-ga. ☏ 02/2230-3000. Subway line 1, Jonggak Station), run by the owners of the Shilla Hotel, is an elegant restaurant with the best view in all of Seoul. The food is expertly prepared and the steak is particularly outstanding (they do bill themselves as a “bar and grill,” after all). It’s a great place for a romantic night out or to impress a date. Start out your meal or end it with a cocktail in the bar with live jazz daily from 7:30 to 11:30pm. The lunch set menu costs W45,000, and dinner set menu is W108,000; buffet prices are lower. Reservations are recommended, and arrive early and request a window seat. It’s open daily noon–2:30pm (buffet closes at 2pm) and 6–10pm (buffet closes at 8:30pm); the bar is open noon–midnight. Free 3-hour parking is available in the building.

Mirinae Makguksu ★ KOREAN Although the name of the restaurant says noodles, this spot also serves a good and affordable ssambap (rice with lettuce and other leaves for wrapping) and the excellent house specialty makguksu (mixed somen noodles). The noodles are fresh and served in generous portions, as they should be at any good Korean noodle joint. And while the food is great, the setting will leave something to be desired if you’re looking for an elegant night out—people come here to eat, not linger for the atmosphere (there isn’t any).

is cafeteria-style at best, but they do have good broth. The name out in front isn’t in English, but look for the large blue sign with white lettering.
Myeongdong Halmae Nakji ★★ KOREAN SEAFOOD  In a neighborhood where restaurants come and go faster than a teenager can change her outfits, it’s amazing that this place has been here for over 50 years. As the name suggests, the halmuhni (grandma) specializes in nakji (squid) and she doesn’t skimp on the spice. Be forewarned: This is the kind of spicy that sneaks up on you, and your mouth will be on fire by the end. It’s a very casual neighborhood restaurant, with Korean-style floor tables and not much in the way of decor.

Pepper Lunch ★ Kids JAPANESE BEEF  A popular chain imported from Japan, the talented chefs here cook their steaks in at least 300°F (149°C) heat, making sure that the juices stay inside and keeping the meat tender. The beef fried rice is also hard to resist. The vibe here is a little on the fast-food side, but this spot is definitely more upscale than your regular burger joint.

Inexpensive Gongxi Myonkwan ★ CHINESE  A new addition to the Chinese dumpling scene, this import offers less expensive xiaolongbao than other restaurants. If you want dumplings and jjajangmyeon (Korean-Chinese noodles with black-bean sauce), this is the place. There are about a dozen other dishes on the menu as well.

Myeongdong Gyoja ★★★ KOREAN  If you want Korean-style mandu (dumplings) or kal guksu (handmade “knife” noodles), this is the place for you. For over 3 decades, this spot has been making chicken stock from bones boiled for 6 hours. The chefs here also make lovely bowls of bikim guksu (spicy mixed noodles) and kohng guksu (noodles in cold soybean soup), all at a bargain. The deep red and white sign is only in Korean, but you can’t miss the mouthwatering photos of dumplings decorating the outside of this casual restaurant.

Myeongdong Hamheung Myeonok ★★★ Finds KOREAN  This is yet another Seoul spot where the food outperforms the decor. It’s a great place for a casual meal, but not a great place to take someone you’re hoping to impress. Still, for over 35 years, the owners have been making their famous naengmyeon. The noodles here are made with sweet potato and the broth is made from boiled oxtails. The excellent hwae (raw fish) naengmyeon is eye-wateringly spicy.
Teumsae Ramyeon ★★ KOREAN  Looks can be deceiving: This hole in the wall has been serving excellent food to regulars for over 20 years (many of whom have left behind notes on the walls and ceilings). Specialties are the extra spicy ramen, the ggoma gimbap (mini–seaweed rice rolls), and bbalgaeddeok (a “red” rice-cake dish). Hidden in a small alley is this run-down original that has spawned a line of instant noodles and chain stores throughout South Korea. Don’t be fooled by the menu on the wall—there’s an extra zero on the prices just to get the customers talking. There are no English menus, unfortunately, but you should be able to order by using the language appendix at the back of this book.

2nd floor in the alley near the Hite Beer Plus, behind the U-Too Zone building. ☎️ 02/756-5477. No reservations. Entrees ₩1,000. No credit cards. Mon–Sat 10am–9:30pm; Sun 11am–8:30pm. Subway line 4 to Myeongdong Station (exit 10).

INSADONG

Insadong is a good area to get a traditional Korean meal. Many of the restaurants are down small alleys, tucked away from the main drag. There are also traditional tea shops and great coffeehouses (although they actually let a Starbucks open up here, they insisted that the sign be in Korean), where you’ll pay as much for the ambience as the beverage.

Expensive

Sanchon ★★★ KOREAN VEGETARIAN  Sanchon serves fantastic, traditional temple fare in the charming courtyard of an old-fashioned house. At least a dozen different vegetarian banchan (side dishes) are available, including herbs, kimchi, roots, seaweed, and flatcakes. Dine on the early side if you want to avoid the expensive seating for the traditional folk music and dance performance. The menu changes according to what’s in season and the dining room is cozy, with traditional wooden tables, exposed wood beams, and traditional Korean paintings lining the walls. There is also a second location in Goyang-gu with a more varied, slightly less expensive menu. Both are popular with tourists, so the staff all speak English.

Stop by Sanchon’s cookie shop, Sanchon Saramdeul, on Insadong’s main drag. They have a nice array of traditional Korean “cookies.” Although some of them can be a bit pricey, most are relatively inexpensive at ₩4,000 to ₩5,000 a bag.

Moderate

Bakssi Mulgo-own Jebi ★★ KOREAN  With its exposed wood interior and distinctly “country” feeling, even the name is folksy—it’s taken from a Korean folk tale and means “the swallow that brought the gourd seed.” You’ll find good down-home food here; definitely try the hang-ali sujebi (dough flake soup in a stone bowl). If you’re just looking for a light meal or snack, try the insam dongdongju (ginseng rice wine) with the haemul pajeon (seafood and green-onion pancake).

In the alley across from the Woori Bank. ☎️ 02/723-3200. No reservations. Entrees ₩5,000–₩10,000. No credit cards. Daily 9am–3am. Subway line 3 to Anguk Station.

Cha Iagi ★ KOREAN  Don’t be fooled by the name, which means “tea story.” Cha Iagi is actually known for its delicious nokcha daenamu tongbap (rice and green tea
Insadong Street Food

If you get hungry while browsing the ceramics and paper wares on Insadong street, there are plenty of places to grab a quick bite from one of the many street vendors here, while barely breaking your stride. An unusual sweet snack is kkultarae (sometimes called dragon’s or king’s beard), sold from an open cart. They look like fine white strands of silk wrapped into balls, but are in fact edible threads made from honey, pine nuts, chestnuts, peanuts, and cornstarch. My favorites are the peanut and almond. The cart is open daily 10am to 9pm. Farther down on the same side of the street, you’ll find another cart, Sambodang Hoddeok, selling little dough cakes made with glutinous rice and stuffed with black sugar and peanuts. Delicious at only ₩700 each, once you’ve tried them, you’ll know why there’s such a long line. They’re here most days from 10am to 8:30pm (closed the first and third Mon of each month). You’ll also find men in traditional clothing selling yut (Korean hard “taffy” made from pumpkin), various rice cakes, and Korean cookies. On hot days, you may find the vendor selling shikhae slushee, an icy version of the traditional sweet fermented rice beverage, for ₩3,000.

Sadong Myeonok ★★★

KOREAN DUMPLINGS Although this well-known favorite is tucked away in a small alley (near the Sudo Pharmacy), you can’t miss an ajumma or two making mandu in the window. Especially on chilly evenings, people line up for the restaurant’s famous mandu guk (dumpling soup) with dumplings the size of fists, but the bibimbap (mixed rice bowl) is really good, too. If it’s cold outside, I suggest trying the beosut jeongol (spicy mushroom hot pot), which is big enough to warm up both you and a friend.

Insadong 5-gil, Jongno-gu. ☎️ 02/735-7393. No reservations. Entrees ₩5,000–₩18,000. No credit cards. Daily 10am–10pm. Subway line 3 to Anguk Station.

SAMCHEONG-DONG

It was only in the past decade that the South Korean government let businesses develop here, and that they did. Contemporary fusion restaurants have opened up in remodeled hanok (traditional houses) alongside established old favorites. To get to the main drag, take subway line 3 to Gyeongbokgung Station (exit 5). Walk around to the other side of the palace (or cut through if you’re visiting anyway). Then walk across the street to the main road, turn left, and walk about 400m (1,300 ft.) until you get to the three-way intersection, where you’ll turn right. This is where the main road for Samcheong-dong starts. Or just grab a taxi and ask the driver to take you to Samcheong-dong.
Very Expensive

Yongsusan ★★★ KOREAN FUSION  This restaurant features Korean food served in a contemporary setting. The house specialty is Korean “court” food, just like the royals used to eat. With elegant service and fantastic food made with quality ingredients that don’t compromise on flavor, this is a great spot for dinner. There are several locations throughout Seoul, including in Seocho-gu, Taepyeong-no, and Cheongdam. 118-3 Samcheong-dong, Jongno-gu. (02) 722-7006. www.yongsusan.com. Reservations recommended. Set lunch menu, 25,000–48,000; set dinner menu, 38,000–128,000; a la carte dinner entrees, 28,000–45,000. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily noon–3pm and 6–10pm. Subway line 3 to Anguk Station, up the hill from Gyeongbokgung.

Inexpensive

Buchon Kalguksu ★★ KOREAN NOODLES  A great place in the area to get kalguksu and mandu, they have good soup stock (made from boiling the bones seemingly forever), and even the small kimchi and side dishes that come with it are tasty. 84 Sogyeok-dong, Jongno-gu. (02) 734-5302. No reservations. Entrees W6,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–9:30pm. Closed holidays. Subway line 3 to Anguk Station (exit 1), a 15-min. walk on Samcheong-dong main road.

Cheongjinpoja ★ Finds KOREAN DUMPLINGS  If you’re looking for a cheap, quick meal or snack of dumplings, you’re in luck, since that’s all they serve here. They won’t win any interior design awards, but their steamed or fried dumplings, great for a light lunch or afternoon snack, will keep you satisfied. 127 Sogyeok-dong, Jongno-gu. (02) 739-6086. No reservations. Dumplings W3,000–W4,000. No credit cards. Tues–Sun 10am–10pm. Closed holidays. Subway line 3 to Anguk Station (exit 1), a 10-min. walk on Samcheong-dong main road.

Samcheongdong Sujebi ★★ KOREAN  This is the restaurant that started the area’s reputation as a place for good food. The sujebi (dough flake soup) served here is so good that people line up all day to get a bowlful. The dough is made by hand and floated in an anchovy-based soup with potatoes, clams, carrots, zucchini, and onions. They also... make fantastic, homemade jeon (flattcakes)—I recommend trying the nokdu jeon (mung bean flatcake).

102 Samcheong-dong, Jongno-gu. ☎️ 02/735-2965. No reservations. Entrees ₩5,000–₩8,000. No credit cards. Daily 11:30am–9pm. Subway line 3 to Anguk Station (exit 1).

Seoulsuh Duljjaero Jalhaneun Jip ★★★ 🟢 KOREAN The name of this place is a mouthful in either language (it means the “second best in Seoul”) and it’s almost bigger than its small space can handle. Since 1976, it has served only traditional teas and danpatjook (sweet red-bean porridge), good for a light meal or snack. Wash it all down with a cup of chilled sujeong-gwa (ginger-cinnamon tea).

28-21 Samcheong-dong, Jongno-gu. ☎️ 02/734-5302. No reservations. Danpatjook, ₩5,000; traditional teas, ₩4,000–₩5,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–10pm. Closed holidays. Subway line 3 to Gyeongbokgung Station (exit 5).

Nolita ★ Kids 🟢 KOREAN The name is short for “north of Little Italy” and the place boasts a wide variety of dishes from there—pastas to thin pizzas and more. Its cozy interior and hearty dishes make for an enjoyable dinner. There’s another location in Gangnam (take exit 7 from the subway and it’s on the basement floor on your right-hand side) and in Myeongdong (on the second floor across from the Myeongdong department store).

On the 2nd and 3rd floor of the building behind Eunha beauty salon. ☎️ 02/312-4443. No reservations. Entrees ₩9,000–₩15,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–10:30pm. Subway line 4 to Ewha Women’s University Station (exit 4), and walk toward the main gate of Ewha U.

Tanto Tanto Kids 🟢 ITALIAN I wouldn’t recommend a salad here (they are a bit on the boring side), but the pastas are wide in variety and hearty fare. The most popular menu item is the spaghetti with creamy tomato sauce that’s a bit rich but still tasty. The fun interior and menu cater to the college-age crowd in the area.

407-27 Seogyo-dong, Mapo-gu. ☎️ 02/336-6992. No reservations. Entrees ₩10,000–₩22,000. MC, V. Tues–Sun 11:30am–10:30pm. Subway line 6 to Sangsu Station (exit 1).

Uhmeohni-wa Godeung-uh ★★★ 🟢 KOREAN TRADITIONAL The name, “Mother and Mackerel,” should tell you everything about this cozy joint tucked away at the end of an alley. The owner serves up tasty Korean fare the way someone’s mom might, and the godeung-uh jeongshik (mackerel meal) is not to be missed. In the summer, kids line up for the kohng guksu.

407-19 Seogyo-dong, Mapo-gu. ☎️ 02/337-0704. No reservations. Entrees ₩6,000–₩18,600. No credit cards. Mon–Sat noon–5am; Sun 1–10pm. Closed 1st and 3rd Mon of the month. Subway line 6 to Sangsu Station (exit 1).

Guksijib ★ KOREAN If you’re looking for a quick-and-dirty noodle meal, this is the place. The noodles are perfect for those on a budget, while not compromising on flavor. Unfortunately, neither the menu nor the sign is in English, but you can just point and ask for any of the dishes that look good. Items include kohng namul bap (mixed rice with bean sprouts), mandu guk, and bibim naengmyeon.

358-38 Seogyo-dong, Mapo-gu. ☎️ 02/336-5235. No reservations. Entrees ₩3,000–₩4,000. No credit cards. Mon–Fri 11am–8:30pm; Sat–Sun 11am–10:30pm. Subway line 2 to Hong-ik University Station (exit 6).
WHERE TO DINE SEOUL

Although American fast-food chains have popped up all over Seoul, it’s still difficult to get a great non-Korean meal in other parts of the city. Although prices will be a little higher than normal, Itaewon is one of the few areas where you can find authentic international fare. Most of the good restaurants are found in the alley behind the Hamilton Hotel.

Moderate

Arvorig ★★★ FRENCH The only place to get a good crepe in all of South Korea, both the sweet and savory crepes here are outstanding. With just under a dozen variations, if you don’t see what you like, they’ll make one special order for you. If you don’t fancy a buckwheat crepe, you can opt for one of the yummy quiches, galettes, or salads and wash it all down with some lightly alcoholic cider. Located just up the street from the fire station, it’s a cozy place with just six tables. Arvorig also has a good selection of mostly French wines, so stop for a glass at the wine bar on the first floor.

123-1 Itaewon-dong, Yongsan-gu. ☏ 02/795-2465. Reservations not necessary (unless you’re bringing a large party, since the place is quite small). Entrees W15,000 and under. AE, MC, V. Daily noon–2:30pm and 5:30–11:30pm (Sun 10:30pm). Subway line 6 to Itaewon Station (exit 2).

Gecko’s Garden ★★ EUROPEAN ECLECTIC A garden oasis in the middle of the city, Gecko’s eclectic menu borrows from all over Europe. It’s a great place for a relaxing lunch, a group dinner, or even just a glass of wine, while sitting at one of the outdoor bistro tables in the courtyard or rooftop garden. There are pastas, steaks, paella, and even tiramisu on offer. The Sunday barbecues are great fun.

116-6 Itaewon-dong. ☏ 02/790-0540. www.geckosterrace.com. Reservations not necessary. Entrees W11,000–W32,000. 10% VAT and 5% service charge not included. AE, MC, V. Subway line 6 to Itaewon Station (exit 1).

Le Saint Ex ★★★ FRENCH One of the few genuine French bistros in Seoul, run by a French chef (I’ve heard French conversations coming from the back kitchen). Located in the alley behind the Hamilton, it has a warm, cozy space inside. The menu changes every Tuesday and Friday, but expect the usual bistro menu items, like chicken with pommes frites, onion soup, or mussels, done in an honest, unpretentious way. As you’d expect, they have a decent wine list and a good selection of desserts that they tempt you with on display.

Itaewon-dong, Yongsan-gu. ☏ 02/795-2465. Reservations not necessary. Lunch set menu W16,000; dinner for 2 plus 2 drinks W80,000–W100,000. AE, MC, V. Daily noon–3pm and 6pm–midnight (last order 9:30pm); brunch menu on weekends. Subway line 6 to Itaewon Station (exit 1).

Pattaya ★★ THAI Of the large number of Thai places in town, Pattaya serves up the tastiest, most authentic dishes, all without any fuss. The place has nice curries and a wonderful selection of three-course set menus for lunch or dinner.

Ruby Edwards’ Tartine Café & Bakery ★ BAKERY If you’re looking for a good old-fashioned tart or some crusty European bread, follow your nose to this tiny bakery cafe tucked in a side alley. Their specialty is pie, but you can also get cheesecake or a nice cup of hot chocolate. Don’t get comfortable, though, since table space is tight and the clock is ticking on your 1-hour limit.

Santorini GREEK  I wouldn’t say this was the best Greek food I’ve ever had, but if you’re craving some souvlakia or tzatziki, this is one of the few places in the country where you can get it. The owner and the chef are Greek, so you know you’ll get good food and strong Greek coffee to end the meal. While a bit overpriced, it’s a nice change from the regular kimchi and rice, and the outdoor seating on the second-floor balcony is fun when the weather is good.

Shigol Bapsang ★ TRADITIONAL KOREAN  Decorated like an old country home, Shigol Bapsang (which means “country table”) is known for the generous number of banchan that come out with the meals. The larger the group, the more side dishes you’ll get to sample, so it’s best to come with more people. Still, even as a meal for two it’s quite a deal.

Hannam-dong, Yongsan-gu. ☎ 02/795-9019. No reservations. Set menu W7,000. No credit cards. Daily 24 hr. Subway line 6 to Itaewon Station (exit 2), a 15-min. walk, just past the Itaewon Hotel.

Smokey Saloon ★★ Kids BURGERS  Reminiscent of a good neighborhood joint found in New York City, this old standard serves up some of the best burgers in Seoul. It seems an unlikely place for a guy who graduated from Cornell’s hotel management program, until you learn that he comes from a long line of burger lovers. There’s not much ambience, and the place has only six tables (two outside, hence the long wait). Still, there is a whole list of burgers, like the Cowboy or the Big Islander, though for my money you can’t go wrong with the Classic.

Gorilla in the Kitchen ★★★ FUSION  One of the better celebrity-owned restaurants to hit the Seoul dining scene, Bae Yong-joon’s restaurant is all about healthy cooking. There’s no butter in the kitchen and salt is kept at a minimum. Good for you doesn’t mean bad tasting, however. The steak sandwich, for example, is a tasty lunch, and healthy even with a Very Berry smoothie on the side.

650 Sinsa-dong, Gangnam-gu. ☎ 02/3442-1688 (Korean/English). Reservations recommended. Menu items W12,000 and up; smoothies W10,000. AE, DC, MC, V. Weekdays 11am–11pm; weekends 10am–11pm. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 3), then take a taxi to Dosan Park; when facing the front gate of the park, go right.

Gran Gusto ★★★★ ITALIAN  A creative Italian menu served in an elegantly furnished, understated dining area with wooden floors and contemporary accents? What’s not to love? Pastas are well prepared, especially the seafood pastas (such as anchovy or mackerel and leek pastas), although some of the tomato-based sauces can be a bit pedestrian. Servers are attentive and polite. Your best value is to go for the weekday lunch
Tips

Bakeries

When visiting bakeries in South Korea (like most Asian countries), remember that looks can be deceiving. That gorgeous chocolate cake beckoning from the display case may have the consistency of a dried sponge. Or those delectable-looking baguettes arrayed so nicely in the basket generally lack the fabulous crispy crust and the chewy inside you’d expect—instead, they’re spongy, and the flavor is unique, to say the least. Many of the Korean-style patisseries will have delicious-looking confections; they just might not taste as good as they look.

That doesn’t mean that there aren’t any great bakeries in town. Here are a few bakeries that make good pastries and breads. The best for overall baked goods is the bakery/deli in the Grand Hyatt Hotel, 747-7 Hannam 2-dong, Yongsan-gu (☎ 02/799-8167). They have great muffins and cakes (that actually taste as good as they look), and their sandwiches are delicious because they’re made on good bread. Speaking of bread, if you want a genuine baguette, stop by Wood & Brick in Gwanghwamun or Jae-dong (p. 82). For a fantastic pain au chocolat or croissant, go to the Paris Croissant (☎ 02/594-4227) across from the subway station in Gangnam. There are many Paris Croissants and Paris Baguettes as part of this chain, but unfortunately not all of them have the same menu.

Todamgol ★★★ KOREAN Just because the place is owned by actress Kim Hye-Jeong doesn’t mean that the food just looks good. On the contrary, this popular restaurant serves excellent traditional Korean in generous portions. There is a nicely prepared hanjeongshik (Korean traditional meal) with a good array of side dishes. The yeolmu bibimbap (mixed rice dish with ponytail radish) and other down-home favorites are also very tasty. There are two other locations, one in Cheongdam-dong and the other in Twickeon-dong, Gwangju-si, Gyeonggi-do.

The Gaon ★★★ KOREAN South Korea’s famous TV chef Yoon Jong-jin scoured the country for a year for quality ingredients before opening this restaurant (whose name means “the center”). The dedication and time taken to prepare these traditional dishes with a contemporary flair shows not only in the taste and quality of the ingredients, but also in the presentation. The menu is inventive, yet maintains the authenticity of Korea’s culinary traditions (and there’s an outstanding wine list, to boot). But as much as the food will impress you, it really is one of the best presentations of Korean food you'll experience, thanks in part to the china the meals are served on. A dinnerware manufacturer uses the restaurant to showcase its wares, so the plates—specifically designed to complement the meticulously prepared cuisine—are as much an attraction as the food.

631-23 Shinsa-dong, Gangnam-gu. ☏ 02/3446-8411. Reservations recommended. Set menu W28,000–W45,000 lunch, W60,000–W130,000 dinner. 10% VAT and 5% service charge not included. AE, DC, MC, V. Daily noon–2:30pm and 6–10pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 2); turn around and walk about 450m (1,475 ft.) along the main street until you reach the 1st major intersection. Cross the street and turn right at the Soil Station, walk another 650m or so (2,130 ft.), and turn left at the Heights Park building. The restaurant is next to Dosan Park.

Miyozan ★★ JAPANESE SUSHI  A wide variety of beautifully presented sushi and rolls are offered on different plates, with various colors indicating the prices. If you want a particular type of fish, you can ask and the chef might prepare it for you—that is, if the fish is fresh that day. They have the regular items you’d expect from a sushi joint, as well as seasonal favorites. The fruit puddings are a light end to the meal.

1st floor of the Hanyang Town building, Gangnam-gu (in the “Rodeo St.” area). ☏ 02/3445-1075. Reservations not necessary. Priced by item, W1,300–W12,000 per serving. AE, MC, V. Daily 11:30am–2:30pm and 5–10pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 5).

Samwon Garden ★★ KOREAN BARBECUE  Owned by the parents of pro golfer Grace (Ji-Eun) Park, this restaurant has been serving up galbi and bulgogi (sliced rib-eye) for over 30 years. One of the largest spaces in the city, the rustic setting and the open dining area add to the experience. Although this may not be the best or cheapest galbi joint, it’s all about the ambience. It’s a great place for first-timers to try Korean barbecue, where you cook your meat on the tabletop. Outdoor tables are perfect for an evening drink in the summertime. There is another location in Daechi-dong.

623-5 Sinsa-dong, Gangnam-gu. ☏ 02/548-3030. www.samwongarden.com. No reservations. Entrees W25,000–W52,000. AE, MC, V. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 2) or Sinsa Station (exit 1). It’s easiest to take a taxi to Dosan Park from there.

Mealtop ★★ KOREAN DESSERT  A popular sweet treat in the sweltering summer months is pot bingsu (shaved iced red-bean dessert), and this place makes one of the best. Worthy of a splurge, their version has just the right combination of ice, bean, milk, and fruit, with just a couple of rice cakes to add that extra chewy texture.

429 Apgujeong-dong, Gangnam-gu (5th floor of the Hyundai department store). ☏ 02/5470-6800. No reservations. Pot bingsu W6,000. No credit cards. Daily 10:30am–9pm. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 6).

Slow Food ★ KOREAN/WESTERN FUSION  For a leisurely lunch, sit at one of the outdoor tables here and watch the world go by. The menu features a mix of Korean and Western dishes—you can get fried rice or a sandwich. The ddeokbokgi are delightful, and the crab avocado sandwich is fantastic. They also have coffee and wine, if you just fancy a drink. Slow Food is located in front of the main entrance to Dosan Park, which makes for a nice stroll afterward.

631-34 Sinsa-dong, Gangnam-gu. ☏ 02/515-8255. Reservations not necessary. W12,000–W15,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–2am. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 2) or Sinsa Station (exit 1). It’s easiest to take a taxi to Dosan Park from there.
Inexpensive

Gustimo ★★★ (Kids) GELATO  This spot was the first to introduce gelato to Seoul and it’s been wildly popular ever since. Freshly made flavors are piled high in glass display cases, taunting you with their wonderful colors—it’s nearly impossible to choose one. The standard chocolate and strawberry are the most popular, and the mango and dolcisimo (brownie and pecan) are quite good, too. But I suggest trying one of the distinctly Korean flavors like ginseng, sweet potato, or red bean. You can splurge and get an additional cone for just ₩500 more.

548-5 Shinsa-dong, Gangnam-gu.  02/543-9475. No reservations. Regular cup (you can get up to 4 flavors) ₩4,500. No credit cards. Daily noon–11pm. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 5), and then a 10-min. walk.

Sawolae Bolibap ★★ KOREAN  What used to be a humble dish has become popular as a “well-being” dish at this Apgujeong restaurant. The bolibap (barley rice) is served with a nicely arranged array of namul (vegetables) and small banchan such as kimchi that complement it well. There is also a lovely gamja jeon (potato flatcake) on offer. The interior has nice dark wood and contemporary decor, but the prices are still affordable.

610-5 Gujeong building, Shinsa-dong, Gangnam-gu.  02/540-5292. No reservations. Entrees ₩7,000. MC, V. Daily 11:30am–10pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 2), walk a bit, and you’ll see the restaurant’s sign on your left (it’s yellow with black letters and a green bar underneath with the name in English).

OTHER PLACES TO DINE

Very Expensive

Namu ★★★ PAN-ASIAN  This contemporary Pan-Asian restaurant, located in the W Hotel, serves up Korean- and Japanese-influenced dishes with a distinctive flair (you’ll see why this restaurant is called Namu, which means “wood” in Korean, once you see the decor). It’s one of the city’s trendiest dining venues, and dismissing it as “fusion” would be a mistake, since each of the dishes maintains its authentic flavors. There is a pretty fabulous sushi and sashimi bar, but if raw fish isn’t your thing, try the marinated cod or ginger-soy grilled loin. Keep in mind that the set menus change with the seasons and with the whims of the chef. Come early or linger after dinner for a cold sake from Namu’s own cellars in the wraparound bar, called Liquid.

21 Gwangjang-dong, Gwangjin-gu.  02/779-2756. Reservations recommended. Lunch set menus ₩68,000 or ₩88,000; dinner set menus ₩90,000–₩140,000; a la carte items also available. AE, MC, V. Daily 11am–11pm. Bar until 1am.

Honadon ★★★ Finds Value KOREAN BBQ  Seeing a guy standing out front cooking ribs over a mesquite fire is a good sign that you’re in for some good Korean barbecue. They par-cook the ribs outside and then bring the baby racks upstairs to your table to finish cooking. Specializing in black pig flown in from Jeju-do, their menu also includes beef ribs and naengmyeon noodles. One small order is enough to feed two to three people, so bring friends and big appetites. Ask them for some special garlic and they’ll bring over garlic slices suspended in oil in an aluminum foil bowl that gets nicely caramelized over the flames.

337-2 Chang 5-dong, Dobong-gu.  02/900-9800. Reservations not required. Noodle dishes ₩7,000; meat ₩14,000–₩54,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–11pm. Plenty of parking. Subway line 4 to Suyu Station, then take a taxi from there.
Mitaniya ★★★ JAPANESE  Located in the “Little Tokyo” area of Seoul, Ichon, this nondescript joint serves authentic Japanese pub options in the basement of the Samik shopping mall. They don’t take reservations and it can get quite crowded, but the fresh noodles and tempura are worth the wait. They have a handful of locations in Seoul, including in Apgujeong (on the fifth floor of the Hyundai department store) and in Gangnam (on the second floor of the Samsung Tower Palace arcade). The Ichon location is convenient when visiting the National Museum.

Samiksang-ga (basement floor), Ichon, Yongsan-gu.
(02) 797-4060.  No reservations.  Menu items W3,000–W35,000.  MC, V.  Daily 11am–10pm.  Subway line 1 or 4 to Ichon Station (exit 4).  Walk to the main road from the station and turn left.  The restaurant is down a narrow staircase on the right side, across the street from the school.

Tombola ★ Kids ITALIAN  For just plain good pizzas and pastas, this spot is an excellent choice.  It’s a cozy place with brick walls and a warm atmosphere.  The pastas are rich but not overbearing, and the pizzas are made with lovely Italian-style thin crusts, but plenty of cheese.  Just add W5,000 to the price of any pizza or pasta dish and you’ll also get salad or soup, coffee or tea, and a lemon sherbert for dessert.

106-8 Banpo-dong, Seocho-gu.
(02) 593-4660.  Reservations recommended.  Entrees W12,500–W22,000.  MC, V.  Daily noon–2:30pm and 3:30–10:30pm.  Subway line 7 to Gosok Terminal Station (exit 5), a 15-min. walk.

5  EXPLORING SEOUL

Seoul has an unusual amalgam of both traditional attractions and modern locations crowded into the city. It’s best to plan your visit around an area, head there via subway, and then explore the neighborhood on foot.

Note: Street names aren’t widely used in Seoul (or most of South Korea for that matter). Some major streets may have street signs, but in general streets (and especially smaller alleyways) have no mark. More commonly, people will always give you directions starting from a famous landmark or a store in the area. When traveling by taxi, it’s best to know the gu (district) and the dong (ward) where you’re headed.

PALACES

Because this city has been the capital of Korea for centuries, it’s natural that the city would have the country’s most elaborate palaces and historic buildings. An important part of Korea’s intricate history, these palaces tell stories of fallen kings and centuries-old dynasties, and hold more mysteries within their walls than we can ever know.

Changdeokgung ★★★  This palace was built in 1405, the fifth year of the reign of Joseon King Taejong, as a separate palace adjacent to the main one, Gyeongbokgung. Located to its east, it is also known as Donggwol (the east palace), while the Gyeongbokgung is the north palace. Changdeokgung was also burned down the same time the main palace was in 1592, during the Japanese invasion. Reconstructed in 1609 to 1611, it served as the seat of royal power for 300 years until Gyeongbokgung was rebuilt at the end of the Joseon Dynasty. Left in disrepair afterward, the palace was renovated in 1907 and used again by King Sunjong, the country’s last king. Although he lost his crown in 1910, Sunjong continued to live here until his death in 1926. His widow, Queen Yun, kept the palace as her home until she died in 1966. The last royal prince died here in 1970 and the last royal family member lived in the palace until her death in 1989.
The palace grounds are divided into administrative quarters, residential quarters, and the rear garden. The existing administrative section includes Donghwamun (the front gate and the oldest existing palace structure), Injeongjeon (the throne hall), and Seonjeongjeon (the administrative hall). The residential area includes Huijeondang (the king’s bed chamber), the Daejojeon (the queen’s bed chamber), the royal kitchen, the infirmary, and other annex buildings.

Designated a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1997, Changdeokgung’s rear garden has remained a resting area for the royals since the time of King Taejong. Sometimes called Huwon, Bukwon, and Geumwon, it was named Biwon (or “Secret Garden”) by King Kojong and it has kept this name since. Some of the trees in the garden are now over 300 years old and represent the height of Korean garden design and landscaping techniques.

Changgyeonggung Located east of Changdeokgung, Changgyeonggung was a summer palace. Built in 1104 and called Sunganggung, the palace was given its present name in the 1390s, when the first Joseon King lived here while waiting for Gyeongbokgung to be built. Destroyed in 1592, it was reconstructed in 1616, with the majority of the buildings rebuilt in the 1830s after a terrible fire. During the Japanese occupation, a modern red building was built in the grounds and it was turned into a zoo and botanical gardens. The zoo was removed, though the botanical garden remains, and the palace was completely restored from 1983 to 1986.

Unlike the other palaces in the city (which all have north-south orientations), Changgyeonggung has an east-west orientation, as was customary during the Goryeo Dynasty. The houses face south, but the office of the king, the Myeongjeongjeon, faces east. Because the ancestral shrines of the royal family are located in the south, the gate couldn’t face south, according to Confucian customs. The largest building in the complex is Tongmyeongjeon, which was built as the queen’s quarters. The pond, Chundangji, located in the north of the complex, was constructed during the Japanese occupation—before that, much of the land now underwater had been a rice field that the king tended.

From spring to autumn, various events (tea ceremonies, reenactments for the king’s birthday, marriage ceremonies) are held at the palace on select weekend days. Check with the palace administration or the Korea travel phone 1330 for additional info.

Deoksugung The smallest of the city’s palaces, Deoksugung is located at the corner of one of downtown Seoul’s busiest intersections. It is known for its stone wall and the walk along its outside. Deoksugung (“Palace of Virtuous Longevity”) originally belonged to Wolsandaegun, the older brother of Joseon Dynasty King Sejong, but later became a proper palace when Gwanghaegun (Prince Gwanghe) took the throne in 1608. The east wing was for the king and the west wing was reserved for the queen. In 1900, Jeonggwanheon was the first Western-influenced building to be added to the palace grounds. The red-and-grey brick structure features massive columns, ornate balconies, and a green tile roof. King Gojong, who reigned from 1863 to 1907, enjoyed having coffee and spending his free time there. The back of the building had a secret passageway, which still exists, to the Russian Emissary. The other Western-style building is Seokjojeon, which was designed by a British firm in 1905, when the Japanese occupied Korea. It was completed in 1910 and became a Japanese art gallery after King Gojong’s death in 1919. After Korean independence from Japan, a joint commission of Americans and Russians held meetings there in 1946 in an attempt to reunite North and South Korea. The east wing of Seokjojeon now serves as a gallery for Palace Treasure exhibitions, and the west wing is part of the National Modern Arts Center.

5-1 Jeong-dong, Jung-gu. 02/771-9952. www.deoksugung.go.kr. Admission W1,000 adults, W500 youth, free to seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Admission includes general entry to art museum. Tues–Sun 9am–9pm (last entry 8pm). Subway to City Hall Station, line 1 (exit 2) or line 2 (exit 12).

Gyeongbokgung ★★ Of the five grand palaces built during the Joseon Dynasty, this was the largest and most important one. Two years after King Taejo took power in 1394, he ordered the construction of this palace. It is said to have had 500 buildings when it was first built and it served as the home of Joseon kings for the next 200 years. During the Japanese Invasion (1592–98), the palace was burned, not by the invaders, but by disgruntled palace workers who wanted to destroy records of their employment as servants. The palace was later restored in 1865 under the leadership of Heungseon Dae-wongun during the reign of King Gojong. Using the original foundation stones, over 300 structures were completed by 1872, but at a great cost to the Korean people. Sadly, King Gojong used the palace for only 23 years after its reconstruction—he fled to Russia when his wife, Queen Min (p. 99), was murdered on the palace grounds. A year later the king moved into Deoksugung.

During the Japanese colonial period, all but 10 structures were demolished and only a fraction of its structures remain, including Gyeonghoeru Pavilion (which is on the W10,000 note), Geunjeongjeon (the imperial throne room), and Hyangwonjeong Pond. The main gate to the palace, the Gwanghwamun, is currently under renovation and should be completed in October 2010. Free English tours are available in front of Hon-gremun (the entrance gate) at 9:30am, noon, 1:30pm, and 3pm.

The National Palace Museum is located south of the Heungnyemun (gate), and the National Folk Museum ★★ is located on the east side, within Hyangwonjeong. Entry to the palace includes admission to the museums as well. The National Folk Museum is well worth a visit, especially if you want an insight into Korean culture and the daily lives of Koreans throughout the country’s long and turbulent history. I especially liked exploring the complex of dioramas, pagodas, and model homes on display in the museum’s outdoor court. The museum itself is made up of three interconnected buildings—there are maps available to help you explore.

The National Palace Museum was created in 1992 and is filled with relics collected from archaeological digs at Gyeongbokgung, Changdeokgung, Changgyeonggung, and Jongmyo. Focusing on the Joseon Dynasty (1392–1910), it’s the perfect place to learn about Confucianism (once Korea’s main religion) and ancestral rites that were passed on through the royal line. The displays give insight into the lives of Joseon royalty and palace architecture as well.

1 Sejong-no, Jongno-gu. 02/732-1931 (Korean only). Admission W3,000 adults, W1,500 youth, free to seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Apr and Sept–Oct Mon and Wed–Fri 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb
Gyeonghuigung ★

Constructed in 1616, this was the fifth palace built in the city and one of the best royal grounds for a nice stroll—the name means “Palace of the Shining Bliss.” The palace was designed following the slant of the surrounding hillside and an arched bridge used to connect it to Deoksugung (which is now across the street). The complex used to house over 100 buildings, but most of them were destroyed and the site was reduced by half when the Japanese built Gyeongseong Middle School during the colonization period. A major restoration project was started in 1988 and the palace was reopened to the public in 2002.

The Seoul Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Seoul Historical Museum now occupy parts of the original site. The Seoul Metropolitan Museum of Art has both permanent collections and temporary exhibits of contemporary South Korean artists, including painters, potters, sculptors, and photographers. The Seoul Historical Museum exhibits artifacts and documents chronicling the history of Seoul from the Stone Age to

The Joseon Dynasty

Lasting a whopping 518 years, the Joseon Dynasty was by far Korea’s longest-lived monarchy. Founded in 1392 by King Taejo, Joseon supplanted the once powerful Goryeo Dynasty (918–1392) that brought Buddhism to prominence on the peninsula. But the Goryeo had spent most of the 13th century fighting invading Mongols, and the Joseon Dynasty seemed to bring peace to the region. Relations with neighboring China improved, and Korea’s borders were extended to their current position (if you include North Korea).

But the Joseon Dynasty had problems of its own. By the mid-1400s, Confucianism—which includes a strict social hierarchy, with the king at the pinnacle and royalty just below—had taken the place of Buddhism, and many peasants and farmers saw their rights evaporate. Commoners felt the yangban—an educated, aristocratic class that often served as artists, teachers, and government advisors—took advantage of their positions, grabbing land and charging high rents to tenant farmers. Confucianism stresses the importance of education, and the Joseon leaders did build schools. In the 1500s, peasants began a series of revolts against excessive taxes and unfair social conditions.

Still, the Joseon Dynasty managed to survive—in part because the country was forced to contend with invasions from Japan and China. By the time peace treaties were in place with both, in the mid-1600s, Korea had turned inward and become known as the Hermit Kingdom. But by the late 1800s, corruption and inefficiency had led to a severe weakening of the Joseon’s ruling structure, and instability in the rest of Asia left Korea vulnerable to outside influence. Indeed, Japan forced Korea to become its protectorate in 1905. And when Japan formally annexed the country in 1910, they forced King Sukjong, the last of the Joseon leaders, to step down.
today. Opened in 2002, the majority of its collection is from the Joseon Dynasty, but other exhibits display the landscape of the city, lifestyles of Seoul’s citizens, its culture, and its development as a metropolis.

An experiential tae kwon do program is held on the grounds three times daily and a tae kwon do performance is held at 2pm Wednesday through Saturday.

1 beonji, Sinmun-no 2-ga, Jongno-gu. Free admission to palace, but fees charged for Seoul Historic Museum on-site. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm Mar–Oct, 9am–5pm Nov–Feb. Subway line 7 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 7) and walk straight. Alternatively, take line 5 to Seodaemun Station (exit 4). Walk straight to the Naeil newspaper office, turn right, and then walk 10 min.

Unhyeongung  The childhood home of King Gojong (26th king of the Joseon Dynasty), Unhyeongung is smaller and architecturally different from other palaces. It is a representative home for noblemen during that period. Under the orders of the Queen Mother Jo, the small residence was renovated into a palace with four gates. Gojong’s father and regent, Heungseon Daewongun, continued to live at the palace even after his son became king. Like the other palaces in the city, Unhyeongung was damaged during the Japanese colonization period and the Korean War, so it is a much smaller version of its former glorious self. The small row of rooms on the right (when you first enter) is the Sujiksa, the quarters for the servants and guards. A bit to the left is the Norakdang hall, used for welcoming guests and for holding important events such as birthday parties and wedding ceremonies. In fact, a re-creation of the 1866 wedding of King Gojong and Queen Myeongseong is held here Saturdays from late April to late October from 1 to 3pm. Korean classical music and performances are held on Sundays from April to October at 4pm. Entrance to the palace is free starting from 1 hour before performances are held.

The Last Empress
Queen Min (1851–95), aka Myeongseong Hwang-hu or Empress Myeongseong, was the first official wife of Joseon King Gojong. Alternately remembered as a jealous queen or a national heroine, there is still controversy over her role in history. What is known for sure is that she had considerable political power and was aiming to increase diplomatic ties with Russia after the Sino-Japanese War of 1894–95. Not bad for a girl who was orphaned at the age of 8 and who went from being a member of an impoverished branch of the royal family to being queen. But since the war between China (which lost) and Japan was fought in large part over which country would have more influence over Korea, Min was taking a risk. She hoped the Russians would help keep the Japanese out of Korea.

Unfortunately, Min’s risk didn’t pay off. Recognizing that Min’s power threatened their plans to annex Korea, the Japanese hired a group of assassins who broke into Gyeongbokgung during the early-morning hours of October 18, 1895, and stabbed three different women they thought might be the queen. Once they had confirmed that one of the three was indeed Queen Min, they took her corpse into the forest and burned it. The assassins were then given safe passage to Japan and found not guilty in a Hiroshima court, which cited lack of evidence as the reason for its verdict. By 1905, Japan was in control of Korea.

HISTORICAL SITES

Cheongwadae (The Blue House) ★ Known for the azure color of its tiled roof, Cheongwadae serves as the office of the president of South Korea. Blue tiles were reserved for kings and still denote a place of authority. The presidential mansion is to the side of the main building; next door is the Yeongbingwan, which serves as the guest house for visiting dignitaries. On-site are Chunchugwan (the Spring and Autumn Pavilion), Nokjiwon (Green Grass), Mugunghwa (Rose of Sharon) Valley, and the Seven Palaces from the Joseon Dynasty. Although the complex itself is tightly guarded, the Nokjiwon and Mugunghwa Valley areas are open to the public. Video cameras, large bags, pets, and food are prohibited. Photos are allowed only in designated areas. A nice walk in the area starts at the east gate of Gyeongbokgung, goes past the Blue House, and continues to Samcheong-dong Park.

1 Sejong-no, Jung-gu. ☏ 02/771-9952. www.president.go.kr. Free admission, but tour reservations are required. Ihwajang This was the home of the first president of the Republic of Korea (South Korea's official name as of 1948), Lee Seung-man (or Rhee Syngman or Yi Seungman—no one seems to agree on a proper spelling), and his wife. President Lee was the country's controversial leader from August 1948 to April 1960. After South Korea gained independence from Japan, he took control, but he used to return here to his prepresidential home to take walks in the garden. After he relinquished his office (in the wake of popular protests that followed a disputed election), he stayed here before leaving to live in exile in America. The home's architecture shows how Korean traditional homes changed under Japanese colonization. On display are everyday household objects, clippings of historical articles, his humble clothing, and general depictions of his frugal lifestyle.

1-2 Ihwa-dong, Jongno-gu. ☏ 02/762-3171. Free admission. Daily 9am–5pm. Subway line 4 to Hyehwa Station (exit 2); walk toward Korea National Open University and turn left at the SNU Elementary School of College Education; keep walking until you get to the crossroads and head toward Podowon Garden restaurant. Follow the road leading uphill—Ihwajang is at the end.

Jeoldusan Martyrs’ Shrine and Museum Jeoldusan (Mt. Jeoldu) was previously called both Yongdubong (Dragon Head Peak) and Jamdubong (Silkworm Head Peak), but it was renamed in 2000. It was at this site that thousands of Roman Catholic's were tortured and brutally killed during the Byeonin Persecution in 1866 (p. 207). This shrine was built to commemorate the 100-year anniversary of that tragedy and a museum and memorial were added in 1967. The park was created in 1972. Showing a little-known dark side of Korean history, there are displays of torture methods and memorial sculptures surrounding the main shrine.

Hapjeong-dong, Mapo-gu. ☏ 02/3142-4434 (Korean only). Admission not set but on a donation basis. Apr–Nov Tues–Sun 10am–noon and 1–5pm; Dec–Mar Tues–Sun until 4:30pm; closed Mon and holidays. Subway line 2 or 7 to Hapjeong Station (exit 7) and walk 10 min., following the signs.
Jongmyo Royal Shrine ★★★

A place of worship for the kings of the Joseon Dynasty, this royal shrine was built by King Lee Sung-Gye, the first in that royal line, in 1394. At this designated UNESCO World Heritage site, the annual ceremony held in honor of the dead monarchs is considered the oldest complete ceremony in the world. It is usually performed here on the first Sunday of May.

The buildings in Jongmyo include Jeongjeon (the main hall), Yeongnyeongjeon (the Hall of Eternal Peace), and other auxiliary facilities. Jeongjeon, with its attached cloister, was the longest building in Asia when it was built. Today, it contains the memorial tablets of 19 Joseon kings and 30 Joseon queens in 19 spirit chambers.

There are three paths in front of the main gate, each with a special meaning. The middle one was for the dead kings, the east road for the reigning king, and the west road for the reigning prince. The road in the middle goes to Jeongjeon, where the annual ceremony mentioned above is held. The other roads lead to Jeongsacheon. After preparing the body and mind, the king and prince go to Jeongsacheon, where a traditional meal is prepared for them. The music performed in the ceremony has been handed down for nearly 600 years.

1-2 Hunjeong-dong, Jongno-gu. ☏ 02/765-0195. www.deoksugung.go.kr. Admission W1,000 adults, W500 youth, free to seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct Mon and Wed–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat–Sun and holidays 9am–7pm; Nov–Feb Mon and Wed–Fri 9am–4:30pm, Sat–Sun and holidays 9am–6pm. Subway line 1, 3, or 5 to Jongno 3-ga Station (exit 8 or 11).

Namsangol Hanok Maeul ★★

The traditional houses in this maeul were moved here from various other locations in the city. Now completely restored, they show how people (from peasants to royalty) used to live during the Joseon Dynasty. On spring and autumn weekends, traditional marriage ceremonies are staged at Bak Yeong-hyo’s residence, usually around noon or 1pm.

84-1 Pil-dong 2-ga, Jung-gu. ☏ 02/2264-4412. Free admission. Wed–Mon 9am–6pm Mar, 9am–7pm Apr–May and Sept–Oct, 9am–8pm June–Aug, 9am–5pm Nov–Feb. If Tues is a holiday, then closed the following day. Subway line 3 or 4 to Chungmuro Station (exit 3 or 4).

Samneung Park

This quiet retreat in the middle of the city houses several tombs of royals. One of the important people buried here is King Seongjong, the ninth king of the Joseon Dynasty, and his wife, Queen Jeonghyeon. His royal mausoleum is called Seolleung. Jeongneung is the burial site for King Jungjong, the second son of Seongjong. The tombs are the green mounds typical of royals of the era. Although they were defaced during the Japanese invasion in 1592, they were later restored. Now they serve as a small oasis as the small forested area shields the tombs from the hustle and bustle of the surrounding city.

135-4 Samseong 2-dong, Gangnam-gu. Admission W1,000 adults, W500 youth. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm Mar–Oct, 9am–5pm Nov–Feb. Subway line 2 to Seolleung Station (exit 8); walk down the alley next to Hana Bank.

MUSEUMS

Leeum, Samsung Museum of Art ★★★

The theme of this museum is the past, present, and future of art and design. With this in mind, the museum is made up of three buildings, the first of which was designed by Swiss architect Mario Botta with traditional Korean porcelain as the motif. This building exhibits Buddhist art, Korean ceramics, paintings, and calligraphy. I recommend starting on the top floor and working your way down (although the transition from the dark exhibition rooms to the bright white staircase can be a bit jarring).
The second building, designed by French architect Jean Nouvel, used progressive technology and modern materials in its construction. It exhibits contemporary art from Korean artists dating from 1910 to the present, as well as art from other countries dating from 1945. Its permanent collection includes works by such luminaries as Bacon, Rothko, Beuys, Warhol, Hurst, Barney, and Albers.

The third building, which serves as the Child Education and Culture Center, was designed by Dutch architect Rem Koolhaas.

English-speaking docents are available for tours of the galleries and grounds at 3pm on Saturdays and Sundays. Tours take about 90 minutes.
The National Museum of Korea ★★★ Kids  With over 150,000 pieces in its collection (though just 11,000 items are on display at any given time), you could spend hours exploring this place. Included in the collections are Buddhist sculptures, metal works, and ceramics, located on the third-floor Fine Arts Gallery. Art from Indonesia, central Asia, Japan, and China along with Nangnang remains are in the Asian Arts gallery on the same floor. The second floor houses calligraphy, paintings, and wooden crafts in the Fine Arts Galley and donations from private collections in the Donation Gallery. The first floor has relics dating from Paleolithic to the Three Kingdoms and Unified Shilla periods (see chapter 2) in the Archeological Gallery. Also on this floor are maps, prints, and important documents in the Historic Gallery.

The National Museum is also home to a Children’s Museum, which styles its exhibits around the theme “An Exciting Journey to the Past” broken down into four areas: Homes, Farming, Music, and War. Visitors can see how people lived, what people ate, and the tools they used to grow the food. Children can touch and play instruments used in rituals and even try on steel armor.

Tip: Free English-language tours of the main museum are offered at 6:30pm Saturdays. Meet in front of the information desk for the 1-hour tour. Audio guides are available for ₩1,000 and digital PDA guides are available for ₩3,000, though you must reserve a rental online at least a day before your visit.

Seodaemun Prison History Museum Located in Seodaemun Independence Park, this prison-turned-museum was built at the end of the Joseon Dynasty and used as a place to torture and kill Korean patriots of the independence movement. Koreans have a flair for melodrama and it shows in the displays, which are complete with fake blood, pained screams, and objects of various torture methods. It is an interesting way to learn about Korea’s sometimes painful past, but the actual cellblocks are not recommended for those who are claustrophobic.

Seoul Museum of Art ★★★ Housed in the former Korean Supreme Court building, this public museum aims to bring art to the masses. The interior space is great for contemporary exhibitions, and temporary installations include works by artists from South Korea, Asia, and beyond. Recent shows have included a retrospective of Monet’s work, a selection of contemporary South Korean photographers, and a group show of modern Asian painters. The permanent collection includes Korean and Western paintings, sculptures, print work, calligraphic works, photography, and media art. Opening hours are longer and admission fees are higher for special exhibitions.
Seoul Museum of History  This museum gives an overview of Seoul from prehistoric times through today. It houses a permanent collection, rotating special shows, and a gallery dedicated to relics donated by the city’s residents. English-speaking guides for the permanent exhibition are available at 2:30pm daily. From 11am to 4pm, you can try on various court outfits and take photos on the first floor of the museum.

Totoman First opened in 1996, this odd museum has collected objects from everyday life dating from the ’60s and ’70s. The collection includes old Korean textbooks, report cards, junk-food packages, records, telephones, toys, and figurines. Although small, this nostalgic collection illustrates the history of modern South Korean culture with simple items from the not-so-distant past.

OTHER SIGHTS IN SEOUL

Temples & Churches
There are literally hundreds of temples in and around the Seoul metropolitan area, many of them located in the mountains surrounding the city. A few major temples are highlighted for you below.

Bongeunsa Located north of the COEX Mall near the World Trade Center, this temple was founded in much quieter times—A.D. 794, during the Shilla Period. One of the Seon (Zen) centers during the Joseon Dynasty, it was originally called Gyeongseongsa (which means “seeing true nature”). It fell into decline during the Goryeo dynasty, but was renovated and given its present name in 1498. The oldest building still standing was built in 1856 and houses the 150-year-old wooden blocks of the Avatamsaka Sutra (called the “Flower Garland” or “Flower Adornment” Sutra in English), as well as other sutras (Buddhist scriptures). At 4:10am and 6:40pm daily, the monks play the four percussion instruments to awaken the four heavenly beings of the earth, sky, water, and underground. Since it’s one of the few South Korean temples to be located in the middle of a city, weekends are positively crawling with worshipers and visitors. The best time to visit is during the early-morning percussion ceremony to hear the echoes of the gongs before the city awakens.

English-speaking guides are available 9am to noon and 1 to 6pm on weekdays. You can also do an overnight temple stay (for a recommended donation of ₩50,000–₩80,000) or just take a 2-hour tour of the grounds. If you’re visiting in the fall, don’t miss the Jeongdaebulsu ceremony held on the ninth day of the ninth lunar month, when the monks carry scriptures on their heads and recite the Beopseongge (Buddhist rites).

73, Samseong-dong, Gangnam-gu.  02/545-1448.  www.bongeun.org.  Free admission.  Daily usually 4am–9pm.  Subway line 2 to Samseong Station (exit 6), walk 100m (328 ft.) toward ASEM Tower, then turn left, and walk through the Bongeunsa trail (10 min.), or line 7 to Cheongdam Station (exit 2), walk 150m (492 ft.) toward Gyeonggi High School, and turn right.

Bongwonsa  Located northeast of Yonsei University on Ahnsan, Bongwonsa is the head temple of the Korean Taego Order.  Originally founded in 889 by the monk Doseon, it was moved to its current location in 1749.  The original main hall was one of the most elaborate wooden sanctums of the Joseon Dynasty and it was built without any nails.  However, it and other parts of the temple were destroyed during the Korean War.  The main hall was rebuilt in 1966, but later moved to another part of the city.  While the new hall of 3,000 Buddhhas was being built in 1991, the main hall was destroyed in a fire (it was rebuilt in 1994).  Although the temple buildings aren’t as impressive as some other temples in remote locations, the 16 Arhat statues and the judgment hall, which features murals of the judges of the underworld, are worth a gander.

San 1 beonji, Bongwon-dong, Seodaemun-gu.  02/392-3007 (Korean only).  http://bongwonsa.or.kr.  Free admission.  Subway line 2 to Sinchon Station (exit 4), or line 3 to Dongnimmun Station (exit 4).  From either subway exit, take village bus no. 7024 to the temple.

Hwagyesa  Located north of downtown Seoul, Hwagyesa sits at the foot of the Samgakshan Mountains.  Part of the Chogye Order of Korean Buddhism, it has been home to a long line of Zen masters.  The temple is also home to the Seoul International Zen Center (02/900-4326), where you can do a temple stay and experience Buddhist rituals and meditations.

487 beonji, Suyu-1-dong, Gangbuk-gu.  02/902-2663.  www.hwagyesa.org.  Free admission.  Daily 4am–7pm.  Subway line 4 to Suyu Station (exit 4), or line 3 to Dongnimmun Station (exit 4).  From either subway exit, take maeul bus no. 2 or exit 8 and take bus no. 1165.  Alternatively, take bus no. 104, 109, or 144 and get off at the Suyu 1-dong Samuso.  Or take bus no. 101, 151, 152, 410, or 1165 and get off in front of Hanshin University.  When you get off at Hanshin University, walk up the small road toward the mountains and you’ll see a small sign for Hwagaeesa on a lamppost.

Jogyesa  The only major temple in the middle of Seoul, Jogyesa is at the center of Seon (Zen) Buddhism in Korea.  Although the temple itself was founded in 1910, some of the trees in front of the main building date back almost 500 years.  The main building, called the Daeungjeon, was constructed in 1938 and still retains its brilliant colors.  Not the most stately or the most beautiful temple in South Korea, Jogyesa’s main strength is its convenient location.

Although not a place for quiet contemplation (you’ll be hard-pressed to find a busier temple in the country), it’s still worth stopping in, as the temple offers a variety of programs that teach visitors about Buddhist life (tickets are ₩10,000).  They require that at least six people be signed up to participate in each program, so you’ll need to make a reservation at least a week in advance.  English interpreters are available.

Around the temple, there are many shops that specialize in Buddhist items, such as prayer beads, wooden gongs, and incense.  It’s worth a browse in the stores—perhaps a small Buddha will make his way into your luggage.

45 beonji, Gyeongji-dong, Jongno-gu.  02/732-2183 (Korean only).  Free admission.  Temple site daily 24 hr.; Daeungjeon and Geungnakjeon daily 4am–9pm.  Subway line 1 to Jonggak Station (exit 2), then 10-min. walk; line 3 to Anguk Station (exit 6), cross road in front of Dongduk Gallery and 10-min. walk to path to temple on the right; line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 2), walk next to U.S. embassy, past Jongno-gu district office, to temple path between YTN parking tower and Hana Bank.

Myeongdong Cathedral ★ The main Catholic church in the country, Myeongdong Cathedral is a surprise—a Gothic structure in the middle of Seoul. Construction on the building was started in 1892 and finished in 1898, on the spot where the first Catholics gathered in 1784. In this structure of brick with stained glass, the basement floor houses the remains of the Korean Catholic martyrs (p. 207). Masses are held daily, but an English-language service takes place Sundays at 9am.

1-8 Myeongdong 2-ga, Jung-gu. ☏ 02/774-1784. Free admission. Daily 7am–9pm; closed to all but worshipers during services, which are held weekdays at 6:30am, 10am, 6pm, and 7pm (no 7pm service on Mon), and weekends 7am, 9am, 10am, 11am, noon, 4pm, 5pm, 6pm, 7pm, and 9pm. Subway line 2 to Euljiro Ipgu Station (exit 5), or line 4 to Myeongdong Station (exit 8). Either way, it’s a 10-min. walk.

Parks & Gardens

Han-gahng (Han River) Parks ★★★ The Han River has been an important part of Korea for centuries. For the citizens of modern Seoul, it serves as a place for leisure, especially now that the city government has begun its river “renaissance” project. Han River Parks encompasses nearly the entire shoreline on both sides of the river. It’s a popular place to bike, rollerblade, jog, walk, or just sit by the water and talk with friends, especially on hot summer evenings. Water taxis (costing W5,800–W78,000) stop at 15 locations between Yeouido and Jamsil.

With the building of the Banpo Daegyo (Bridge) Fountain ★★ and a recent renovation, the area between the Banpo and Hannam bridges (on the south bank) has become one of the most popular places for Seoulites to play. The bridge is lit up with 200 LEDs as 380 nozzles spray 190 tons of recycled river water on both sides of its 580m (1,903-ft.) length. There are “water shows” at 12:30, 3, and 8pm daily, with additional shows at 9:20 and 10pm Friday to Sunday, each lasting about 20 minutes.

Tip: If you get hungry, you can flag down any one of the messengers delivering Korean “fast food” along the river. It takes only about half an hour for them to return with some hot jjajangmyeon noodles, mandu, or spicy fried chicken.

Free admission. Daily 24 hr. To get to the Gangdong-gu section, take subway line 5 or 8 to Cheonho Station (exit 1) and walk over the Cheonho Daegyo (bridge). To get to the Songpa-gu section, take subway line 2 or 8 to Jamsil Station (exit 5) or subway line 2 to Sincheon Station (exit 6). To get to the Banpo bridge, take subway line 3, 7, or 9 to the Express Bus Terminal Station (exit 8) and follow the signs. Or take bus no. 143, 401, or 406. Bus no. 8401 goes between the Express Bus Terminal and Noksapyeong Station with a stop in the middle of the Banpo Daegyo.

Namsan Park ★★ Kids Although not terribly elevated, Namsan (South Mountain) is home to the N Seoul Tower, where you can get great views of the city (at least on days when there’s no smog or yellow dust from China). I suggest coming at night, when the lights are twinking below. The best view is from the rotating restaurant on the top floor, N’Grill (p. 81), but you’ll have to pay a premium price for dinners there. Slightly less expensive, but still offering a view, is the Hancook restaurant, which has set menus (lunch is W22,000; dinner is W32,000) and a buffet bar. Those on a budget can opt for the bakery, cafe, or food court on the lower floors. If you’re not up for a meal, you can just go to the tower’s observation floor and take in the view. You’ll even get a peep at the panorama from the “sky” restrooms with their floor-to-ceiling windows. If you plan ahead, you can bring a lock to add to the millions of locks attached to the surrounding fences by young lovers.
Historically, the site was used as a prime post for defending Seoul. You’ll find the Bonghwadae (beacon mound) where five beacons, which are no longer in operation, were installed to transmit signals from the outskirts of the city to the government in downtown Seoul. And you’ll also find the remnants of a massive fortress wall, which once connected the ridges of Namsan, Naksan, Bugaksan, and Inwangsan, the four major mountains surrounding the city. The wall was built in 1396, during the reign of King Taejo, but parts of it were torn down as the city grew. More sections of the wall were destroyed during the Japanese occupation and the Korean War. Happily, restoration work was started in 1975, and today, you can see parts of the wall as you make your way up Namsan.

The park also includes Palgakjeong (an octagonal pavilion from which you can also get a good view of the city), Maritime Aquarium (an underground aquarium worth a visit, especially if you have kids), a large fountain, and Namsan Library. You can take the long stairway up Namsan (at least a 30-min. hike), take a yellow bus (with a short walk to the tower), or opt for a cable car ride. No cars are allowed.

100-177 Hoehyun-dong 1-ga, Jung-gu. ☎️ 02/753-2563 (Korean only). Free admission to the park; N Seoul Tower’s observation platform, 7,000 adults 19–65, 5,000 ages 14–18 and 66 and over, 3,000 kids 5–13; cable car 7,000 round-trip or 5,500 one-way for ages 14 and over, 4,500 round-trip or 3,000 one-way for kids 7–13. Cable car daily 10am–10:30pm; observation platform 9am–1am. Subway line 4 to Myeongdong Station (exit 2 or 3), and walk toward Lila Elementary School 10 min.; you’ll see Palgakjeong, where you can take a cable car. Alternatively, take one of the yellow buses that go to Namsan.

Seoul Olympic Park and Museum ★ An expansive park built for the 1988 Olympics, it is filled with paths that wind in and out of an art park containing more than 200 outdoor sculptures. It’s the perfect place for biking, in-line skating, or just strolling. The Olympic Museum commemorates the 1988 games and gives a bit of overall Olympics history. Tennis courts, a gymnasium, and other facilities are open for regular use. The indoor Olympic pool is also open to the public Monday to Friday from noon to 9pm.

88 Bangi-dong, Songpa-gu. ☎️ 02/410-1357. www.kspo.or.kr. Free admission to the park. Admission to the museum is 3,000 adults, 2,000 teens, 1,500 children. Park daily 5:30am–10:30pm; museum Tues–Sun 10am–5:30pm (when a holiday falls on a Mon, then closed the following day). Subway line 8 to Mongchon Tosong Station (exit 1) or line 5 to Olympic Park Station.

Tapgol (Pagoda) Park Overrated Located on the former site of the Joseon Dynasty-era Weongaksa (Weongak Temple), Tapgol is the first modern park to be built in the city. The temple itself was enlarged during the Goryeo Dynasty, but was destroyed during the reigns of Yeonsangun and Jungjong when Buddhism was being repressed in the country (p. 15). The site still contains the Wongaksaji Sipcheongseoktap (a 10-level stone tower from the temple), Weongaksabi, and a statue of Son Byeong-hee. The park is where the Korean independence movement of 1919 started, but recently it has become a haven for Seoul’s senior citizens. You’ll see old men passing the time or playing baduk (the Korean version of “go”), while aged prostitutes try to tempt them with their carnal wares and energy-drink bottles.

38-1, Jongno 2-ga, Jongno-gu. Free admission. Daily 6am–sunset. Subway line 1 or 3 to Jongno 3-ga Station and walk 5 min. toward Jonggak.

Yangjae Citizens’ Forest ★ Kids Over 106,000 trees were planted here when this park was built for the 1986 Asian Games and the 1988 Olympics. Other than nice walking paths and plenty of greenery, there are tennis, volleyball, and basketball courts; a children’s playground; an outdoor wedding hall; and even a path where you can stimulate your ki energy by walking barefoot on prepared stones. (Don’t worry, there's a foot bath nearby.) There is also a memorial hall for Yun Bong-gil, a famed activist against the occupiers during Korea's Japanese Imperial Period (1910-1945). The park is popular with families picnicking and visiting on weekends.

236, Yangjae-dong, Seocho-gu. Free admission. 24 hr. Subway line 3 to Yangjae Station (exit 7). From there you can take a walk to the forest, or take a bus headed toward Seongnam and get off at “Shiminae Sup.”

Amusement Parks & Zoos

There are plenty of amusement parks both large and small in Seoul. The smaller ones may be a bit cheesy, especially by Western standards, with just a few carnival rides and games. But the larger parks are giant crowd pleasers with world-class roller coasters and high prices to boot. I’ve included information for Everland, Seoul Land, and Seoul Grand Park in the Gyeonggi-do chapter, but the ones below are in the metropolitan area proper.

Children’s Grand Park ★ Kids It would take more than a day to take in all the sights at this giant park and amusement facility, designed especially for children. The facilities include an amusement park, a zoo, pony rides, and Elephant World, where you can interact with elephants from Laos. There are also botanical gardens, a water play area, an ecological pond, and a “shoeless park,” where you can experience a variety of different textures with the bottom of your feet. The outdoor swimming pool is open in the summer. You may want to pack a picnic lunch, since food choices in the park are limited to fast-food Korean and snack offerings.

540 Cheonggyecheon-lo, Neung-dong, Songdong-gu. ☏ 02/450-9311. www.childrenpark.or.kr. Lotte World Kids The Disneyland of Seoul (complete with the requisite “Magic Castle”), Lotte World is a huge amusement park with both indoor and outdoor facilities. It has a variety of rides (the main attractions), an ice-skating rink, a swimming pool, and a folk museum. Be forewarned: The biggest crowds come on Friday and Saturday night, when you may have to wait in line up to 2 hours just to get on a ride. If you plan on spending a day here—and there’s more than enough to keep you occupied—it may be more economical to get a passport ticket, which gives you access to all facilities except for the carnival games, which require fees per play. Alternatively, you can visit after 5pm and get discounted night admission or a night passport. The less expensive moonlight pass is for guests who enter after 7pm, but you can ride only three rides for free.

63 (Yuksam) Building Actually only 60 stories tall (3 of its stories are underground), what once used to be the tallest building in the city has now been dwarfed by the 69-story Mokdong Hyperion in Yangcheon and the 73-story Tower Palace in Gangnam. But its exterior still glows an impressive gold, especially at sunset, and its top-floor observation deck provides a great view of the city. Its official name is 63 City, but everyone just calls it the Yuksam Building. The tower includes the country’s first large-scale aquarium, an IMAX theater (in three languages), a wax museum, the aforementioned observation sky deck, and a variety of restaurants, including Japanese, Chinese, and Korean places. The ones on the higher floors (56–59) offer the best views, but you’ll pay premium prices for the food. If you’re watching your budget, head down to the food court on the first-floor basement level.

1-8 Myeongdong 2-ga, Jung-gu. (02) 789-6363. www.63city.co.kr. Admission to the observation deck W7,000 adults, W6,500 teens or seniors 65 and over, W5,500 children. Admission to the wax museum W14,000 adults, W13,000 teens/children. Daily 10am–midnight, last entry 1 hr. before closing (IMAX last show 8:10pm, 9:10pm weekends/holidays). Subway line 1 to Daebang Station (exit 6) and catch free shuttle about 40m (131 ft.) from the exit toward Yeouido; line 5 to Yeouinaru Station (exit 1) and catch free shuttle in front of the Sambu Apts., or to Yeouido Station (exit 5) and catch free shuttle at St. Mary’s Hospital platform.

Cheonggyecheon ★★★ What used to be a small stream that flowed through the downtown area was hidden beneath a truck bypass for decades. In 2003, the mayor of the city decided to restore the stream and give the city some much-needed natural space—the bypass was removed, walking paths were opened, and 22 bridges were built. The stream now covers an area 11km (6¾ miles) long and its revival is one of the best things to happen to the city in the past few years. Night or day, it’s a great place to take a stroll, as Seoul’s skyscrapers loom on either side of you.

The city offers two different walking tours of Cheonggyecheon, each guided by a cultural heritage commentator, three times a day. The free tours take about 2 to 3 hours and you need to make a reservation at least 3 days in advance.

Bus tours of Cheonggyecheon are also offered, departing from in front of Gwanghwamun Donghwa Duty Free Shop (subway line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station, exit 6). The tour takes up to 2 hours (depending on traffic) and departs at 10am, noon, 2pm, 4pm, and 7pm. Call the Gwanghwamun Tourist Info Center to make reservations. There are no tours on Mondays, except when it’s a holiday.

Starts near the Donga Ilbo Building and the Seoul Finance Center in Sejong-no, Jongno-gu. (02) 2290-7111 or 3 (Seoul Department of Tourism) daily 9am–6pm or 02/735-8688 for the Gwanghwamun Tourist Information Center daily 9am–10pm. Free admission, but bus tours cost W5,000 adults, W3,000 youth. Daily 24 hr. Subway line 1 to City Hall, Jonggak, Jongno 3-ga, Jongno 5-ga, Dongdaemun, or Sinseoldong stations; line 2 to Euljiro 1-ga, Euljiro 3-ga, Euljiro 4-ga, Sindang, or Sangwang-sibni stations; line 3 to Jongno 3-ga Station; line 4 to Dongdaemun Stadium Station; or line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station. Take the Cheonggyecheon exit.

World Cup Stadium and Parks Since World Cup matches don’t happen every day, part of the stadium was turned into a retail complex with a 10-screen cineplex (the CGV Sangam 10). The field area isn’t open, but you can tour the stadium any day of the week.

The surrounding area has been turned into a bunch of different parks including Nanji-cheon Park, Noeul Park, and Peace Park, with places to walk and, even better, for inline skating.

My favorite of these is Haneul (“Sky”) Park ★★, which is a reclaimed landfill that has been converted into a 192,000-sq.-m (2,067-sq.-ft.) ecological site and park. It’s one of the few places in the city to enjoy nice views and the quiet of nature.

TOURS

Walking Tours

The city of Seoul offers six different walking tours that cover the major downtown attractions and palaces. These tours are led by English-speaking guides who are trained in Seoul’s history and culture. Tours are free, but you’ll have to pay admission to each site you stop at. To make a reservation, go to http://english.visitseoul.net; under the “Activities” menu, click on “City Walking Tour.” There are a number of guide courses to choose from and you must make a reservation at least 3 days in advance. You can also contact the city at 02/2171-2461. Additional information about the specific courses and where to meet will be e-mailed to you.

In the central downtown area, there are several different walking courses, most centered around historic palaces. For a tour of traditional homes, take the Bukchon course, which takes you through the winding streets of the Bukchon neighborhood, or the Seoul Fortress/Namsan-Hanok Village course. Most tours take about 2 hours, so wear comfortable walking shoes. Both the Bukchon and the Seoul Fortress tours start in front of Deoksugung (subway: City Hall Station, line 1, exit 2; or line 2, exit 12) and depart daily at 10am, 2pm, and 3pm. The tours are not offered Lunar New Year, palace holidays, or on Chuseok.

Bus Tours

If you’re short on time but want to see the major sights, try the Seoul City Tour Bus run by the Seoul Metropolitan Government. Different tours include Cheonggyecheon, the downtown tour (which stops at 27 locations in a 2-hr. period), the palace tour (with 11 stops in 1 hr.), and the night tour. Buses leave Tuesday through Sunday (and Mon holidays) from Donghwa DFS in Gwanghwamun (subway line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station, exit 6) every 30 minutes from 9am to 7pm for the downtown tour, and from 9am to 4pm for the palace tour. Cheonggyecheon tours leave at 10am, noon, 2pm, 4:30pm, and 7pm. Night tour buses leave, rather oddly, at 7:50 and 8pm.

A single ride or night-tour ticket costs ₩5,000 adults, ₩3,000 children. A 1-day ticket (good for both downtown and palace tour routes with on-off privileges) costs ₩10,000 adults, ₩8,000 children. If you get both a 1-day ticket and a night tour, there is an additional discount. Also, if you have a KTX or KR pass, you can get a 15% discount on the 1-day tour. You can buy tickets from the tour guide once you board the bus. Admission to palaces and other attractions isn’t included, but discounts are offered. For additional info, call ☎ 02/777-6090 or log on to www.visitseoul.net.

6 RECREATIONAL ACTIVITIES

BIKING

It’s bad enough driving in Seoul, but riding a bike on regular city streets is not just unpleasant, it’s virtually suicidal. However, there are some good biking trails along the Han-gahng and in Olympic Park. The most popular trail along the river spans 37km (23 miles) from Yanghwa to Gwangnaru. It takes about 2½ to 3 hours to reach Yangcheon from Gwangnaru.

Bikes can be rented cheaply throughout the city (usually for about ₩3,000 for an hour, ₩6,000 for tandems). Rental bikes are usually well used and old, but sturdy. The most convenient rental places are at Ichon Station (subway lines 1 or 4, exit 4) toward the Turtle Boat and Yeouinaru Station (line 5, exit 2) toward the underpass to Yeouido Park. Both Ichon and Yeouido parks can get pretty crowded on weekends, so Olympic Park might be a better bet.

GOLF

Golfing is a popular sport in South Korea and there's no shortage of courses. There are only two within the city of Seoul, but 46 in Gyeonggi-do alone. However, the prices aren’t reasonable to most visitors, and even prohibitive for most natives (costing over ₩200,000 for 18 holes and a caddy). Golf is seen as a sport for the upper crust, and that’s why most Koreans travel to other countries for their golf vacations. A better option for practicing your swing is to try one of the many indoor driving ranges in the city. Almost all luxury hotels in the city offer a driving range and most of them cost ₩10,000 to ₩20,000 per hour.

HIKING

There is no shortage of hiking opportunities around Seoul. The slopes around the city offer relatively easy climbs. The hills and mountains in the vicinity get especially crowded during the pretty seasons of spring and fall. There are 37 mountains in the vicinity of Seoul with Bukhansan (Mt. Bukhan) being the highest (837m/2,746 ft.) and drawing most of the crowds.

A good option is the centrally located Namsan Park (p. 107), which has a variety of trails. Take subway line 4 to Chungmuro Station (exit 2) or line 3 to Dongguk University Station (exit 6) and take the Namsan loop bus after you exit the subway. Get off at the National Theatre, walk straight, and turn right. The trail starts on the left side of the traffic control booth.

Another easy hike is Achasan (Mt. Acha), which is not too steep but offers a good view of the Han River. It takes only about an hour to climb up to the top and back, but you can lengthen the hike to over 2 hours by climbing up Achasan over to Yongmasan and back. Take subway line 5 to Achasan Station (exit 2) and turn left at the first intersection. Keep walking until you get to the T-section and turn right. Walk for about 200m (656 ft.) more, past the temple, Hwayangsa, and you’ll see the entrance to Daeseong-am, which leads to Achasan.
Nearby Yongmasan (Mt. Yongma) is an excellent hike with a variety of views and some fun things to see along the way, like a man-made waterfall and the remains of a small fort dating back to the Goguryeon period. Some parts of the trail can get a bit steep, so it’s best to wear hiking boots. Take subway line 7 to Yongmasan Station (exit 2) and walk through the entrance to the Hanshin apartments. Go up the stairs next to the pavilion, past the playground and turn right. Next to the exercise facility, behind the wire fence, there are stairs that lead you up to the trails.

The most popular hike in the Gangman area is on Umyeonsan (Mt. Umyeon). It will take you about an hour to hike to the mountain’s main temple, Daesongsa. Plan to spend some time at the Seoul Arts Center when you reach the bottom. Take subway line 3 to the Nambu Express Bus Terminal (exit 5). Walk straight and turn right at the first intersection to the Seoul Arts Center (about a 10-min. walk). Take the overpass in front of the arts center which leads to the hiking trail.

Seoul is a shopper’s paradise. It used to be a haven for bargain hunters as well but is becoming less so as large box stores and megaplex malls take over streetside marketplaces. Still, there is no shortage of things to buy, often at good prices. Some of the best deals in the city include frames for eyeglasses and sunglasses, shoes, cosmetics, accessories, and nondesigner clothes. Electronic goods are also pretty inexpensive here, but unless you know what you’re doing, don’t be tempted by the fantastic cellphones (although South Korean phones are some of the best I’ve seen in the world), as they may not work back home.

High-end department stores take most major credit cards and have ATMs that are foreigner-friendly, with English-language instructions. Be sure to keep your receipts so you can get your VAT back at the airport before you leave (see chapter 14). The vendors in traditional markets take only cash, and they expect you to bargain over prices. Tip: When shopping in South Korea, don’t step into a store first thing in the morning unless you intend to buy something (even if it’s small). Superstition has it that if the first customer of the day leaves a store empty-handed, the store will have bad business all day. No need to worry—most shopkeepers in South Korea won’t give you the hard sell, even if you are their first customer—but it’s considered polite to wait a bit if you’re just planning to browse.

TOP SHOPPING AREAS

For the fashion-conscious, Myeongdong is the place to be. With boutique shops and clothes galore, you can see the latest fashions geared toward the young. Unfortunately, the sizes are geared toward the petite Korean students and Japanese tourists that flock to the area. If you’re lucky enough to be on the slimmer side, there are plenty of inexpensive options. There are loads of stores that specialize in accessories and shoes as well. It’s easy to get lost going in and out of the streets here, so be sure to keep a landmark in mind to be able to find your way back.

Another great area for young women’s clothes is in Idea-ap (literally meaning, “in front of Ewha Women’s University”), where you’ll find the latest fashions and accessories. The area’s “Fashion Street” starts at Ewha U’s main gate and continues to Sincheon rail station. If you want to find something you’ll never see back home, get an item from one of the many aspiring fashion designers who sell their experiments at affordable prices.
If you don’t have the body of a fashion model, then Itaewon is the place for you. A popular shopping district geared toward foreigners, the stores here offer designer clothes that are manufactured in Korea but were rejected for export, at bargain-basement prices. This is one of the few places in the city where you can find inexpensive shoes to fit Western sizes. You’ll also find plenty of casual wear and sportswear from brand names as well. Be aware, though, that there are stalls selling brand-name knockoffs as well and it can be hard to tell the difference. The vendors are pretty blunt about the authenticity of their goods, however, and will let you know that it’s not a real luxury brand. Some sellers will show you a catalog of their goods (especially knockoff handbags) and bring you to an unmarked shop to show you the items in person. Be sure to bring a friend and be careful about following strangers into dark alleys.

If you’re looking for real luxury goods, head to the shops in Apgujeong, where Seoul’s elite shop. There are three main department stores, but hordes of other boutiques and brand-name shops. The Shinsegae store is near the Express Bus Terminal and the JW Marriott Hotel. Nearby is the Gangnam underground shopping plaza at the B1 level of the bus station. The Hyundai department store is also in the area, near the Dongho Bridge. Another good place to browse is Galleria department store or Designer Club. Farther past that (toward the Cheongdam four-way) is the luxury shopping area and “Rodeo Street,” where you’ll find boutiques such as Armani, Gucci, and the like. It’s not easily accessible by subway, but if you can afford to shop here, you can likely afford the taxi ride.

On the other end of the spectrum are the bargains at Dongdaemun and Namdaemun markets. There are treasures to be found here, at the biggest traditional markets in all of South Korea, but you have to search a bit.

If you’re looking for good South Korean–made souvenirs, the Insadong area has ceramics, paper goods, and handicrafts from both artisans and factories. For more collectible items or genuine artisan pieces, you can check out the more expensive but genuine galleries in Samcheong-dong.

Markets

Although malls and shopping centers are popular, many Seoul residents still shop in markets for the best bargains. Whether indoors or out, these markets are inexpensive, chaotic, and lots of fun. Vendors will take only cash—no credit cards—and bargaining is not only normal, but expected. The market areas tend to get crowded, so don’t be offended by a bit of pushing and shoving. It’s all part of the experience and one you must try if you want to get the real flavor of the city. Most of the vendors speak a little bit of English, and even if they don’t, they’ll bring out a calculator to show you how much things cost. Besides, why let something like language stand in the way of a good bargain?

Dongdaemun Shijang ★★★ Since 1905, Dongdaemun (which means “great east gate”) has been one of the major markets in the country and it spans an area larger than Namdaemun. Vendors here mostly specialize in wholesale fashion items, making it easy to dress the entire family without breaking the bank. The main street divides the market into two sections. Giant shopping malls in the first section (including Doosan Tower, Migliore, Freya Town, and Hello apM) sell wholesale and retail goods. Most are open daily from 10am to 5am the following morning. Concerts and events organized by the malls usually happen around 7 or 8pm and attract a younger crowd.

The second section is on the side, along Cheonggyecheon-no and beyond. Shops on this side of the market sell both wholesale and retail goods, but mainly sell items in bulk.
The malls here open daily at 8pm and close at either 8am or 5am the next morning. The malls in this section, Designer’s Club and Heungin Stardo, cater to customers in their 30s and 40s. The younger crowd usually shops at Designer’s Club, Migliore Valley, Nuzzon, or Gwanghee Fashion Mall. There are also good varieties of sporting goods shops around the stadium itself. Take subway line 1 or 4 and get off at Dongdaemun Stadium (exit 2 or 3).

Garak-dong Agriculture and Marine Products Wholesale Market ★★ The largest in the country, this food market encompasses 17 buildings. Although this is largely a wholesale market, vendors will sell at retail as well. If you’ve never seen a wholesale agricultural market, you might be overwhelmed by the sheer quantities of food in one location. In the summer, you’ll see more watermelon here than you’ve ever seen in your whole life! Open from 2am to 7pm daily (although the exciting auctioning and bulk wholesale transactions end at 10am and livestock sales end at 5pm), most vendors close the first and third Sundays of each month. Take subway line 8 to the Garak Market Station (exit 3).

Gwangjang Shijang ★ South Korea’s oldest traditional market, it is a great place to get textiles, fabrics, silks, and other Korean goods. The second floor has vendors selling silks, bed sheets, satins, and more. You can also find a variety of lacquer pieces inlaid with mother-of-pearl, get a custom-made hanbok (Korean traditional outfit), or browse other handmade textiles. Open Monday through Sunday 7am to 7pm. Take subway line 1 to Jongno 5(o)-ga (exit 8).

Gyeongdong Shijang ★★ The country’s most famous oriental medicine marketplace, Gyeongdong has over 1,000 shops selling everything from medicinal roots to dried mushrooms, all used to make hanyak. Most of the sellers grow the items themselves and sell them directly here. It’s a fun place to see, smell, touch, and taste unusual things, like dried millipedes and unidentifiable barks. Open daily 8am to 6:30pm, the market is closed the first and third Sundays of the month. Take subway line 1 to Jeggi Station.

Hanbang: Traditional Korean Medicine

Although stemming from traditional Chinese medicinal roots (dating back over 2000 years), Korean traditional medicinal practices have developed their own characteristics. There are four components, but all of them take a holistic approach to health and healing. The common treatment methods are chim (acupuncture), hanyak (herbal medicine), ddeum (moxibustion), and buhwang (cupping). Each can be used alone or in combination. Koreans believe that disease comes from a lack of or excess of ki (also called “chi” or “qi” in Chinese), which is the vital energy of life that flows through us. This problem of ki results in an imbalance of eum (“yin” in Chinese) and yang. The treatment is supposed to balance the two forces within a person and heal by creating environmental, social, and physical harmony.

A traditional Korean doctor will listen to your ailments and prescribe a combination of treatments that best suit your needs. Common hanyak items include ginseng and ground deer antler.
Hongdae/Hong-ik Flea Market ★★ Every Saturday, students and other vendors sell a variety of items at this open-air flea market at the playground in front of the main gate of Hong-ik University, South Korea’s most prominent art school. You’ll find handmade crafts from the art students, dolls, clothes, accessories, and a variety of knickknacks. There is an unofficial rule to not sell goods direct from a factory (like those you’d find in Namdaemun or Dongdaemun markets). Open 1 to 6pm, but check the weather before you head out, since it’ll be closed when it rains or snows. Take subway line 2 to Hong-ik University Station (exit 6). When you exit, walk straight until you get to the 4-way, and then turn left. Keep walking to the end of that street and make a right; then go up the uphill street that comes up on the right.

Namdaemun Shijang ★★★ Of this, the largest traditional market in the country and going strong since 1414, they say if you can’t find it here, it probably doesn’t exist. Centrally located in the heart of the city, the many streets and alleyways of Namdaemun (which means “great south gate”) are closed to vehicle traffic so that shops and carts take over the area. Vendors sell everything from clothing to housewares, food, and accessories. Most of the shops sell directly from their own factories, so you can get both wholesale and retail prices. If you need a break from shopping, head over to one of the food alleys to grab a bite from the various vendors. There are no set hours, which vary by store, but the shijang is bustling any day of the week. Serious bargain hunters come for the night market from midnight to 4am. Take subway line 4 to Hoehyeon Station (exit 5).

Noryangjin Shijang ★★★ Seoul’s largest and oldest fish market, the more than 700 shops are open even before the crack of dawn—at 3am, as fishermen bring in their daily catches. Due to popular demand, seafood is brought in from 15 different ports from all three of the peninsula’s coasts. The marketplace is busiest in the spring months of March to May and from September to early December, but the excitement really never ends (although the crowds disperse around 2 or 3 in the afternoon). Rows of glistening fins sit next to squiggly sea creatures, all waiting to be someone’s dinner. Open 3am to 9pm. Take subway line 1 to Noryangjin Station.

Pungmul Shijang (Seoul Folk Flea Market) ★★ Seoul’s historic 5-day flea market has a permanent home, after being moved when Cheonggyecheon was built. The two-story building has over 900 vendors selling everything from folk objects to regional clothing, to food and souvenirs. Pick up an antique statue or an unusual gift for a friend back home. Open 10am to 9pm. Take subway line 1 or 2 to Sinseol-dong Station (exit 9).

Department Stores
Large, multilevel department stores can be found in every neighborhood in Seoul. They all have similar layouts, with the basement floor being given over to groceries and inexpensive food courts, and cosmetics and jewelry on the first floor. The middle floors are usually reserved for clothing with higher floors selling furniture, home goods, and sports supplies. The top floor or two is usually reserved for restaurants and food courts. Tip: For 2 weeks each season, the stores have sales (usually in Jan, Apr, July, and Oct) at which you can get good discounts. You can check each store’s website or call the Korea Travel Phone (☎ 1330) to find out when exactly they are. Roll up your sleeves and be ready to brave the crowds.

Galleria Department Store The Galleria stores are known as the fashion brand, so it’s no surprise that it’s located in Apgujeong-dong’s Rodeo Street. If you want to see what the young fashionistas are buying, this is a good place to shop. Open daily 10:30am to 8pm. Take subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 1).

Hyundai Department Store  Since opening its store in Apgujeong-dong in 1985, Hyundai has been setting trends across the nation. If you want to see where Seoul’s fashions will be heading, check out the clothes and accessories here. Open daily 10:30am to 8pm, but closed one Monday a month (varies). Take subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station (exit 6).

Lotte Department Store  Since it opened its first store in the late 1970s, Lotte has grown. It now has six huge stores in Seoul alone. Its flagship store is in Sogong-dong, Jung-gu, in front of the shopping district in Myeongdong. Open daily 10:30am to 8:30pm; they close the first and second Monday of each month. Take subway line 2 to Euljiro Ipgu (entrance) Station and the underground connects directly to the basement floor of the store.

Shinsegae Department Store  The oldest department store in the country, it started out as a Japanese store during the occupation in the 1930s and was given its current name in 1963. Although it has other locations, the one in Chungmuro/Myeong-dong is the original. The reconstructed building was finished in 2005 and has 14 stories of shopping and eating fun. Open daily 10:30am to 8pm. Take subway line 4 to Hoehyeon Station (exit 7) and walk about 5 min.

Malls & Shopping Plazas

Cerestar  Owned by Freya Town, this 23-story fashion megalopolis is known for its aisles and aisles of clothes and fashion accessories. If you’ve shopped until you’re ready to drop, there are spas, a hospital, fast food and sit-down restaurants, and even a 24-hour movie theatre. The department store sections are from levels B1-4 with plenty of parking on the basement levels. Open Tuesday to Sunday 10:30pm to 5am (the next morning); department store open 10:30am to 10:30pm. Take subway line 1 or 4 to Dongdaemun Station (exit 8).

COEX Mall  A giant megamall in the Gangnam district, this mall (TEL 02/6002-5312) is home to more than 250 stores and hundreds of eating places. It also includes movie theaters (with 17 screens), a nightclub, banks, a post office, the Bandi & Luni’s bookstore (with one of the best selections of English-language volumes in the city), and record stores. The COEX Aquarium ★ (admission ₩15,500 adults, ₩13,000 teens, ₩10,000 children), with 40,000 underwater creatures on display, is at one end of the mall. Try to time your visit for the 1:30pm shark feeding. There’s also the Kimchi Museum (a small museum located on the first floor of the basement level), if you want to know more about the ultimate Korean dish. A favorite with teenagers, the mall lures in more than 100,000 visitors daily. Open daily from 10am to 10pm. Take subway line 2 to Samseong Station (exit 5 or 6). The subway connects directly to the mall.

Doosan Tower ★★  With about 2,000 stores in its nine stories, it’s no wonder this shopping mall is popular with teens and young people. In addition to a seemingly endless number of boutiques selling clothing, jewelry, and pretty much anything else you can imagine, there is a sports center, a beauty clinic, a food court, and sit-down restaurants. There are frequent performances by KPop stars on the outdoor stage in front of the building. Open Monday 7am to 5am, Tuesday through Saturday 10:30am to 5am, and Sunday 10:30am to 11pm. Take subway line 2, 4, or 5 to Dongdaemun Stadium Station (exit 4).
Freya Town  Although this is one of the leading fashion malls in the Dongdaemun area, not all of its 22 floors are devoted to shopping (floors 14–16 are offices and floors 17–22 are apartments). But don’t fret—there are still a ridiculous number of boutiques, fabric vendors, and even a sports center, movie theater, hospital, florist, and travel agency. Open Wednesday to Monday 10:30am to 5am (yes, it’s open all night). Take subway line 1 or 4 to Dongdaemun Station.

Migliore  If you’re looking for bargains on clothes, this is the place. With hundreds of wholesale clothing and accessory shops, you’ll run out of steam before you run out of places to shop. The shops here cater to teens and 20-somethings. Open Tuesday to Sunday 10:30am to 5am. Take subway line 1 or 4 to Dongdaemun Station.

Discount Megamarts  Giant discount shops have popped up all over the city. You may have noticed the ubiquitous yellow box of the E-Marts, but other stores like Lotte Mart and Kim’s Club have also joined the scene. They offer similar items (minus luxury goods) to department stores, but at discounted prices. Be prepared for crowds on weekdays after work hours and on weekends.

E-Mart  A branch of this discount megamart is in Chang-dong. You can find groceries, household goods, clothes, and other items at discount prices. If you’ve forgotten your toothpaste or need a pair of slippers, this is a good store to shop. Open daily from 10am to midnight. Take subway line 1 or 4 to Chang-dong Station (exit 2), turn left, and walk about 5 min. (you can’t miss the yellow building).

SHOPPING A TO Z

Antiques

Over 40% of South Korea’s antique stores are in Insadong, which has been the cultural center of Seoul, if not South Korea, since the Joseon Dynasty (1392–1910). The area begins at the Anguk-dong Rotary and runs past Insadong crossroads to Tappol Park in Jongno 2-ga. Antiques here tend to be more expensive than those sold elsewhere in the country, but the quality is exceptional. Prices range from inexpensive to the super-expensive (think ₩1 million and up). Be careful to shop at reputable galleries and stores when you buy antiques, because it’s illegal to take items deemed national treasures out of the country.

Most of the antiques in the area tend to be ceramics, wooden containers, jewelry, and old paintings. A good ceramics specialist is the Haedonggododa Research Institute (☏ 02/732-6622). A great store that specializes in old books, usually written in Hanja, is Tongmungwan (☏ 02/734-4092; 147 Gwanhun-dong, Jongno-gu; open 10:30am–5:30pm Mon–Sat), which is worth a browse even if you don’t intend to buy anything. The shop (whose sign is also written in Chinese characters) was opened by the grandfather of the current owner. If you’re looking for antique furniture, the friendly owners at Gayajaе (☏ 02/733-3138; 192-46 Gwanhun-dong, Jongno-gu) have a good selection of wooden pieces, as well as stone Buddha statues and tiles. Nearby Godosa (☏ 02/735-4373; 192-46 Gwanhun-dong, Jongno-gu; open 10am–6pm daily) carries antique utensils, furniture, and everyday items. Another good option is Gonghwarang (☏ 02/735-9938; 23-2 Insadong, Jongno-gu; open 10am–6pm daily), whose owner is the president of the Korean Antique Association, so you know you’re getting a genuine article.
Better than Insadong, the best place to find antiques is at the Jang-anpyeong Antique Market. At one of Asia’s largest, over 150 vendors sell antiques (and reproductions) of furniture, paintings, calligraphy, wooden objects, ceramics, ironware, stone statues, and more. Even if you don’t want an old man’s pipe to take home, this market is definitely worth a browse. Although hours vary by seller, shops are generally open Monday through Saturday 10am to 8pm. Take subway line 2 to Sindap Station and walk past the Majang-dong intersection toward Cheonho Bridge.

Art Galleries & Crafts

Art galleries began opening up in Insadong in the 1970s. The galleries in the area sell both contemporary art by South Korean artists and collectable antiques (see above). Most galleries have exhibitions that rotate frequently, featuring either one contemporary South Korean artist or a group of recent art-school graduates. A good place to start is the Insa Art Center ([02/736-1020; 188 Gwanhun-dong, Jongno-gu]), which is a plaza complex of smaller art galleries and shops off the main drag in Insadong. Also nice for browsing is the Kyung-In Museum ([02/733-4448; 30-1 Gwanhun-dong, Jongno-gu; open 10am–6pm daily, unless they’re putting up a show, and then they’ll be closed on Tues; closed Jan 1, Lunar New Year, and Chuseok), which also has a handful of gallery spaces and a small café.

In the past few years more upscale galleries and artisan studios have opened up in nearby Samcheong-dong. Famous art spaces line both sides of Samcheong-dong-gil, which starts from the street east of Gyeongbokgung to Samcheong Tunnel, ending at Samcheong Park. Famous galleries in the area include my personal favorite, Gallery Hyundai ([02/734-6111; 80 Sagan-dong], Geumho Gallery, Artsonje Center, Art Space Seoul (aka Gallery Hak Go Jae), Geum San Gallery, Kukje Gallery, Gallery IHN, and Growrich Gallery. Some of the art spaces have their own cafes and restaurants, so you can enjoy a meal and see art all in one. Even if you don’t have a set itinerary in mind, the area is worth a stroll for all the galleries and other unique spaces in the area.

A couple of small museums in the neighborhood are also worth stopping into. The Gahoe Museum ([02/741-0466; 11-103 Gahoe-dong, Jongno-gu]), located on the north of the Hanok village, is a privately run museum in a traditional-style building with traditional folk paintings and displays of shamanistic talismans. It’s open 10am to 6pm Tuesday to Sunday, and admission is ₩3,000 for ages 18 and up and ₩2,000 for children and students. The Tibet Museum ([02/735-8149; 115-2 Beonji, Sogyeok-dong, Jongno-gu]) is a small two-story building nestled in the hills between apartments and other unlikely buildings (signs in English from Anguk Station point you to the museum). Open 10am–7pm; admission is ₩5,000 for adults, ₩3,000 for students.

Books

One of the best overall bookstores for English-language volumes and selection is Kyobo Mungo ([02/1544-1900], located on the basement floor of the Kyobo Building (take subway line 1 to Gwanghwamun Station, exit 3) and in the basement level of the Kyobo Gangnam Tower (subway to Gangnam Station, exit 6). Open daily from 10am to 9pm, they also have a pretty good selection of CDs and DVDs. Another major bookstore is the Bandi & Luni’s ([02/600-6002]), with imported English-language books, with locations in the COEX Mall (subway line 2, Samseong Station, exit 6) and the basement level of the Jongno Tower (subway line 1, Jonggak Station, exit 2). Also a good bet is Seoul Selection Bookshop ([02/734-9565], on the basement level of the Korean Publishers Association building. They have a wide selection of books on Korean culture, CDs, and DVDs. Open Monday through Saturday 9:30am to 6:30pm. Take subway line 3 to Anguk Station (exit 1) or line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 2).

The Ulchi Book Center (☎ 02/757-8991), located on the subway level at Euljiro Station (line 2), has a good selection of the latest bestsellers and instruction books for English-language teachers.

The Royal Asiatic Society has a South Korea branch in Seoul (☎ 02/763-9483; room no. 611 of the Korean Christian building). They have a solid selection of books in English about South Korea, as well as some foreign magazines. Open Monday to Friday 10am to noon and 2 to 5pm. Take subway line 1 to Jongno 5(o)-ga (exit 2).

Custom Tailors
Getting tailor-made clothes or just having a piece of clothing altered in Seoul is quick and easy. The custom tailors in Dongdaemun Market can alter something for you right on the spot or make shirts, suits, silk items, or dresses to your specifications. You can get a tailored suit for about ￦150,000 to ￦250,000. Unfortunately, although they are affordable, most of them don’t speak a lot of English. For easier communication, try the tailors in Itaewon (there are over a hundred of them here), who are used to foreign customers. Some of the shops will even make custom-made leather items. Most of them can custom-make something for you within a couple of days (let them know when you need it) and will deliver items to your hotel.

Electronic Goods
If you're looking for electronic goods, look no further than the Yongsan Electronics Market ★★★★. A grouping of 22 buildings and over 5,000 small shops, it has every electronic gadget, part, or equipment imaginable. The largest collections are in the Terminal Electronics Market, Seonin, IPark Mall, and Najin Market, each specializing in specific products. Electronics Land is the newest mall on the block. Seonin Mall is the computer specialty seller. Najin Market is the most crowded but has the best bargains. Prices here are generally lower than those at regular stores, but they hold sales about every 3 months. Be sure to check before buying anything and ask for warranties, if you're unsure about authenticity. Generally open daily 10am to 8pm, the markets are closed the first and third Sundays of each month, but the flea market happens (in front of Seonin and Najin) every weekend, 9am to 7pm. Take subway line 1 to Yongsan Station (exit 3) or line 4 to Sinyongsan Station. Most eateries in the area are geared toward the vendors, but you'll find good Korean cuisine on levels 4, 5, and 6 of IPark Mall.

Jewelry
Wholesale and retail jewelry shops are clustered in the streets and alleyways around Jongno 3(sam)-ga to Jongno 5(o)-ga, so the area is called the Jongno Jewelry District. There are a wide variety of designs and items to choose from and prices are generally about 30% to 40% lower than those of other jewelry shops in the country. If you're looking for watches specifically, try “Watch Alley” in Yeji-dong. The back alleys in the area and in Bong-ik-dong have shops that are specifically wholesale, so they may not be willing to sell single items. Many of the stores have their own factories and production centers, so you can get items custom-made or have a designer piece copied (or you may see copies already made in some of the stores). Be sure to get an A/S warranty card and certificate of authenticity when you buy something. A bit of bargaining is possible, but since prices are already discounted, vendors won’t cut the price that much. Paying with cash will always get you a better price than paying with credit cards. Take subway line 1 or 3 to Jongno 3(sam)-ga Station (exit 10 or 11 for the jewelry district or exit 12 for the jewelry “department store”). Open daily from 9am to 9:30pm.

Secondhand Stores
Koreans have a general dislike of used items, but they’re trying to encourage reusing and recycling with the Beautiful Store ★★, 45 Anguk-dong, Jongno-gu (☏ 02/3676-1009; www.beautifulstore.org; take subway line 3 to Anguk Station, exit 1). A bargain hunter’s paradise in Insadong, they have racks filled with secondhand clothes, starting at a mere W2,000. Upstairs, they have art objects, CDs, and books available for a reasonable price. All profits go to charitable causes, mainly Oxfam projects throughout Asia. You can even donate your gently used items to make room for more souvenirs in your luggage. Open 10:30am to 10pm Monday to Saturday, they have locations all over the country, including one in Hongdae-ap.

Shoes
If you’re looking for inexpensive tennis shoes or other footwear, check out the bottom floors of the Dongdaemun Market. On the other end, if you have a designer shoe fetish, walk your boots over to “Designer Shoe Alley” in Apgujeong-dong. Between the big Galleria department store and Cheongdam intersection, you’ll see a street with all the luxury brands. At the Gucci store, walk up the little alley to the left and you’ll find a hidden handful of South Korean designer shoe stores, with styles you won’t find at home. Korean shoe sizes may be too small for you, but if you have the time, they can custom-order shoes for you and get them to you in about a week.

8 SEOUL AFTER DARK

Like any cosmopolitan city, Seoul comes alive when the sun goes down, and in some cases the fun just doesn’t stop. Places like Dongdaemun have night markets that see more action during the early-morning hours than during the day. Nighttime fun can be had pretty much all over the city. Good for overall nightlife is Myeongdong, where you can have dinner and stop for a cup of coffee or a beer at many of the cafes and bars in the area.

Seoul’s beautiful people tend to head for the most upscale and exclusive bars in Apgujeong-dong or nearby Sinsadong, where you’ll find the pricey clubs, wine bars, and dancing. Also on this side of the river, Gangnam draws a more relaxed, younger crowd. In the evenings, pojang machas pop up around Gangnam Station, and young professionals hit the clubs and bars after a tough day at the many IT firms in the area. Since most Korean-Americans who’ve relocated to Seoul live in Gangnam, it’s not difficult to find Western-style clubs and bars here.

If you’re not much of a drinker, or prefer a bit of culture while you imbibe, head over to the Daehangno area. You’ll find hundreds of cafes, clubs, and bars, tucked into alleyways between little theaters and galleries. Most of the places cater to the college students in the area, so they won’t be as overpriced as places south of the river.

Another area popular with the students is Shinchon, where you’ll find cute cafes (to draw the girls from Ewha University), boutiques, bars, and discos. Just a short walk beyond are the clubs and bars around Hongdae, which have the hippest live performances and dance floors. Make sure you’re dressed to impress, or you may be denied entry to some of the clubs. Not all of them are foreigner-friendly either, so be sure to check around before just walking into any old bar.

If you want to hang out in a more international area, Itaewon has cafes, clubs, and restaurants that cater to people from many nations. What used to be the seedy red-light district around the American military base has grown up to be an attractive nightspot, although you can still find soldiers looking for a “meet market” and ladies of the night.

Business travelers tend to stick to the clubs and bars in Seoul’s deluxe hotels. Drinks will be on the expensive side, but you’ll get first-class service and get to mingle with the upper crust and South Korea’s new professional class. Whatever your tastes (or budget), Seoul is a city that doesn’t sleep.

PERFORMING ARTS

Chongdong Theater ★★ An excellent place to see live performances of Korean traditional music, song, and dance, the Chongdong Theater was the first modern theater of traditional singing, instruments, and plays. Under the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, it is home to the Traditional Performing Arts Series, which emphasizes four genres—dance, Pungmul, Sori (traditional song performance), and musical instruments. Located in the middle of Seoul, the theater is near Deoksugung. Performances happen every day (except Mon) and last about 80 minutes. You’ll have an opportunity to take pictures with the performers afterward. Don’t worry if you don’t understand the words, since English and Japanese subtitles are provided. There are only 400 seats in the theater, so reservations are highly suggested. They also offer a Jang-go school, which is a 20-minute class that features a hands-on opportunity to play a Korean traditional drum (the jang-go). For an additional fee, you can try on some of the Korean traditional costumes. You can reserve tickets for both performances and classes directly from their website and receive a 10% discount. If ordering online, request tickets before 5pm the day before the performance. 8-11 Jeong-dong, Jongno-gu. 02/751-1500. www.chongdong.com. Tickets W20,000 “A” seat (side and back); W30,000 “S” seats (middle); W15,000 Jang-go School. MC, V. Tues–Sun 8–9:20pm Apr–Nov, 4–5:20pm Dec–Mar. The best way to get there is to take subway line 1 to City Hall Station (exit 1). You can also take line 2 to City Hall Station (exit 12) and take the 5-min. walk along the Deoksugung palace wall.

National Theater ★★ Established in 1950, the National Theater has four resident companies—the National Drama Company, the National Changgeuk Company, the National Dance Company, and the National Orchestra. Other than traditional performances, they also have international performances (the musical Cats, for example, played there). There is a main theater, a smaller space, a small studio for experimental performances, and an outdoor stage (with free informal performances, mostly in the summer). San 14-67, Jangchung-dong, Jung-gu. 02/2280-4121 (for tickets, call 02/2280-4115). Fax 02/2280-4125. Foreigners need to download their booking form and either fax or e-mail it. www.ntok.go.kr. Tickets W10,000 and over for the smaller theater, and can be much more expensive for major performances. AE, DC, M, V. Subway line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 1 or 8). Alternatively, take subway line 3 to Dongguk University Station (exit 6) and walk 15 min., or take exit 2 and take the shuttle bus that operates 40 and 20 min. before each performance.

Sejong Cultural Center ★★ Originally built in 1978, the Sejong Cultural Center is the largest arts and cultural center in the city. Remodeled in 2004, the main theater has three levels and over 3,000 seats. Each seat on the first two levels has an LCD screen for narration and information. Located in the heart of the city, near the Gyeongbokgung Palace, it really is the major cultural center for Seoul. You can see everything from chamber orchestra concerts to live rock bands, traditional Korean performances, and classical music concerts. The small chamber hall, which opened in late 2006, seats about 442 people. The outdoor Garden of Art opened in spring of 2007. Indoors, the cultural center houses three other art galleries, including the underground Arts Forum Gwang Hwa Moon Gallery, which offers a window view for pedestrians walking by in the subway. Tip: They offer free small performances for locals who live and work in the area. Since they don't really check for ID, it can be a great way to see a surprisingly good show and save your won for a drink afterward. 81-3 Sejong-no, Jongno-gu. 02/399-1114 (for tickets 02/541-2614), www.sejongpac.or.kr. Tickets W50,000–W200,000 for major performances. MC, V. Office Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, except for holidays. Subway line 5 to Gwanghwamun Station (exit 1 or 8).

Seoul Arts Center ★★★ The nation’s first arts complex, it houses five buildings—the Opera House, the Concert Hall, Hangaram Art Museum, the Seoul Calligraphy Art Museum, and the Arts Library/Design Museum, built between 1982 and 1993. The center features opera performances (like La Bohème or Carmen), orchestra concerts of classical music, plays, ballets, modern and traditional dance, and imported American musicals. They also hold a variety of exhibitions of international artists, contemporary Korean artists, traditional ceramics, and the like. 700 Seocho-dong, Seocho-gu. 02/580-1514. For tickets call 02/580-1301 or 580-1400, or go to the box office in person. www.sac.or.kr/eng (there is no online booking in English). Tickets vary depending on performance or exhibition. Take subway line 3 to Nambu Terminal Station (exit 5) and take the free shuttle bus from there, or take green bus no. 12 or blue bus no. 4429. Shuttle buses run Tues–Sat 60, 50, 40, and 30 min. before performances, and Sun 60 and 30 min. before.

Dinner Theater

Korea House ★★★ Dining like royalty isn’t cheap, but it is an enjoyable experience, especially when it’s coupled with a music and dance performance. If you just want the meal, come for lunch, or skip the meal and stop in for one of two daily evening performances (only one Sun) of pansori (traditional Korean “opera”), mask dances, and other music in this hanok, built during the Joseon dynasty. Performances last an hour. On weekends, they perform traditional weddings or provide folk games for people to play. The Namsangol Hanok village is nearby and worth a gander if you have time to spare. They also have a tea shop and an art shop where you can browse various folk crafts. 80-2 Pil-dong 2-ga, Jung-gu. 02/2266-9101. www.koreahouse.or.kr. Dinner and performance W57,000–W99,000 depending on menu; performance only W29,000. AE, MC, V. Performances Mon–Sat 7 and 8:50pm, Sun 8pm; lunch served noon–2pm. Subway line 3 or 4 to Chungmuro Station (exit 3) and walk toward the Pil-dong hospital.

Other Performing Arts Venues

Chongdong Nanta Theatre ★★★ Don’t worry about not understanding the lines in these performances, because there is no dialogue. The “chefs” of this nonverbal theater performance dramatize Korean percussion traditions of Samulnori in a contemporary comedy as they prepare a wedding feast. Since its debut in 1997, it has been playing to packed houses. Jeong-dong A&C, Jeong-dong 15-1, Jung-gu. 02/739-8288 (Korean only). www.nanta.co.kr. VIP tickets W60,000; “S” tickets W50,000; “A” tickets W40,000. MC, V. Performances Mon–Fri 4 and 8pm; Sat 1, 4, and 8pm; Sun and holidays 3 and 6pm. Subway line 5 to Seodaemun Station (exit 5), walk toward the Kyunghyang daily newspaper building, walk about 50m (164 ft.) to the Jeongdong Theatre, turn left at Yewon high school and walk just a bit farther to the Chongdong Theatre.
CASINOS
Casinos in South Korea are open only to foreigners (except for Gangwon Land), so be sure to take your passport with you. There are two Seven Luck Casinos in Seoul, run by a subsidiary of the Korea Tourism Organization. One is in Gangnam (take subway line 2 to Samsseong Station, exit 5 or 6) and the other is in Gangbuk (take subway line 1 to Seoul Station, exit 8, or line 4 to Hoehyeon Station, exit 4). The only other casino in Seoul is inside the Paradise Walker Hill hotel (☎ 02/2204-3321) in Gwangjin-gu.

Outside of organized casinos, many tourist hotels also have game rooms with slot machines.

MOVIE THEATERS
There are dozens of movie theaters in Seoul that show the latest domestic box office hits as well as popular Hollywood films. South Korean films aren’t shown with English subtitles, but you can see them in one of hundreds of DVD bahngs, small private rooms where you can watch DVDs. Many of them can be found in university areas and usually cost about W7,000 per person. If you do go see a movie in the theater, English-language films are always shown subtitled in Korean. Be aware that movies are quite popular in Seoul and tickets sell out quickly, especially on Saturdays and holidays. Seats are assigned, so it’s best to get them early anyway. On weekends evening shows can be sold out by early afternoon, so plan ahead.

Some of the theaters that show international films are as follows: COEX Mall’s Megaplex Cineplex, which has 16 screens; Seoul Cinema (take subway line 1, 3, or 5 to Jongno 3-ga, exit 14); Cineplus (subway line 3 to Apgujeong Station, exit 3), which has great seats and a fabulous sound system; or any one of the CGV theaters. The country’s first art house theater showing cutting-edge films is Dongseung Cinematheque (take subway line 4 to Hyehwa Station, exit 1, and walk toward the Hyehwa rotary).

The Korean Overseas Information Service also offers occasional free Korean movies with English subtitles, organized by Seoul Selection Bookshop (☎ 02/734-9565; www.seoulselection.com). Check with them for the latest schedule and screening info.

BARS & CLUBS
It can get a bit costly just walking into any drinking establishment in Seoul. Even a casual hof (German-style beer garden), if it’s frequented by South Korean patrons, will usually require that you order overpriced anju (drinking snacks) with your drinks. Especially pricey are “booking clubs” where singles pay “bookers” to hook them up with an available mate of the opposite sex. An unfortunate part of modern South Korean culture, these clubs are to be avoided, since neither the music nor the drinks are the attraction. Fortunately, more casual beer joints have opened up recently, where you can grab a few drinks with friends without being forced to order an expensive fruit platter (not exactly traditional bar fare anyway). But you’ll find there is no shortage of places to imbibe, since Koreans love to drink.

In the past few years, upscale wine bars have been all the rage. Since all wine has to be imported from elsewhere, even mediocre vintages can be pricey. But the good news is that good wine and elegant places to drink it have opened up all over the city. Tip: Avoid the ubiquitous (and expensive) cheese platters that seem to appear on every wine bar menu. It may sound tempting, but the cheese selection is never very good and it’s served with either Saltines or Ritz crackers.

One nice place is Romanée Conti, 6206 Samcheong-dong (☎ 02/722-1633), whose sign reads WINE & PARTY. I don’t know about the party part, but they do have the wine.
Across the street from Samcheongdong Sujebi, they’re open daily from noon to 1am. Bottles generally are in the W20,000 to W40,000 range.

An unpretentious hotel bar at which to get a Guinness is O’Kim’s ★★ (☏ 02/317-0388), located on the basement floor of the Westin Chosun. They also have good, solid burgers to satisfy that craving, but a mug of beer will set you back W8,500. You’ll also find business travelers (and women wanting to meet them) around the bar at J.J. Mahoney’s (☏ 02/799-8601) on the basement floor of the Grand Hyatt. Drinks are a bit on the pricey side, but you’ll get solid service and live music. Mahoney’s is open 6pm to 2am Sunday through Thursday, and 6pm to 3am Friday and Saturday.

College students and the 20-something crowd are usually hanging out in Hongdae-ap (the area in front of Hong-ik U), which is crowded even in the daytime, but becomes positively electric at night. Hongdae is the area for hip-hop, punk, folk—pretty much any sort of music you’re into. The live clubs are great for seeing underground bands that haven’t hit the big time yet. The problem with the Hongdae scene is that it changes so much, but this is one of the few areas in the city (other than Itaewon) where you can find Western-style clubs where people actually dance.

The best time to go is the last Friday of the month, which has been dubbed “Club Day” (☏ 02/333-3921) since 2001. You pay a flat fee of W15,000 and get into over a dozen clubs in the area, plus a drink on the house. There is a limit to tickets sold so get there early. The easiest way to get there is to take subway line 2 to the Hong-ik University Station (exit 6) or line 6 to Sangsu Station. A low-key place to hear live music in the area is Moonglow, 373-6 Seogyo-dong, Mapo-gu ★★★ (☏ 02/324-5105) on the basement level of the building. It’s open Monday through Saturday 6pm to 1am; live music is usually from 9 to 11:30pm. Owner and jazz pianist Shin Kwan-Woong plays every night with old Korean hepcats accompanying him. Be sure to have at least a couple of drinks or you’ll get charged a “live music” fee of W5,000.

For an international crowd, your best bets are the joints in Itaewon. A fun place with a tropical flair (fake palm trees and all) is Bungalow Bar (☏ 010/9001-2380). Take off your shoes and socks at the door because the entire floor is covered in sand. A cozy place to get a tropical drink, the bar plays low-key lounge music. If you’re looking for a place to get your moves on, the dance floor comes alive after midnight at Lime Night (☏ 02/790-0588). They play the latest techno, hip-hop, and club music into the wee hours. On Thursday nights the happening place is Helios, which draws a crowd more for their free drink and ladies’ nights than for the music, which is the usual hip-hop fare. A classier, Euro-style joint that draws the 30-plus crowd is 3 Alley Pub (☏ 02/749-3336), which has a good group of regulars who come for the congenial atmosphere and the large selection of brews. The hippest place to have a drink and hear local DJs spin is Bar Nana, located near the French restaurant, St. Ex, behind the Hamilton hotel. With an eclectic interior, they have regular live bands and special events.

A mellower spot in Itaewon is the unpretentious standard, All That Jazz ★★, 168-17 Itaewon-dong, Yongsan-gu (☏ 02/795-5701), where the live music starts around 9pm. Take subway line 1 to Itaewon Station (exit 1); the club is on the second floor next to the Nike shop. Cover charge starts at W10,000. Arrive early if you want to snag a table.

If you want to go where the young jet set go to play, head over to Gangnam. Even older revelers will appreciate the live jazz and blues at the Once in a Blue Moon, 85-1 Cheongdam-dong, Gangnam-gu (☏ 02/549-5490). Music starts around 7pm on most nights and the band plays until about 12:30am (until 11:20pm Sun). An excellent place to get an authentic Czech brew is Castle Praha ★★, 1306-6 Seocho-dong, Seocho-gu.
Sing Your Heart Out

A popular part of South Korean nightlife is the noraebang (singing room), where you can rent a private room with a karaoke machine so that you and your friends can belt out your favorite tunes. You choose from a menu of songs, input the numbers into the system, and take turns singing and dancing along to old American, Korean, and other Asian favorites.

You can’t swing a dead cat in Seoul without hitting a noraebang. The hipper ones are in the college areas of Hongdae-ap and Daehangno. Most of them have songs in English (albeit, older pop hits from the ’80s and ’90s). Some of them in more expensive areas, like Apgujeong, can get pretty steep (over W100,000 per hour), so be sure to ask the price before you step into a room. Most of these places are open daily from around 5pm to 2am, and you rent rooms by the hour (W12,000–W20,000), depending on the place and the size of the room. They serve only sodas and beers.

(☎ 02/596-9200; www.castlepraha.com), on the second basement level of the Pagoda Tower (subway line 2 to Gangnam Station, exit 6). They also have a location in Hongdae (☎ 02/334-2121, 395-19 Seogyo-dong, Mapo-gu; take subway line 2 to Hapjeong Station, exit 3), around the corner from the Bobo Hotel. Both locations are open noon to 2am Monday to Thursday, until 3am Friday and Saturday, and 3pm to midnight Sunday. Another place for good beer is O’Kim’s Brauhaus, 159 Samsung-dong, Gangnam-gu (☎ 02/6002-7006), on the first floor on the Co-ex building (subway line 2 to Samsung Station). They have a brewery on the premises and make three German beers (the varieties change depending on the season) plus a Korean brew, and they have other imported bottled beers, as well.

Even more upscale are the joints in Apgujeong. A popular place in the area is A.O.C. (☎ 02/541-9260), which is a fancy restaurant by day, wine bar by night. They have a decent selection of wines, which are reasonably priced relative to other places in the area. Even more popular is Grand Harue (☎ 02/546-9981) (and its little sister, Harue, across the alley), which started life as a French restaurant, but became more known as a drinking spot, where the Apgujeong crowds come to see and be seen. It’s located near the Cheongdam intersection in the heart of the luxury-goods shopping area. Located near Dosan Park is the popular cafe/wine bar Plastic, which has high ceilings with blue skylights and a designer fireplace in the middle of the long, open space. The outdoor garden is also a pretty fabulous place to enjoy a glass of wine.

The hippest nightclub in the area is Tribeca (☎ 02/3448-4450), popular with Apgujeong’s A-list. The split-level layout and high ceilings give it a Manhattan feel. Near the Hakdong intersection, it’s in the alley between the Coffee Bean and Burger King.

GAY & LESBIAN BARS

Although some actors and musicians in South Korea have publicly come out, homosexuality remains largely taboo in Korean society. Same-sex couples are rarely seen in public. However, public displays of affection between friends of the same gender are common. You’ll see young men holding each other’s hands and girls walking with their arms linked together all over the city. There is a quiet but active gay scene in Seoul, but many gay clubs keep a relatively low profile, because of the homophobia in most of society. The gay and lesbian scene can be found in Jongno, in the college areas of Sincheon and thereabouts, and especially in the area of Itaewon with the unfortunate nickname “Homo Hill.” Lesbian clubs are more difficult to find, even for South Korean natives. But a few “Korean-style” lesbian bars can be found in the Sincheon area in Idea-ap (near Ewha Women’s University) and Hong-ik University.

One of the oldest openly gay bars in Itaewon has become an upscale wine bar (still gay-friendly, of course) called Bar Bliss (☎ 02/749-7738). If you take the subway to Itaewon Station (exit 4), walk straight and you’ll see the sign GAY OR NOT; this is one of the most elegant places to get good wine in Seoul. The mood is mellow and inviting with tasteful decor. The owner, Teddy Park, speaks excellent English and offers a “blissful hour” (rather than happy hour) when drinks are two for one from 6 to 11 pm. The bar closes at 3 am on weekdays and 5 am on weekends.

If you want to shake your booty to some electronica/dance music, head to Del’s Disco, on the basement level of the Hamilton Hotel. Professional go-go boys in tight shorts pole dance against black walls while South Korea’s fashionable gay boys dance well into the wee hours. Other gay bars in the area include the established Queen (which has happy hour daily 8–11 pm) and the more modern bar next door, Always Homme (☎ 02/798-0578), where the party doesn’t end until 4 am (6 am Fri–Sat). Across the way are the more moody Why Not? and Soho.

CAFES & TEAHOUSES

Koreans love their tea and in some ways they love their coffee more. Even some of the small hole-in-the-wall restaurants will offer a free (or very cheap) machine that dispenses tiny cups of sweet instant coffee. Bad coffee aside, Western-style cafes have swept across the city, popping up in every neighborhood. Although you’ll find the American chains like Starbucks everywhere, Korean coffee shops usually have a more interesting decor, though they’re higher in price (some of them tend to be rather smoky too).

For just an honest cup of joe in Samcheongdong, try Beans Bins, 62-26 Samcheong-dong (☎ 02/736-7799), just across the street from Samcheongdong Sujebi. Just follow your nose to the smell of roasting and brewing beans. Open daily from 11 am to 11 pm, this place sells coffee at ₩5,000. If you want to unwind with a good book and a cafe latte, you can do just that at the aptly named Book Café, 27-6 Palpan-dong, Jongno-gu (☎ 02/730-1087). The owner is a book lover who loves art, music, and travel. It’s open daily 11 am to 11 pm. Another great place to tuck yourself away in a corner with a book and a steaming mug is To Go Coffee ★★, 32-21 Jae-dong, Jongno-gu (☎ 02/720-5001). You can get a cup for ₩4,000 (a bargain in this town!) and browse the selection of books or ceramics on display. They’re open Monday through Saturday 7 am to 11 pm and Sunday 10 am to 10 pm. For a fresh-roasted cup made by a real-live barista, try Bar 0101 ★★, 124-2 Samcheong-dong (☎ 02/723-1259). Don’t let the name fool you, because their specialty is coffee, with a cup of Americano starting at ₩5,500. They’re open Tuesday through Sunday 10 am to 1 am.

Of course, there is no shortage of traditional tea shops in the area. One for animal lovers is Shin Yeutzchatjib (☎ 02/737-5019), whose name means “new old tea house.” Inside a hanok, birds, rabbits, chickens, and other animals hang out among traditional masks and kimchi pots. They have traditional floor seating in the main room and in the private rooms as well. A popular place for traditional beverages is Juntong Chatjib (☎ 02/723-4909), which is located across from the Insa Art Plaza. It has antique decor and instruments in a wood and hanji (traditional paper) interior. The outdoor courtyard

Day Trips from Seoul

In some ways, the rest of South Korea can be considered a day trip from the big city. However, some places require overnight stays to really get the flavor of that region. The one exception is if you plan to visit the DMZ/Panmunjeom area. You pretty much have to do it in a day with an organized tour, since there are no places to spend the night, due to security concerns. See chapter 6 on Gyeonggi-do for details. You can also make a ski trip to Gangwon-do (see chapter 11), visit the kilns in Icheon (p. 137), see the traditional village and fortress in Suwon (p. 134), or just hike the trails in any of South Korea’s national parks, all while using Seoul as your base for travel.

is nice for warm evenings. Nearby on the second floor is the Yeut Chatjib (☏ 02/722-5332), which has a distinctive old-timey feel with everyday tools hanging from the warm, clay walls. You can have your choice of seating from traditional floor tables, or chunky wood tables and benches. If you had to choose only one chatjib (tea house) in the area, a good choice would be Gwicheon (☏ 02/734-2828), a favorite among writers and poets, since it’s owned by the wife of famous poet Cheon Sang-byeong. She serves high-quality teas with ingredients she grows at home. Gwicheon is open 11am to 10pm daily. If you want to get the feeling for Korea about 70 years ago, go and find Appa Uhlyeosseul Jjeok-eh (☏ 02/733-3126), whose name means “when Dad was young.” Enter the crowded space and it’s like stepping into a time warp. They have a black-and-white TV, old memorabilia, and a menu made from an old primary school board. Open daily from 11am to midnight, they’re in the alley on the right side of Insa 3(sam)-gil.

Other than traditional tea shops, there are plenty of modern teahouses. One of these is O’Sulloc Tea House ★★★, which has several locations throughout the city. The one in Myeongdong is next to Woori Bank (near Myeongdong Cathedral) and is open daily 8am to 10pm. The one in Daehangno is huge, with a nice upstairs terrace. You can’t miss it, just up the street from the Coffee Bean; it’s open daily 9am to 10:30pm. It has a variety of food items and green tea blends, herbal infusions, and even green tea soaps for sale, in a charming atmosphere. Drinks range from ₩5,000 to ₩9,000, cakes ₩3,000 to ₩4,500.

There are a large number of eclectic cafes that cater to the college kids in Hongdae-ap. One place to enjoy a lovely cup of tea is the Tea Loft ★ (☏ 02/772-3996) on the 14th floor of the Lotte Department Store in Myeongdong. Open daily from 10:30am to 9:30pm, they specialize in teas and a nice variety of ddeok (rice cakes). Menu items run about ₩6,000 to ₩8,000. A quieter place to enjoy a cup of English tea is the nearby Nina’s Paris ★★ (☏ 02/777-2974). Open 9am to 10pm Monday through Friday and 1 to 7pm Saturday; a personal pot of tea starts at only ₩4,000.

You can enjoy a cup of coffee and get an unusual fish pedicure at Namu Geuneul ★★★★ (☏ 02/599-1210), located on the second floor above the clothing store Basic House (subway to Gangnam Station, exit 6). Open 10am to midnight; beverages cost ₩4,000 to ₩10,000 and you can indulge in baked goods from their “buffet,” while the fish nibble at your feet. It’s ₩2,000 for 15 minutes of ticklish fun.
In Apgujeong, a place for tea or coffee and pretty cakes is Amelie (☏ 02/547-9003), which is located in the area’s “Rodeo Drive.” They’re open daily from 8am to midnight; menu items range from ₩3,000 to ₩5,000.

An unusual place to enjoy a cup of joe and the view of the Han River is the Han-gang Jeongmang Café Rainbow ★★★ (☏ 02/511-7345), located on the south side of the Hannam Bridge. Open 11am to midnight (until 11pm Nov–Feb); beverages are a reasonable ₩3,500 to ₩5,000. The cafe is easily accessible from Han River Park (you can take a water taxi to the Hannam River stop) or take bus no. 140, 142, 144, 241, 402, 407, 408, 420, 421, 470, 471, or 472 (going northbound over the bridge).
Gyeonggi-do

Gyeonggi-do (Gyeonggi province) is like a giant doughnut surrounding the city of Seoul. In fact, Seoul gave this province its name, back in 1018, during the Goryeo Dynasty. “Gyeong” means “capital city designated by the king” and “gi” means “150 kilometers of land in the four directions from where the king lived.” How’s that for a mouthful?

Located in the northwestern part of South Korea, the fertile plains created by the Han River have made Gyeonggi-do ideal farmland, and it’s been inhabited since prehistoric times. Today, it is the most populous of South Korea’s provinces and includes the cities of Incheon (home to the airport where you most likely arrived), Suwon (the provincial capital), and Icheon (the ceramics center of the country).

The province is now largely industrial, thanks to overflow from Seoul—indeed, it’s sometimes difficult to tell where Seoul ends and the province begins. Still, you can see traces of South Korea’s not-so-distant agricultural past in the rice paddies and fields that remain. It is an eclectic province encompassing high-tech developments, remnants of Korea’s agrarian history, and traces of traditional art and culture.

Gyeonggi-do borders the Yellow Sea, and Pyongtaek Harbor, the closest harbor to China. More interestingly, Gyeonggi-do also borders North Korea’s Hwanghae province. In fact, the top part of Gyeonggi-do was lopped off when the country was split in two.

All areas of the province can be enjoyed as day trips from Seoul. However, if you’re planning on spending more than a day here, you may want to overnight in one of the province’s cities. Buses are the fastest and least expensive way to get around, but Seoul’s subway system extends to parts of the province. Regular and express trains are also available.

1 SUWON

Sometimes called the South Korean capital of football (or soccer, for Americans), Suwon is also the capital of the Gyeonggi province. Located just 30km (19 miles) south of Seoul, it has been known as the “City of Filial Piety” ever since 1796, when King Jeongjo constructed the Hwaseong Fortress here to guard the tomb of his father. Of course, he was also hoping to use the fortress as a lure in an unsuccessful attempt to move the nation’s capital to Suwon.

Famous for its galbi (beef ribs), the city is home to the Korean Folk Village and South Korea’s answer to Disneyland, Everland. The site of some of the 2002 FIFA World Cup games, the city has made a real effort in the past few years to get out from under the shadow of Seoul.

GETTING THERE  The nearest airport is at Incheon, and there’s a limousine bus from there to Suwon (in front of gate 7A, or at bus stop 3 or 12). The ride from the airport takes about 90 minutes and costs about W14,000. The limousine buses run daily every 15 to 20 minutes starting at 6:30am until 10pm. Suwon is also on the KTX railway line (from Seoul to Busan) and a ticket costs about W8,500 from Seoul. The regular train to Suwon costs W3,100 for a reserved seat and W2,600 for standing/unreserved seat. A cheaper alternative is to take the subway, line 1 (the dark blue one) from Seoul. It takes about an hour from the Seoul city center and drops you off at the Suwon central train station. It’s a pleasant ride and costs about W1,500. You can also take express bus no. 7770 from Sadang Station, no. 3000 from Gangnam Station, or no. 900 from Guro Station. All three buses arrive at Suwon Station.

When leaving Suwon, the most number of options are available at the main train/subway station. Many Korail trains stop at Suwon on the way to several other destinations. The main subway access area is at the lower-ground-floor level, while Korail services are on the upper level. The ticket windows for regular trains are to the left of the escalators and there’s a special window just for tickets to Seoul at the far left end of the windows. Station announcements are made in both English and Korean. Just remember to line up by the correct platform for your train, as passengers are allowed access to the platform only a few minutes before the train arrives.
GETTING AROUND  There is a queue for taxis right in front of the station, as well as less expensive local buses (although the stop names are only in Korean). Express buses (more expensive, but with fewer stops) will have certain tourist destinations written in English.

There is also a free shuttle bus from Suwon Station to the Korean Folk Village. You can purchase an admission ticket to the folk village at the tourist booth, to the left when you exit the main station. You can board the shuttle bus near the car park. It takes about 30 to 40 minutes and brings you to the main entrance of the village.

VISITOR INFORMATION  There is a tourist information booth just outside of Suwon subway/train station (when you exit the main doors, go left) (☏ 031/249-5146), one at the Korean Folk Village (☏ 031/287-1332), and an info booth at Hwaseong Fortress (☏ 031/228-4677). The official Suwon website is at http://eng.suwon.ne.kr or call ☏ 031/256-8300.

EXPLORING SUWON  Everland (Kids)  On a completely different note from the traditional offerings in Suwon is the country’s largest amusement park. It claims to be the fifth-most-popular amusement park in the world, and it has the massive crowds and long lines to prove it—be prepared to wait. Among the highlights are two roller coasters, a small zoo, and European World, featuring architecture and food from Europe. There are high-tech 3-D games located in an outdoor facility, although these games are not available when it’s raining.

Caribbean Bay, the water park next door, requires a separate admission fee of W30,000 for adults and W23,000 for kids during low season from January to May, going up from there. It includes several water slides, wave pool, tube ride, kiddie pool, and more.

310 Jeondae-li, Pogok-myeon, Gyeonggi-go. ☏ 031/320-5000 or 02/759-1943. www.everland.com. Admission, 27,000 adults, 20,000 children. Daily 9:30am–10pm (opens 9am on some Sun). From Seoul, take subway line 1 to Suwon Station, and then local bus no. 66 or 6000. From Gangnam Bus Station take bus no. 1113, 1500, 1500-2, 5002, or 5800. If driving, take Singal JC and go toward Maseong IC; then follow the signs to Everland.

Hanguk Minseokchon (Korean Folk Village) ★ (Kids)  Created in 1974, this village is really more like an open-air folk museum designed to show how Koreans once lived. It’s one of several such villages throughout the country, but because it is the closest to Seoul, it is the best known and most frequently visited, though in my opinion the one in Andong (p. 274) is probably a better example of traditional country life. Set on 97 hectares (240 acres), there are over 260 traditional homes and buildings from the late Joseon period. Try to time your visits for any number of the performances during the day (see below). On holidays and weekends, they also perform ancestral rites and other traditional folk activities. The Korean Folk Museum is worth a gander, if you want to pay the extra admission, but the Haunted House is quite cheesy—best to skip it. If you visit around lunchtime, you may be tempted to stop in at one of the restaurants at the entry, but hold out until you can get to the Korean food court inside the village, where they have a larger variety of offerings and alfresco dining.

107, Bora-dong, Giheung-gu, Yong-in, Gyeonggi-do 449-900. ☏ 031/288-0000. General admission W12,000 adults, W9,000 youth, W8,000 children; unlimited usage (including the folk museum) W16,000 adults, W14,000 youth, W13,000 children. Summer daily 9am–6:30pm; winter daily 9am–5pm; opens 30 min. later Sun and holidays. Showtimes: Farmer’s music and dance 11am and 3pm (Mar–Oct), 2:30pm (Nov–Feb); seesaw performance 11:30am and 3:30pm (Mar–Oct), 3pm (Nov–Feb); tightrope acrobatics 11:40am and 3:40pm (Mar–Oct), 3:10pm (Nov–Feb); traditional wedding noon and 4:30pm (Mar–Oct), 4pm (Nov–Feb); equestrian feats 1 and 4pm (Mar–Oct), 3:30pm (Nov–Feb). The Rice Box King Honoring ancestors is an important part of Korean culture, but King Jeongjo had particular reason to want to honor his father. His grandfather, King Yeongjo, had ruled for 52 years, but as he came to the end of his life, he became convinced that his son (Jeongjo’s father), Prince Sado, was trying to overthrow him. Yeongjo had his son sealed in a rice box until Sado died. Young Jeongjo witnessed this tragedy, and after he ascended the throne, he had his father posthumously crowned and given the name King Jangjo. Some suggest that he built the Suwon fortress and palace structures so that he could live close by his beloved father’s grave.

Hwaseong Haeng-gung Palace ★ “Haeng-gung” means a temporary shelter where a king rests or retires from a war, and the Hwaseong Haeng-gung is the largest of such temporary palaces in South Korea. It was built during the Joseon Dynasty. King Jeongjo stayed here at the time of Wonghaeng (his “long journey”) and also used the palace as the place to celebrate his mother’s 60th birthday. If you happen to visit between March and November, plan your visit for the Jangyongyeong guarding ceremony held at the front gate Sundays at 2pm. On Saturdays between March and November, you can see traditional performances. And weekdays between March and November, at 11am, the 24 Martial Arts Preservation Association usually performs martial arts from the Joseon period, as well as those adapted from China and Japan.

1,000 adults, 700 students and military, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 5 and under. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm Mar–Oct, 10am–5pm Nov–Feb.

Suwon Hwaseong (Suwon Fortress) ★★★ Though not nearly as huge as the Great Wall of China, this unusual fortress is still quite impressive. King Jeongjo ordered the building of a fortress wall around the city to guard the tomb of his father in 1794, during the late Joseon period. Constructed under the guidance of philosopher Jeong Yag-yong, it was Jeongjo’s unsuccessful attempt at making Suwon the nation’s capital. Finished in 1796, the 5.5km-long (3½-mile) wall, along with various military facilities, was severely damaged during the Korean War. Restoration work began in 1974 and was completed in 1979, with much help from records published shortly after King Jeongjo’s death (although seven structures and parts of the wall have never been restored). Designated a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1997, the wall used to encircle the entire city, but with Suwon’s booming growth, the city now surrounds the fortress. It’s best to enter at the Changnyongmun (the east gate, or Dongmun), since it’s easier to find from the road than the Paldalmun (the south gate), located up the road from a shijang (market). If the weather is good and you have the time, you can walk around the entire fortress in 2 to 3 hours.
There is no direct address since the fortress surrounds the old city. http://hs.suwon.ne.kr. Admission W1,000 but there's no designated ticket office and the fee taking is quite lax. Dragon train around the periphery W1,500 adults, W1,100 teens, W1,000 seniors 65 and over, W700 children. The wall daily 24 hr. Parking and dragon train Tues–Sun 10am–5:30pm. Bus no. 2, 7, 7-2, 8, or 13 from Suwon Station; get off at Jongno 4-geoli (4-way) and walk 5 min.; bus no. 1007 or 3000 to Jongno Station.

Suwon Museum  If you want to learn more about the cultural history of Suwon, this is the place to do it. The museum has a variety of relics showing the city's rich history from prehistory to present day. The building also houses the Calligraphy Museum of Korea and the real highlight, the personal collection of Lee Jong-hak, a Suwon native, who had dedicated his life to collecting historical material related to Dokdo and Geumgangsan (a mountain range which is now part of North Korea). After his death, his family donated his collection of 20,000 items, many of which give insight into Korean culture during the time of Japanese colonialization.

443 Changryongmun-gil, Yeongtong-gu, Suwon-si (1088-10, lui-dong). http://museum.suwon.ne.kr. ☎ 031/228-4127. W2,000 adults, W1,000 teens and military, free for seniors and kids. Tues–Fri 9am–6pm (last admission 1 hr. before closing). Closed Chuseok and Lunar New Year. From Suwon Station, take bus no. 24 or 46 (30-min. ride). From Suwon Station, take bus no. 60 in front of the rail freight agency and get off at the back gate of Gyeonggi Univ. Walk about 300m (984 ft.) toward the Gyeonggi provincial police office, then go toward the Suwon Foreign Language High School (about another 150m/492 ft.). From the Suwon Bus Terminal, take bus no. 3007 and get off at the back gate of Gyeonggi Univ. (and follow the direction above).

Yongjusa (Yongju Temple)  Unlike most temples, which are usually located in fairly isolated spots in the mountains or else smack in the midst of a city, Yongjusa can be found on the outskirts of Suwon, in Hwaseong. Built during the Shilla Dynasty (57 B.C.–A.D. 935), the original temple was destroyed during one of the many wars during the Goryeo Dynasty. But after a visit to his father’s nearby grave, King Jeongjo spent the night here and dreamed of a dragon with a red jewel in its mouth (an image common in Buddhist art). Seeing it as an auspicious sign, he had a new temple built here in 1790 as a place to offer prayers to his father, Prince Sado. The highlights here include the dragon motifs, a massive bronze bell cast in A.D. 854 (one of only three such bells left in the country), and a mural of a tiger smoking a pipe, which is a prime example of the shamanistic influence on Korean Buddhism. The blocks on which the Filial Piety Sutra is carved are housed at the temple, along with other museum-quality pieces. A 20-minute walk will bring you to the royal tombs, where Jeongjo and Sado are buried. You can also do a temple stay here, if you wish.

188, Songsa-li, Taean-myeon, Hwaseong-si. ☎ 031/234-0040. W1,000 adults, W700 teens and military, W500 seniors and kids. From Suwon Station, take bus no. 24 or 46 (30-min. ride).

SHOPPING  Although Suwon itself doesn't offer a great array of Korean souvenirs, you can pick up something traditional and handmade from one of the many artisans inside the Korean Folk Village. My favorites are the paper makers who make hanji (rice paper). Some of them will write your name or a phrase in Korean or Hanja (Chinese characters) for you. They're inexpensive and lightweight, and you're directly supporting folk art.

WHERE TO STAY  For cheaper options, check out any number of motels and yeogwan (budget inns) situated just around the train station and love motels (p. 48) throughout the city. As a rule, they're clean and safe, if not glamorous. Rooms usually start at ₩30,000 per night for a double on weekdays. Rates below include the 10% VAT, unless otherwise noted.

Bobos Hotel  This inexpensive motel is popular with Japanese tourists. About 15 minutes from Suwon Train Station by taxi, the rooms are simple but relatively spacious, especially for the price. The decor is nothing special, but it's not tacky either, with off-white walls and equally off-white furnishings. Includes the usual South Korean motel amenities (shampoo, soap, toothbrush, hairbrush, bathrobe, and the like, some of which I’m always afraid to use), as well as a few extras.

Hotel Castle  Hotel Castle and nearby Castle Businessotel (a amalgam of “business” and “hotel”) are located near Suwon’s World Cup Stadium, a bit outside of the city center, though there are some shops and restaurants within walking distance. This is one of the few “luxury” accommodations in Suwon, offering mostly Western-style rooms, though there are some Korean-style ondol suites (p. 47) available as well. Rooms have the usual Korean-style bathrooms (a drain in the floor for the shower). It’s not possible to book online using a foreign credit card, but you can call or e-mail them for reservations.

144-4 Wooman-dong, Paldal-gu, Suwon-si, Gyeonggi-do. ☎️ 031/211-6666 or 031/259-6666 (Businessotel). Fax 031/212-8811. www.hcastle.co.kr. 81 units; 65 units in Businessotel. ₩206,000 double, ₩227,000 deluxe double, ₩289,000 junior suite; Businessotel ₩50,000 single, ₩150,000 royal suite. 10% VAT and 10% service charge not included; discounts available outside of high season. AE, MC, V. Free parking. Amenities: 4 restaurants, bakery, bar, cafe, nightclub; health club; sauna; tennis court. In room: A/C, TV, Internet, minibar.

Regency Tourist Hotel  More institutional than inviting, its best trait is the convenient location—within walking distance of the city center. A government-rated “first-class” hotel, it has both Western-style rooms and the traditional Korean ondol rooms (with heated floors). The staff’s English isn’t great, but they are very friendly and accommodating.

47, Gucheon-dong, Suwon-si, Gyeonggi-do 9. ☎️ 031/246-4141. Fax 031/243-9296. 65 units. ₩70,000 double. AE, MC, V. Amenities: 2 restaurants, cafe, lounge, nightclub. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer.

WHERE TO DINE  Although Suwon is famous for its galbi, restaurants that specialize in other Korean cuisine will be less expensive. As in most cities, there is no shortage of places to choose from, but here are a handful of my favorites.

Bonsuwon Galbi ★★★ KOREAN BEEF  At this establishment well known for their beef rib dishes, you can get everything from meat you cook yourself at the table to galbi jjim (stewed beef ribs). As with most galbi places, you’ll get a few kimchi on the side and your rice may come last if you’re grilling, since you don’t want to fill up before you’ve finished your meat. There’s not much in the way of interior design, but people come for the food, not the environment. The menu is only in Korean.

51-20 Uman 2-dong, Paldal-gu, Suwon-si, Gyeonggi-do. ☎️ 031/241-8434. Entrees ₩33,000–₩45,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–10pm.

Ggabbinae Sohn Kalguksu ★ KOREAN NOODLES  The menu in this informal noodle joint is quite simple: You can get kal guksu (hand-cut noodles) or gongi bap (bowl rice), served with a couple of sides of kimchi. It’s great for a quick lunch or dinner, but
2 ICHEON

Located just about 40 minutes from Seoul, traffic notwithstanding, the tiny city of Icheon (not to be confused with Incheon) is well known throughout the country for its traditional pottery. Beginning during the Joseon Dynasty, the village has been the center of Korean ceramics for over 500 years, thanks to the easy availability of clay and materials nearby. It was one of the country’s three centers of celadon production during the Goryeo Dynasty as well. Since the 1960s, the city has also been the home of the Korean ceramics art movement. In fact, some of Icheon’s residents are designated “living cultural treasures.” The honor goes to those who are working hard to preserve traditional Korean methods for making pottery. Presently, there are about 80 pottery factories and over 300 active kilns.

Considered the most fertile land on the whole peninsula, Icheon is also known for its peaches and most of all its rice. This was traditionally where food for the royal family was grown. And it is, indeed, some of the tastiest rice you’re likely to find, so indulge yourself. The rice, which is served with over 15 varieties of banchan, will hardly leave a dent on your wallet. After a morning spent shopping for ceramics, you can enjoy a lunch of Icheon ssal bap, literally meaning “rice meal” (ssal means “rice,” usually uncooked, and bap means “cooked rice” or “meal”) and an afternoon soaking in a hot spring or the water park (but don’t go when you’re full).

The Pottery Wars

During the 15th and 16th centuries, Korean puncheon pottery (a grayish-colored pottery in everyday use at the time) was revered throughout Asia. So much so, in fact, that when Japan invaded Korea during the Imjin Waeran (“The Japanese Invasion in the Imjin Years”), the Japanese destroyed many kilns and kidnapped thousands of potters so that they could gain their coveted knowledge and skills. The war itself lasted for 7 years, but the rash of kidnappings happened in two waves, first in 1592 and then again from 1597 to 1598.

The arrival of Korean potters in Japan introduced certain advanced ceramic techniques, such as the kick wheel and the climbing kiln, to that country and started Japan on its way to being one of the most revered ceramic producers in the world. Rather amazingly, one of these kidnapped Korean potters, Yi Sam-Pyong, is today referred to as the “father of Japanese pottery.” Indeed, most of the forcibly relocated artisans settled in Japan’s Satsuma province, and their descendants continue to make pottery there using traditional techniques to this day. Korea didn’t fare quite so well: With virtually all of its potters gone, puncheon pottery was nearly wiped out.

Terminal, and then Icheon. Run by Buspia (☏ 02/575-7710), the buses run daily from 5:10am to 10pm; the whole ride takes about 2 hours and 20 minutes and costs ₩17,000 (₩9,000 from DongSeoul). You can also get a bus bound for Icheon directly from Seoul at the Gangnam Express Bus Terminal. Buses start running daily at 6:30am and run every 30 minutes or so until 10pm. You can also take a bus from the Dong Seoul (Gangbyeon) Bus Terminal. The buses from here start daily at 6:10am and run every 15 minutes until 10:40pm. It’s about an hour ride (longer on weekends with traffic) and will cost ₩3,600 for a standard bus and ₩4,200 for a deluxe bus (which has guaranteed seats and air-conditioning). If you’re driving, take the Jungbu Expressway (#35) and get off at the Icheon or Seo-Icheon toll exit.

GETTING AROUND There is a long line of taxis waiting outside of Icheon Bus Terminal to take you around. Average cost to go to the kilns is about ₩5,000, or you may want to take one of the local buses (which will cost you about ₩1,000). Bus no. 14 will take you to Sindun-myeon, where the majority of the kilns are located.

VISITOR INFORMATION There is a visitor center near the Seolbongho reservoir. They speak English and you can get excellent maps in English there. The city’s official website is www.icheon.go.kr, but you can also get info by calling the Tourist Information Bureau at ☏ 031/644-2020 or by dialing the Korea Travel Phone (☏ 1330). See “Special-Interest Trips,” in chapter 3, for companies that offer specialized ceramics tours from Seoul.

EXPLORING ICHEON

Haegang Ceramics Museum Run by the Haegang Institute of Koryo Celadon, this small museum displays several historical ceramic pieces as well as items by potters working today (although many of the masters are aging rapidly and fewer apprentices are learning the craft). Check to see when they’ll be firing up the kilns, since that’s more exciting to see than the small collection housed here. Since Korean ceramics are made in very high temperatures, there is a high attrition rate. Nowhere is that more evident than the piles of discarded shards visible on the site near the kilns.

330-1 Sugwang-li, Sindun-myeon, Icheon-si. (3) 031/634-2266. www хаеганг. org. Admission ￦2,000 adults, ￦1,000 teens and military, ￦500 children. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5:30pm (last entry at 5pm). Closed Jan 1, Lunar New Year, and Chuseok. Bus: From the Icheon Bus Terminal, take the bus headed toward Sindun-myeon, Sugwang-li, to the museum (a 3- to 5-min. ride). Driving: Head to Icheon and take national road 3, following signs to museum.

Icheon Ceramic/Pottery Village ★★★ It’s not really a “village” per se, but the kilns span the areas of Sugwang-li, Sindun-myeon, and Saeum-dong. Although people of the peninsula have been creating ceramics for thousands of years, this “village” has been a center of Korean traditional ceramics since its production of white porcelain during the Joseon Dynasty. To this day, the artisans here create celadon, whose production was started during the Goryeo Dynasty and has evolved into the ghostly green color we’re familiar with today. The over 300 active ceramics studios here (about 40 of which use traditional firewood kilns) offer educational insight and hands-on classes for visitors. You can even buy the handicraft of some of Korea’s “living cultural treasures.”

No direct address, but studios span Sugwang-li, Sindun-myeon, and Saeum-dong in Icheon-si. (3) 031/635-7976 or 031/644-2280. Free admission. All kilns Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, but artisans have the weekends off. Bus: 14 (head for Sindun-myeon) from Icheon Bus Terminal runs every 10 min. and takes 5 min.

Icheon World Ceramics Center The site of the biennial Icheon Ceramics Festival, which is held in odd-numbered years, the center is dedicated to ceramics making in South Korea and throughout the world. It has four main exhibition halls and a large open space for festivals and special events. You can visit the museum and ceramics center, run by the World Ceramics Exposition Foundation, even when the expo is not going on. On permanent display are works by major Korean artists and international ceramists.

Bus: Take bus no. 1113-1 from the “jwaseok” bus stop in front of Techno Mart (near Gangbyeon station), and get off at the Gwangju Joseon Royal Kiln Museum. From there, take a bus going toward Icheon Terminal and get off at the Icheon Fire Station. From there, it’s a short walk to the center. From Seoul take a bus from either the DongSeoul Bus Terminal or the Seoul Express Bus Terminal to Icheon and grab a taxi in front of the Icheon Bus Terminal. The ride is only about 5–10 min. Driving: From Seoul’s Jungbu Expwy., go to Seo-Icheon IC and take national road 3, and follow the signs; from Yeongdong Expwy., go toward Icheon IC, take national road 2, and follow the signs.

Jisan Forest Resort While not the largest ski resort in South Korea, this is definitely the closest to Seoul. You can get lift tickets for both skiing and snowboarding by time of day, starting at ￦36,000 for a morning or half-day ticket, and going up from there (except for the early-bird dawn ticket for ￦23,000). On the other side of the morning, they offer late-night skiing from midnight to 4am (Dec–Feb).

Outside of ski season, golfers can take advantage of their 18-hole courses, if you reserve at least a week in advance (3) 031/330-1441 or -1442; www. jisangolf.com). Greens fees are ￦45,000 for weekdays and ￦60,000 on weekends, with additional fees for rentals and cart use.

Termeden Spa and Resort ★★★ Kids If you have an afternoon free, pack your swimsuit and head for this water park. If you’ve forgotten your suit, you can always buy one (at a markup, of course). Open year-round, this spot is most popular on weekends and in the summer, which means summer weekends are ridiculously crowded. Termeden boasts the first-ever “German”-type spa in Asia, hence the name, which is another Korean amalgam of “terme” (“spa” in German and Italian) and “eden” (“paradise”). It has a bade pool, a large wading pool with both indoor and outdoor sections where you can swim, soak, or get a water massage. You can also get massages for an additional fee, soak in an open-air spa, or scrub yourself in a Korean-style bath. During colder weather, you can also try the stone dry sauna, which feels a bit like being baked in a clay oven. The pools close about an hour before the bath closes and kids 2 and under are admitted free. Tip: If you’re wanting a “natural” pedicure by Doctor Fish, it’s only +5,000 extra (+3,000 for kids) to have your feet “cleaned” by these skin-eating fish for 30 minutes of ticklish pleasure.

Weekdays 8am–8pm; weekends 7am–9pm; longer hours during high season. Bus: From Icheon Bus Terminal, take bus no. 16-1 to Maok Nonghyup Station in Singal-li; shuttle buses also leave from Gwanghwamun and Jamsil. Driving: Take the Jungbu Expwy. (road 35) and get off at Seo-Icheon toll exit; turn right and then turn left at Majang Sageoli (4-way), taking state road 42. Turn right onto state road 70, turn right into the Eonong Seongji district, and follow the signs to Termeden.

SHOPPING

If you’re shopping for Korean pottery, Icheon is the place. Most shops will pack your fragile purchases in special boxes for safe transport on the plane. If you buy from a high-end artisan, this may include a wooden box with a résumé of the potter.

WHERE TO STAY

Most visitors don’t overnight in Icheon, but you may wish to if you’re heading out to places beyond the next day. There are a large number of lower-end, midpriced (by South Korean standards) yeogwan, inns, and motels in town, many located around the bus terminal and some in the ceramics village. No matter what they are called, they are all very similar, offering both Western-style and ondol rooms for about W30,000 on weekdays and W40,000 to W50,000 on weekends for doubles. The owners usually don’t speak much English, but it’s not difficult to get a room at the last minute (except during the ceramics festival). As with a majority of motels in Korea, you pay cash upfront. Below are a couple of higher-end accommodations where you can make reservations in advance.

Hotel Miranda The only truly high-end accommodation in the whole town, it’s one of the largest buildings in the city. Attached to the hotel is the Icheon Spa Plus, an oncheon, and a water park, with prices just slightly lower than those of nearby Termeden. Both Western-style and Korean-style ondol rooms are available. Rooms range from twins to deluxe suites that include their own steam sauna booths and spa tubs. There are no single rooms, as all rooms sleep two or more. Rooms are simple and comfortable with the usual Korean-style bathrooms (except for the suites that have whirlpool tubs). Practically the whole lobby is a ceramics store, so you can shop without even leaving your hotel, though I prefer to buy from the artisans directly.

408-1, Anheung-dong, Icheon-si. ☏ 031/633-2001. Fax 0574/8767-8888. www.mirandahotel.com. 165 units. W195,000 double or twin room; W410,000 suite. Discounts of over 50% not unusual. 10% VAT and
Jisan Maple Condo

Convenient if you’re planning to ski or golf at the Jisan Forest Resort, you can rent a Korean-style ondol room with a kitchen. As in most Korean “condos,” there are separate bedrooms and living room/kitchen areas. Accommodations are clean but minimalist, with basic furnishings and no beds. Most rooms have tiny balconies, but they don’t offer much of a view (since the building is only four stories high). Although it’s quiet most of the year, winter ski season can bring crowds and, sometimes, noisy families. Foreigners can make reservations only by phone, but you can also have a Korean travel agent book a room online for you. See the listing for the Jisan Forest Resort, above, for directions and additional information.

Everything You Need to Know About Korean Ceramics

Korean ceramics are famous worldwide for their sophistication and artistry. This all started during the Goryeo Dynasty, when Korean potters learned the art of celadon from Chinese artisans. This greenish pottery was created to emulate jade, which was super-popular and expensive at the time. Of course, Koreans also developed other types of ceramics, but all of them are characterized by the high heat of the kilns in which they are baked. Here are some different types.

• Celadon (Cheongja)—Characterized by its green color and cracked glaze, this type of ceramics is highly prized by collectors. Today, only a few artists create celadon in select small towns in South Korea. Of course, cheaper imitations are widely available.

• Buncheong Ware (Buncheong Sagii)—Made with a white slip painted over green pottery, this type of pottery was unique to Korea until the Pottery Wars, when the artisans were kidnapped and taken to Japan. When this form had almost completely disappeared from Korea, potters turned to white pottery.

• Whiteware (Baekja)—A process developed in 14th-century China, white pottery replaced celadon in popularity as Neo-Confucians adopted simplicity in life as well as in their ceramics, during the Joseon Dynasty. Korean whiteware is characterized by simplicity in design with symbolic images and much of the surface left white. There are only three places in South Korea where white pottery is still made: Namjong-myeon in Bunwon-li, Geumsa-li, and Gwangju-si.

• Brown Earthenware (Onggi)—This is the simplest form of utilitarian pottery, developed from the earliest forms of pottery. This dark-brown earthenware was used as everyday cooking and storage in kitchens of rich and poor alike. Even now, you will see traditional hahng-ali (clay bowls used for fermenting) holding chile paste or kimchi outside of traditional homes in the countryside.

10% service charge not included. AE, MC, V. Amenities: 3 restaurants, bakery, bar; karaoke lounge; sauna; smoke-free rooms; spa. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, Internet (for business-class rooms).
WHERE TO DINE

When in Icheon, eat the rice. That doesn't mean it'll be a boring meal, it just means that rice is the centerpiece, and it comes served with a ridiculous number of smaller banchan. Many restaurants serve the ssal bap starting at W10,000 per person, which is not cheap by South Korean standards, but midpriced and well worth the money. Several restaurants specialize in this local meal, but here are a few that merit a mention.

Hanilkwon KOREAN In business for over 14 years, this traditional Korean restaurant offers the usual ssal bap with over 15 side dishes, as well as a variety of other menu offerings. The ingeum-nim sal bap (rice meal for a king) is priced economically and therefore perfect for commoners, but the galbi jjim is worth forking over the extra won. They have the usual Korean floor-level dining tables in a cozy setting. Private rooms are available for groups.

Icheon Ssalbapjib KOREAN RICE MEAL The name (which roughly translates to “Icheon Rice Meal House”) should tell you everything about this sprawling place, which serves the traditional rice meal and cooks the rice in a traditional stone pot.

Jung Il Poom KOREAN RICE MEAL This place serves the traditional Korean meal with so many side dishes that I stopped counting after 20. It does a brisk business, probably thanks to all the press it’s gotten from various Korean media outlets. You can’t miss the old-fashioned two-story building with mostly wood interior and the usual Korean squat tables. After you’ve had your fill, you can let all the food digest with a drink, which is included in the price of your meal, in one of the tea rooms.
630 Bunji, Saeum-dong, Icheon-si. 031/631-1188. Entrees W10,000–W23,000. MC, V. Daily 11:30am–10pm. Difficult to get there by bus, it’s best to take a taxi (just off of road 24).

3 PANMUNJEOM & THE DMZ

The Demilitarized Zone (or the DMZ, as it is more commonly called) is the 241km-long (150-mile) strip of land that separates North and South Korea. It has served as a buffer zone since the signing of the 1953 cease-fire agreement that ended the fighting during the Korean War (although the war itself has officially never ended). Located near the 38th parallel, it cut the peninsula roughly in half but separated the natural resources (in the north) from the breadbasket (in the south). Surrounded by barbed wire and untouched by humans for over 50 years, the area has become an unintentional wildlife refuge, as migrating birds and other wildlife thrive here.

Inside the DMZ, near the western coast of the peninsula, is Panmunjeom, which lies outside the jurisdiction of either North or South Korea. Located 62km (39 miles) northwest... of Seoul and 215km (134 miles) south of Pyongyang, this was where cease-fire talks were held during the Korean War. At the time, it was only a tiny place with four straw-roofed houses and a couple of temporary buildings and barracks. Officially called the Joint Security Area (JSA), the name “Panmunjom” came from the name of a store nearby (jeom means “small store” in Korean). Over a thousand meetings were held within a period of just over 2 years, before the armistice agreement was signed here by the U.N. forces, the North Korean army, and the Chinese army (the Republic of Korea refused to take part). Note: For more detailed information about the Korean War, see chapter 2.

You can visit Panmunjom from 9am to 2:30pm Monday through Saturday by tour only. Visits by individuals to Panmunjom are not allowed.

GETTING THERE Although you can drive yourself to the DMZ, I highly recommend taking an organized tour instead. Not only will you get a detailed history lesson, but you will not have to stop at the numerous checkpoints along the way. Some locations you’ll want to check out don’t allow individual visitors anyway. Below is a list of several tours I recommend. For information on the sites described in the tour listings, see “Exploring the DMZ,” below. Hopefully, these descriptions will help you decide which tour you’d like to take.

Warning: For all tours, remember that you must have your passport with you. Dress conservatively—that means no crop tops, flip-flops, or sheer clothing. Do not wear anything displaying communist insignia—and leave your Che Guevara T-shirt at home. Also, photography is restricted in certain areas, so be sure to ask before taking pictures. All video cameras are forbidden in restricted areas, so it’s best not to bring one at all.

TOURS The following are some places where you can book guided tours in English. Most of the tours cost ₩70,000 or less (the USO tour is only ₩39,000), last most of the day or all day, and include lunch.

The Panmunjom Tour Information Center provides travel and tour info to Panmunjom and the DMZ. It’s located in the Lotte Hotel in Seoul (on the second floor of the main building in Sogongdong; ☎ 02/771-5593; www.panmunjomtour.com). Take subway line 1 to City Hall Station or line 2 to Uljiro-Ipgu Station. The Panmunjom Tour (which includes the Mt. Odu Observatory, the Unification Bridge, and Camp Bonifas) lasts from around 9:30am to 4:30pm and costs ₩70,000, which includes lunch.

The Korean Tourism Organization (KTO), B1, KTO Building (T2 Tower), 40, Cheongyechoonno, Jung-gu, Seoul 100-180 (☎ 02/7729-9600; http://english.visit korea.or.kr; daily 9am–8pm), offers two different DMZ tours. The first tour takes you to the DMZ and the Third Infiltration Tunnel. Starting at Incheon Airport, you will see the tunnel, Mt. Odu Observatory and Station, and Imjingak and the Bridge of Freedom before returning to the airport. The tour lasts about 5½ hours and costs ₩74,400, including transportation, admissions, and lunch. The second tour goes along what they call “the trail of peace and unification.” It also starts at Incheon Airport and goes to Mt. Odu Observatory, Imjingak and the Bridge of Freedom, the Bell of Peace, and the Freedom Train, and back to the airport. The tour is ₩70,000, including transportation and admission, and lasts 4½ hours. The USO also offers a Panmunjom/DMZ Tour (with a markedly American perspective), which costs ₩20,500 to ₩39,000 and includes Panmunjom and the Third Infiltration Tunnel. They ask that you reserve your place at least 7 days in advance. Call or e-mail them for available tour dates (☎ 02/724-7781; www.uso.org/korea). Grace Travel also offers Panmunjom tours from Seoul.
Their morning tour goes from 8am to 2:30pm and covers Imjingak Park, the Bridge of Freedom, the DMZ Theater and Exhibition Hall, the Third Infiltration Tunnel, Mt. Dora Observatory and Station, and a ginseng center or amethyst factory, and goes past Unification Village. For this tour, costing W46,000, they’ll pick you up from your hotel but drop you off at Itaewon (☎ 02/332-8946; www.triptokorea.com).

EXPLORING THE DMZ

Imjingak  Located 7km (4½ miles) from the Military Demarcation Line, Imjingak is a park and a monument, and includes a three-story building housing photos, documents, and anticommunist relics from North Korea. It was built in 1972, as a consolation for North Koreans living in the South who were unable to return to their homes and see their families and friends. It is a testament to the hopes of many Koreans that unification may be possible someday. It is surrounded by several war memorials, including Unification Park and the North Korea Center. Across from Imjingak is Mangbaedan, where North Koreans who live in South Korea come on New Year’s and Chuseok to perform ancestral rites while facing their hometowns. Behind Mangbaedan is the Bridge of Freedom, which the South Koreans who fled the North during the war crossed when returning to their homeland. Imjingak is one of the few places in the DMZ that tourists can visit without having to go through security checkpoints.

1325-1 Majeong-ri, Munsan-eup, Paju-si, Gyeonggi-do. ☎ 031/953-4744. Tues–Sun 9:20am–3pm in order of arrival. Closed national holidays. Admission (including monorail ride) W11,200 ages 19 and over, W8,700 ages 18 and under; on foot W8,200 ages 19 and over, W6,200 ages 18 and under. Train (easiest way from Seoul): Take the Gyeongui line to Imjingak Station, and then walk about 600m (¼ mile). The train runs every 50 min. and the ride lasts 70 min.

Mt. Dora Observatory  You can get a glimpse of North Korea through the built-in binoculars/telescopes on the observation platform here. On a clear day, you’ll see North Korean soldiers, the outskirts of the city of Gaesong, some farms, and Geumgangsan (Diamond Mountain). Admission is included in the entry price for the Third Tunnel (see listing below).

Mt. Dora Station  The last station on the Gyeongui line, Mt. Dora Station was restored in hopes of reconnecting the rail service from Pyongyang to Seoul. A project that cost millions of dollars, there is a monument with engraved names of South Koreans who donated to the project. It is located 205km (127 miles) from Pyongyang and 56km (35 miles) from Seoul. It is hoped that the station will be a hub of trade between South Korea and North Korea, China, and Russia. To ride a train to the station, you must get off at the Imjin River Station and get permission, but the station is included in tours of the Third Tunnel (see listing below).

Mt. Ohdu Tongil Unification Observatory  Opened to the public in September 1992, the Unification Observatory is built on Ohdusan (Mt. Ohdu) and offers views of some of the area’s most beautiful scenery, where the Han River meets the Imjin River flowing down from North Korea. Not your traditional “observatory” for looking at celestial beauties, this five-story building (four aboveground and one under) has an observation platform, from which you can see Geumgangsan (Diamond Mountain) in North Korea’s Gaesong and as far as the 63 Building in Seoul. The North Korea and Unification Rooms offer displays of photographs, maps, and video of the history of the two Koreas.

19 and over; W1,300 children, military, and seniors. Parking W2,000 for a compact car, W3,000 for a midsize car. From Geumchon station, take bus no. 2 or 3 bound for Seongdong-li; get off at Tongil Dongsan parking lot. Or take Seoul subway line 3 to Daehwa Station (exit 5); walk to the bus station at the back and take bus no. 200 to the observatory. Driving: Take the Jayu road (#23) and follow the signs. There are free shuttles from Tongil Dongsan parking lot to the observatory.

Second Infiltration Tunnel  In 1974, the South Korean army discovered a major tunnel running under the southern sector of the DMZ. What came to be called the First Infiltration Tunnel was destroyed by a bomb blast (and two members of the United Nations command were killed). But soon after, the Second Infiltration Tunnel, twice as wide as the first, was discovered, in March 1975. Measuring about 2m (6½ ft.) high and over 2m (6½ ft.) wide, it is located in the middle of the DMZ, about 13km (8 miles) north of Jorwon. It has three exits. It is actually located in Gangwon-do, but is sometimes included in tours of the DMZ and Panmunjeom—in fact, you can visit only if you’re part of a tour group.

Third Infiltration Tunnel ★★  When this tunnel was discovered in October 1978, North Korea insisted that South Korea dug it to aid an invasion of the north. Of course, that turned out to be untrue—the North Koreans dug the tunnel themselves. The underground tube is 1.6km (about a mile) long, 1.95m (6½ ft.) high, and 2m (6½ ft.) wide. It penetrates 435m (1,427 ft.) south of the demarcation line at a point only 4km (2½ miles) south of Panmunjeom (and is the closest to Seoul). It runs through bedrock about 73m (240 ft.) below ground. Almost identical to the Second Infiltration Tunnel, it enables about 10,000 armed soldiers to move through it in an hour. To enter the tunnel without a tour, you must buy a ticket at the Imjingak DMZ ticket office. The ticket includes a shuttle to the Dorasan Observation Platform and the Dorasan station (and sometimes Unification Village). Soldiers will guide you, but they only speak Korean (so it’s best to arrange an English-language tour before you arrive). There is a monorail that takes you halfway into the tunnel (walking down the entrance is very steep and narrow). The tunnel may be a bit cramped for you if you are tall (although they do provide helmets) and you should avoid it if you’re claustrophobic or have heart problems. No photos are allowed in the tunnel.

Jeomwon-li, Gunnae-myeon, Paju-si, Gyeonggi-do. ☎ 031/953-4744 (Imjingak tourist info). Admission W8,200 ages 19 and over, W6,200 ages 18 and younger, W5,500 seniors over 65; extra W1,500 to ride the elevator; group fees are much cheaper. Outside of a tour, purchase a ticket from Imjingak and take a shuttle. Tues–Sat 9am–6pm; group tours have access Sun. Closed national holidays.

Fourth Infiltration Tunnel  Located along one of the most strategic routes in the eastern sector, this tunnel was discovered in March 1990 only 26km (16 miles) northeast of Yang-gu. It is 145m (476 ft.) below ground and measures about 2m (6½ ft.) tall and 2m (6½ ft.) wide. Almost identical to tunnels two and three in size and structure, the fourth tunnel burrows 1km (½ mile) south of the demarcation line. It was designed to help North Korea infiltrate the Sohwa-Wontong corridor, the main access route to the Yeongdong (Seoul-Gangneung) Expressway. It is also located in Gangwon-do; you can’t visit on your own, but it is sometimes included in tours of the DMZ and Panmunjeom.

WHERE TO STAY
The DMZ area is best visited as a day trip from Seoul. There are no accommodations for tourists in the area.
WHERE TO DINE

Most DMZ/Panmunjeom tours include lunch, but if you decide to go there on your own, you should stop in at the Heyri Art Valley, 652 Bupheung-li (in Tongil Dongsan), Tanhyun-myeon, Paju-si, Gyeonggi-do (☎ 031/946-8551; www.heyri.net). Not only is it a great place to see artists of all genres in their living/work spaces, but there are new restaurants and cafes opening up nearly every week. From Seoul, take subway line 3 to Daehwa Station. Take exit 5 and walk to the bus station behind the exit. Take bus no. 200, which comes once an hour. The 50-minute ride costs ₩1,400. It’s a 20-minute walk from the Unification Hill parking lot (or 8 min. by bus no. 200).

Also, the specialty dish of the region is freshwater eel, which is marinated in a sweet and spicy sauce and eaten cooked from your tabletop grill. You can order jang-uh (eel) from many restaurants in the area, but a couple of good places in Paju are Imjin-gang Pokpo Eojang (Imjin River Waterfall Fish), 254-4 Deokcheon-li, Papyeong-myeon, Paju-si (☎ 031/959-2222), and Jinmi Sikdang, 370-119 Jangpa1-li, Papyeong-myeon, Paju-si (☎ 031/958-3321).

INCHEON

An industrial port about 36km (22 miles) west of Seoul on the Yellow Sea, it is home to the country’s largest airport, and you will most likely arrive here. Home to almost 2.5 million people, the city warrants its own small subway system (which is conveniently linked to Seoul’s system). South Korea’s fifth-largest city, it has incorporated almost 150 surrounding islands within its administrative district.

It can be a nice day trip from Seoul, or a stopping point on the way to remote islands or even to China, which may explain how the city houses the country’s only official Chinatown within its borders. There is no city center per se, but several hubs with different emphases. The older district is below Jayu Park, with technological and communication centers in the Songdo area. There is expansive housing and industry on the reclaimed harbor front and a shopping district which radiates out from the old post office.

Its beaches and small islands attract many domestic tourists from Seoul on weekends, especially during the warmer months.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE From Incheon International Airport, you can take a limousine bus (from bus stop 2B or 9B) to Incheon city for ₩8,000, running daily from 4:21am to 9:30pm. Regular buses from the airport cost ₩4,100 (at bus stop 2A/B or 9A/B). From Seoul, the easiest way to get to Incheon is to take subway line 1, which intersects the Incheon city subway system at Bupyeong Station.

GETTING AROUND Incheon has its own subway system that connects with Seoul’s system. The ride to Incheon Station from Seoul Station takes about an hour. Its website is www.irtc.co.kr.

Most ferries to the outlying islands leave from Yeonan Harbor. From here, you can take a boat to and from Baknyeongdo, Yeonpyeongdo, Deokjekdo, Jawoldo, Ijakdo, Seunghongdo, Yeongheungdo, Muuido, and even overnight to Jeju-do. You can also take an excursion ferry that circles the area from either Yeonan Pier or Wolmido. See the section on Wolmido below for additional information and prices.
VISITOR INFORMATION  There are tourist information centers off the subway at Incheon’s City Hall, in front of Incheon and Bupyeong stations, on the promenade at Wolmido, and in Sinpo-dong. At these centers you’ll find helpful English-speaking staff, brochures, and good maps. The city’s site is http://english.incheon.go.kr.

The KTO (☎ 1330) offers a half-day Incheon City Tour that starts daily at 8am and ends at 2pm. Costing W50,000 per person, it includes the Yeongjong Ferry Port, Wolmido, Chinatown, and Jayu Park.

EXPLORING INCHEON

Chinatown  Incheon’s Chinatown was established by Chinese immigrants in 1884, a year after the harbor was opened, and today, it is home to more than 500 immigrants. Although small, Chinatown has some well-preserved historical buildings, like the Cultural Center of Jung-gu (originally built in 1901), the Annex Building of Tourist Development (the former Japanese Jeil Bank, built in 1884), and the Jung-gu Restaurant Business Union (originally the Japan 58 Bank, built in 1892). The birthplace of jjajangmyeon (a Chinese-Korean noodle dish with black-bean sauce, caramelized vegetables, and meat), Chinatown also offers traditional Chinese cuisine in Jageum-seong, Junghwa-ru, and Jinheung-gak.

No direct address, but in Jung-gu Icheon-si (you can see the gate across the street from Incheon Station). ☎ 032/760-7114. www.ichinatown.or.kr.

Coastal Wharf & Yeonan Pier  If you’re interested in venturing out to any of the smaller islands off the coast of Incheon, this is the place to get your trip underway. Always bustling with travelers, Yeonan Harbor offers boats to and from Baknyeongdo, Yeonpyeongdo, Deokjeokdo, Jawoldo, Ijakdo, Seungbongdo, Yeongheungdo, Muuido, and even distant Jeju-do. Nearby is the Fish Market where you’ll see over 500 shops selling all manner of live seafood, raw fish, and salted and dried goods from the sea. Though the tanks are freshly filled every morning, by the end of the day you’ll be hard-pressed to even see one crab still lingering about, since most of the freshly caught critters sell out the same day. Yeonan Pier is the cheapest place for you to enjoy hwae (raw fish). Take subway line 1 to Dongincheon station and then take any bus headed for Yeonan Pier. You can also get a taxi and it’ll be about a 10- to 15-min. ride.

Ganghwa-do (Ganghwa Island)  Now under the jurisdiction of Incheon, South Korea’s fifth-largest island and its surrounding neighbors were once part of a separate county. Since the Goryeo Dynasty, the island played an important role in defending the mainland (remains of fortresses and memorial sites attest to its turbulent history), but since the construction of the Ganghwa Bridge it now feels more like part of the mainland.

Famous for the high-quality insam (ginseng) that grows here (you can buy some to take home with you at the Insam Center), the island is also known for its 80 dolmen (called the Ganghwa Goindol), prehistoric rock tombs built by Megalithic cultures in the 1st millennium b.c. These, in conjunction with dolmen found in Gochang and Hwasun in Jeolla-do, have been designated a UNESCO World Heritage site. The largest of their kind in South Korea, the Ganghwa Goindol are located about a kilometer from Hajeom. Although the purpose of these dolmen is a mystery, similar ones have been found in North Korea, Manchuria, central Asia, and as far away as Europe.

Additionally, Ganghwa-do is home to five sacred mountains and Bomunsa (Treasure Gate Temple) (☎ 032/933-8271; www.bomunsa.net), one of South Korea’s eight special shrines for the Bodhisattva of Compassion. Bomunsa is actually located on Seokmo-do, a small island located west of Ganghwa-do, reachable via bridge or ferry. Seokmo-do is a great place to enjoy the sunset over the west sea. Open daily 9am to 6pm, admission to the temple is W2,000 adults, W1,500 teens, W1,200 children.

Although most visitors come to see the island as a day trip from Seoul, there is enough to see here to warrant at least 2 or 3 days of exploring. There are no high-end hotels on the island, but there are a dozen smaller yeogwan and motels, all of about the same price and quality, and nearly all of them in the center of town.

Jayu Park The first Western-style park built in South Korea, Jayu (“Freedom”) Park borders the older areas of the city. Originally called Manguk (“All Nations”) Park, its name was changed after General Douglas MacArthur’s statue was erected here in 1957. Located on Mt. Eungbong, this is where he led the Incheon Amphibious Land Operation during the Korean War. You can see the inner harbor and enjoy the city lights from the pavilion. It’s best enjoyed when the cherry blossoms are in bloom in early spring.

Jeondeungsas (Jeondeung Temple) Situated on Jeongjoksan, like many of South Korea’s temples, Jeondeungsas had been burned down and rebuilt a number of times. Located inside the Samrangseong walls, the temple was originally called Jinjongsa. The name was changed when Princess Jeonghwa gave a rare jade lamp as an offering to the Buddha in the eighth year of King Chungnyeol’s reign (1282) of the Goryeo Dynasty, giving the temple its current name, which means “inherited lamp.” Its last rebuilding in 1621 makes it a relatively old temple and it’s heralded as an example of fine architecture from the Goryeo era. You’ll notice, in the main Daeungjeon, a sculpture of an ugly naked woman on top of the four pillars that support the eaves of the roof. The story is that the carpenter who was building the temple fell in love with a “hostess” at a bar. He gave her all the money he earned and she ran off with it. The carpenter fell ill, but recovered and created this sculpture as both revenge and a way to cleanse her of her sins. The Yaksajeon houses a more beautiful sculpture, a representation of the healing Buddha.

Muui-do (Muui Island) Located 18km (11 miles) from Incheon port, it is no longer the remote and lonely island of days past. Its name means “dress of a dancer,” reflecting the gorgeous scenery. It’s a great place to enjoy nature and the scenic beauty of South Korea’s small islands. Both Silmi and Hanagae beaches are wide and sandy, and the hiking trails of Mt. Horyonggok are not too steep. During low tide, you can even walk to the uninhabited Silmi-do (Silmi Island) from Silmi Beach.
Wolmido (Wolmi Island)

An island 1km (½ mile) off the coast of Incheon, it is now connected to the mainland by a highway. There are over 50 seafood restaurants clustered together here, and it’s an excellent place to come for lunch or dinner. The places all serve hwae and the fish is incredibly fresh—in fact, it’s straight from the sea. The Street of Culture is a promenade filled with musicians, performers, and caricaturists. One of the best places to enjoy a romantic sunset, the island is also home to a small amusement park, Play Hill, and ferry cruises, both of which are great for families. Daily cruises around the island run every 2 hours starting at 11:30am, with the last boat leaving at 7:30pm. They last 80 minutes and cost ₩13,000, ₩7,000 for kids 11 and under. From March on, you can also take a dinner cruise on Saturday nights for ₩43,000, ₩32,000 for children 11 and under.

☎ 032/765-4169 (Korean only). From Incheon Station, take the subway to Wolmi-do or take city bus no. 2, 23, or 45 to the last stop. Taxis take 5 min. from Incheon Station.

WHERE TO STAY

Almost all the major hotels are located near the airport in Unseong-dong or Eulwang-dong, but you can find cheap yeogwan on the side streets below Jayu Park. Also, there are plenty of first-class hotels and yeogwan on Ganghwa-do, and many near the bus station on the edge of town.

Hotel Incheon Airport ★ This used to be called the Hotel New Airport, and it’s a nice place to stay if you’re just stopping overnight in Incheon or have an early-morning flight, as it’s only 8 minutes from the airport. This modern hotel was built in 2003 and has helpful, multilingual staff. The in-room vending machine is a bit strange and the light from it can be a bit problematic if you’re a sensitive sleeper. However, the beds are comfortable, although the bathrooms are the usual Korean-style, with shower heads and no curtains.

Incheon Airport Guest House ★★ Only a few minutes from the airport, this guesthouse is an affordable and convenient stay for those just passing through Incheon or having to catch an early flight. Each room is simple but clean, with plain white walls and fluorescent lighting, and has its own small dining/tea table and private bathroom. It’s the best place in the area for the price, and they’ll even pick you up from the airport, if you make arrangements in advance.

Paradise Hotel This established business-class hotel (formerly called the Paradise Olympus Hotel) is only a few minutes from Incheon Airport and walking distance from Incheon Station. The most centrally located of the high-end hotels, both the Western-style and ondol rooms are done in light colors with dark wood furniture. Ceilings are a touch on the low side, but some rooms make up for it with views of the Yellow Sea to the west. The biggest draw is the casino, which, like most casinos in South Korea, is open to foreign guests only.
INcheon

WHERE TO DINE

Incheon has some of the freshest seafood in the metropolitan Seoul area, especially at the restaurants on Wolmi-do, all of which have ocean views, and at the Yeonan Raw Fish Plaza on Yeonan Pier, where you’ll get the best deals. It’s the perfect place to give hwae or spicy seafood hot pot a try. Incheon’s Chinatown is home to the first Chinese restaurant in South Korea (since closed), where jjajangmyeon was invented. There are a handful of good, but small, Chinese restaurants there. Walk along the main drag and get your fill of Chinese-style noodles or freshly steamed bao (Chinese filled steam buns) from street vendors. You can also stop in at one of the trendy restaurants and cafés on “Gourmet Street” when shopping in Sinpo-dong, or try traditional street food at Sinpo Market.

Ijeongsuoga KOREAN SEAFOOD A wonderful, if slightly overwhelming, place to enjoy freshly caught fish served both raw and cooked. There is seating for 100, so don’t expect an intimate experience, and dining areas are plain with traditional low-style tables. But people come here for the fresh-from-the-sea fare, not the ambience. Try the heavenly mixed sashimi, or the unbelievably tasty jiri-tahng (seafood hot pot).

Kohng Mannaneeun Saesang KOREAN SOY DISHES The name of the place roughly translates to “a world where you meet the soybean” (it sounds much better in Korean, trust me). As the name would suggest, they specialize in delicious soy-based dishes, emphasizing healthy, Korean-grown beans. There is traditional floor seating, but with backrests, in this unassuming space on the second floor. The outdoor sign is in Korean only and a bit hard to find.

Pyeongyangok KOREAN ★★ For over 50 years, Pyeongyangok has been serving Incheon customers its famous maeuntang (spicy catfish hot pot). The owner has the fish delivered daily from a fish farm near Gimpo. You’ll see diners slurping broth over steaming pots of bubbling red seafood, spicy and full of flavors. If you love seafood hot pot, this is a place you don’t want to miss.
Suta Jjajangmyun KOREAN/CHINESE  Handmade black-bean noodles (jjajangmyeon) are this restaurant's specialty, but they also serve other Korean-influenced Chinese dishes like jjamppong (noodles and seafood in a spicy hot broth) and ganppong saewoo (kung pao shrimp). As in most Korean-Chinese restaurants, the decor is cheesy Chinatown, but the noodles are still worth slurping. And by all means, slurp—Koreans don't consider it rude.

32 Sunlin-dong, Jung-gu, Incheon. ☏️ 032/772-3058. Entrees ₩3,000 and up. No credit cards. Daily 9am–10pm. From Incheon Station, go toward Jayu Park, turn right at the 2nd 4-way (there's a Jutaek bank there).

Yejeon EUROPEAN/WESTERN  Considered one of the original joints that began Wolmi-do's “cafe culture,” this unlikely restaurant is in the middle of Munhwa (“Culture”) Street. In this red-brick “castle” building, you can enjoy ocean views with your pizza or spaghetti. With the decidedly dark wood interior and old-world European feeling, you'll forget you're in South Korea—until they bring you pickled peppers with your meal.

SHOPPING

Like most major cities in Korea, there is no shortage of things to buy, but the best place to shop is in Sinpo-dong, which is comparable to Seoul's Myeongdong area. At the turn of the century, Sinpo-dong was a place to get exotic Western imports (brought in from the nearby port), but it quickly turned into the fashion district and is now the trendiest place for Incheon's youth and passing international tourists to shop. From the subway, take the Gyeongin line to the Dongincheon Station. Also, express bus nos. 105, 113, and 206 come to Sinpo-dong. Regular city buses that stop here are nos. 2, 3, 4, 6, 10, 15, 16, 17-1, 23, 28, 41, 45, and 46.

Right next door is the traditional Sinpo Market, where you can haggle with street vendors for anything from clothing to grains and dried seaweed. They've added new rubber blocks on the walkways and an archway, giving a modern feel to this old market.

You don't even have to venture aboveground for your shopping experience. The expansive (and confusing) underground shopping arcade expands outward like a web from Dongincheon Station to Sinpo-dong. With over 1,000 stores, you can spend over an hour just walking without even stopping to browse.

YEOJU

Located in the southern valley of the Han River, this county, with its neighboring city of Icheon, is known as one of the centers of Korean contemporary ceramics. It is also home to the tomb of Korea's most popular emperor, the great King Sejong (Sejong Daewang), who developed the written Korean language, Hangeul. The tomb of King Sejong, the fourth ruler of the Joseon Dynasty, is a wonderful example of those from that era. The
The Rest of Gyeonggi-Do

Yeongneung Royal Tombs (Royal Mausoleum of King Sejong), 83-1 Wangdae-li, Neungseo-myeon, Yeoju-gun (☎ 031/885-3123), is open 24 hours Tuesday through Sunday. Admission is ₩500 adults, ₩300 teens and military, free for children and seniors. King Sejong and his wife, Queen Soheon (Soheonwanghu), were buried together. Legend has it that, because the tombs face south, a spirit can oversee a country from this site for 10,000 years.

Nearby at the Nyeongleung Royal Tombs are the burial sites for the 17th Joseon emperor, King Hyojong (Hyeojongwang) and his wife, Queen Inseon (Inseongwanghu).

Yeoju is also the Birthplace of Empress Myeongseong, 250-2 Neunghyeon-li, Yeoju-eup, Yeoju-gun (☎ 031/887-3575), the 26th ruler of the Joseon Dynasty. Her childhood home and memorial hall can be visited daily from 9am to 5pm (except Lunar New Year and Chuseok). Admission is ₩500 adults, ₩400 teens, ₩200 children.

Built along the ridgeline of Pasasan is the relatively well-preserved fortress, Pasa-seong, San 9 Cheonseo-li, Daeshin-myeon, Yeoju-gun. The mountain’s peak is at its center and some of the walls remain intact. From certain spots along the fortress walls, you can get a pretty nice view of the southern Han River. It takes about an hour to circle the fortress walls.

Worth a special trip to the area is the scenic Shilleuksa ★★★, 282 Cheonsong-li, Yeoju-eup, Yeoju-gun (☎ 031/885-2505). Originally founded during the Shilla Dynasty, it is the only lakeside temple in South Korea. Rumor has it that famous Shilla Monk Won-hyo founded this temple during King Jinpyeong’s reign (a.d. 579–632), but there are no relics or historical data supporting that myth. Although its actual founding is unknown, it became famous in 1376, during the second year of Goryeo Dynasty’s King Wu’s reign, when the monk Nawung came here to meditate. Flowering trees make this a beautiful site in the spring, while the yellowing ginkgo trees add to its autumn beauty. The most famous structure here is the multiliteried stone pagoda. Admission is ₩2,000 for adults, ₩1,000 for youth. Buses to Shilleuksa run hourly from the Yeoju Bus Terminal.

While you’re in town, don’t miss the Moka Buddhist Museum ★, Iho-li, Gangcheon-myeon, Yeoju-gun (☎ 031/885-9952). Founded by Pak Chan-su (whose pen name is Moka), the museum was created to uphold the traditions of Buddhist art and the traditional processes used in woodcrafts. An unusual combination of traditional and modern architecture, the three-floor building houses everything from paintings and calligraphy to wooden sculptures. With over 6,000 pieces in its collection, its outside sculpture garden displays some historic pagodas and Buddha statues. It’s open daily from 9:30am to 6pm (until 5pm Nov–Mar). Admission is ₩3,000 adults, ₩1,500 students, ₩1,000 children. Take Yeoju city bus no. 10 or 10-1 bound for Gangcheon-myeon and get off at the museum.

To reach Yeoju by bus, from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal take the bus to Yeoju-gun’s Bus Terminal. Buses to Shilleuksa run every hour, but you can walk to the temple from Yeoju city center in about 30 minutes. By car, take national road 37 from Seoul. Yeoju is about 70km (43 miles) away.

Osan Overrated

Most people have heard of this small city south of Incheon only because the U.S. Air Force has a major air base here (it’s actually between Osan and Pyongtaek). There isn’t much here as far as history and culture, but the American military has fueled the growth of the main street outside the base, now called Shinjang Shopping Mall, a pedestrian street closed to car traffic. The area is full of souvenir shops, clothing stores, restaurants, and clubs, many run by foreign women and military wives. On weekends, the area is packed with military personnel and expats who make the trek down from Seoul to hit the wide selection of restaurants and bars that cater to Western tastes. From Osan, take bus no. 2 to Songtan. To get to Osan, take bus no. 300 or 301 from Suwon or catch an Osan-bound bus from Seoul's Nambu Terminal.

UIJEONGBU
Sometimes spelled “Euijeongbu,” this small satellite town just north of Seoul attained its own city status in 1963. Now a bustling city, it has many military bases and is home to foreign workers from poorer parts of Asia. This is also the town in which the fictional troops of M*A*S*H were stationed (although the show was shot largely in Southern California), and actual U.N. troops were stationed here during the Korean War. The U.S. armed forces brought about a new city specialty, budae jjigae (Spam stew, which is exactly what it sounds like), made from the canned meats available from army camps when food supplies grew scarce during the war. You can still try this American-influenced dish at Budae Jjigae Golmok (Alley) at such joints as Boyeong Sikdang, 214-127 Uijeongbu 1-dong (☏ 031/842-1129), or Euijeongbu Budaejigge Bonjeom, 220-31 Uijeongbu 1-dong (☏ 031/846-9977). To get to the famed alley, take the Seoul subway to Uijeongbu Station. Once outside, walk toward the police station and the Halla apartments, and you’ll see a blue arch (it’s written in Korean) that marks the start of Budae Jjigae Golmok.

Unfortunately, most of the town was destroyed during the war, but there are a few cultural relics and some restored buildings around today. From the center of Seoul, it takes about 40 minutes to get to Uijeongbu by subway. There are five stops in the city off of Seoul’s subway line 1. The city’s official site is www.ui4u.net/site/english.

Between Uijeongbu and Pocheon is the Gwangneung Sumeogwon (Korea National Arboretum) ★★★, 51-7 Jikdong-li, Soheul-eup, Pocheon-si (☏ 031/540-2000; www.kna.go.kr), a peaceful nature preserve with original trees and dense undergrowth. Because of the fragility of the landscape, you must make a reservation a week in advance. It’s worth it, especially if you’re a nature lover or bird-watcher, since various fowl pass through during different seasons. Open Tuesday to Saturday 9am to 6pm April to October, until 5pm November to March, the arboretum is closed on weekends and national holidays. The last entry is 1 hour before closing. Admission is ₩1,000 adults, ₩700 teens, ₩500 children, free for seniors and kids 5 and under. Take Seoul’s subway line 1 to Uijeongbu Station, then take bus no. 21 to Gwangneung-nae. It’ll cost ₩1,250 and the bus leaves from Uijeongbu at 10 and 40 minutes past each hour, and at 15 and 45 minutes past each hour from the arboretum. If you’re driving, it’ll be ₩3,000 for parking.

POCHEON
Northeast of the Uijeongbu (about a 30-min. bus ride) is Pocheon, another satellite city in Gyeonggi-do. Since the city is so close to the border, it’s popular with Korean military; however, it’s still largely undeveloped and can be a nice getaway from Seoul. A relaxing visit could include a stop at the Idong Jael Yuhwang Oncheon, 663 Hwadae-li, Idong-myeon, Pocheon-si (☏ 031/536-6000). Open 24 hours; a soak costs ₩6,000 for adults and ₩4,000 for children.

After a good soak, you can fill up on the city’s famous galbi and makgeolli (milky rice wine). So famous is the dish that there is even a “village,” the Idong Galbi Maeul (☏ 031/532-6135), a cluster of restaurants where the galbi is grilled over oak charcoal. A couple of good options in the area are Idong Galbi, 216-3 Jangam-li, Idong-myeon,
SOYOSAN (MT. SOYO)
Soyosan and its associated Tapdong Valley are called the “Mujugucheondong,” the prettiest mountain valleys in Gyeonggi-do. A nice day trip away from the insanity of Seoul, there are steep slopes, deep valleys, several waterfalls, and a small hermitage, the Jajae-am. Across from the Soyosan Train Station is the entrance to Tapdolong Valley. Jajae-am is about a 30-minute hike up, past Wonhyo waterfall. The hermitage is said to have been founded by the famous monk Wonhgyo.

It's easy to get there via Dongducheon. From Seoul’s Suyu-li, take bus no. 36 or 136 to Dongducheon Bus Terminal. From there, take a bus bound for Dokgoli. If you're driving, take road 3 toward Uijeongbu. Then, take local road 334 at the Dongducheon Yurim four-way (sageoli).

YONGMUNSAN (MT. YONGMUN)
Called the “Geumgangsan of Gyeonggi-do,” Yongmunsan is well known for its rocky valleys and hiking trails. The hiking entrance begins at Yongmunsa (“Dragon Gate Temple”), where you will see a huge ginkgo tree. The temple was originally built in A.D. 913, but expanded in 1392. It was burned down, like many of Korea’s temples, by the Japanese in 1592, but rebuilt. It was burned down by the Japanese again in 1907. The current main hall was reconstructed in 1984 entirely by hand. The village below the temple was also rebuilt while the temple was being constructed.

Open all year, the Yongmunsan Resort (☏ 031/773-0088) is popular with vacationing families in the fall. Admission is ₩1,800 adults, ₩1,200 students and military, ₩800 children. There are recreational facilities and campsites nearby.

MT. MYEONGSEONG & SANJEONG LAKE
East of Uncheon in Yeongbuk-myeon is Sanjeong-ho, a beautiful lake at Mt. Myeongseong (whose peaks are reflected in the lake’s still waters). Myeongseongsan straddles the border between Gyeonggi-do and Gangwon-do and is covered with thick pine forests and large rock formations that look their best in the midst of the autumn foliage. Although Sanjeong is a small lake, Deungryong and Biseon waterfalls enhance the beauty of the area. It used to be a quiet mountain region, but with increased tourist development (they’ve built a snow sledding area and an ice-skating rink, and a tourism complex with swimming pools and saunas), its quiet charm has almost disappeared. A small temple, Jainsa, Sanjeong-li, Yeongbuk-myeon, Pocheon-si (☏ 031/533-1075), sits at the foot of the mountain.

From Seoul’s Sangbong Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Sincheolwon and get off at Uncheon. From there, you can take a bus to Sanjeong-ho (lake). Buses run every 15 minutes and take about 80 minutes. If you’re driving, take road 43 from Suyu-li in Seoul toward Uijeongbu. Pass Pocheon-eup, and go straight toward the Manse-gyo (bridge). Make a right at the Seongdong three-way (sam-geoli), and then a left at the checkpoint three-way. Turn right at the Bunam four-way to get to the lake’s parking lot.

ANSEONG

If you have a Saturday free and you’re visiting sometime between April and October, don’t miss the Anseong Namsadang Nori (Kids, 31-3 Bongsandong, Anseong-si (☎ 031/676-4601; www.baudeoigi.com), where they offer a variety of free performances all day. Namsadang was Korea’s first popular performance troupe, which used to travel around markets and villages singing and dancing for the people during the late Joseon period. The troupe usually had about 40 to 50 members, most of whom joined voluntarily, though parents sometimes brought their children to the troupe because they were too poor to feed them. The program includes tightrope walkers, exorcism rituals, a puppet show, dancers, drummers, musicians, and more.

It’s about a 10-minute ride, but be sure to ask your driver to pick you up at the end of the performance, since public transportation is scarce.

GAPYEONG

About an hour and a half northeast of Seoul is Gapyeong-gun (Gapyeong County), which rests on the border of Gyeonggi-do and the mountainous province of Gangwon-do. The most popular destination in the area is Cheongpyeong-ho, the lake created by the construction of Cheongpyeong Dam in 1944. GOYANG

Located northwest of Seoul, the city of Goyang has expanded as housing needs in Seoul expanded to the surrounding province. A climb up Daegyangsan affords a nice view and a visit to the Haengjuansanseong (Haengju Mountain Fortress), San 12 Haengjunae-dong, Daegyang-gu, Gyang-si (☏ 031/961-2580). This fortress, which was mostly likely built during the Baekje period, was instrumental in defending Korea against the invading Japanese army some 4 centuries ago. The Haengju Great Victory Festival is held here every March 14 to commemorate the victory. The fortress is open 9am to 6pm March to October, 9am to 5pm November to February. Nestled in South Korea’s central region, the Chungcheong province includes Chungcheongbuk-do, Chungcheongnam-do, and the city of Daejeon. Since this area is just south of Seoul, it has benefited economically from its proximity. Industrial centers have grown especially around the Asanman area on the western coast. The two provinces of Chungcheong-do are actually side by side, although they are called north and south Chungcheong-do.

A major transportation thoroughfare for the capital region and the Honam (Jeolla-do) and Yeongnam (Gyeongsang-do) regions, the province’s largest city, Daejeon, serves as a junction for both rail lines and highways.

Chungcheong-do specializes in dairy farming and agriculture to meet the huge demands of the capital region. The eastern part of the province, which borders Gangwon-do, is mountainous, but the western section is lower and flatter. Its major agricultural products are grains (mostly rice and barley) and a variety of vegetables, including radish, cabbage, and sweet potatoes. In fact, it has been a rice-producing area ever since the Baekje period. The mountainous parts of the province produce sanchae (wild greens) and mushrooms.

1 DAEJEON

The capital of Chungcheongnam-do, Daejeon is the fifth-largest city in the country and its industrial heart, producing everything from tires to textiles to pharmaceuticals. Only about 2 hours from Seoul by car, it is a major transportation hub and one of South Korea’s main centers for science and technology. In fact, the city’s Daedeok Valley has been nicknamed the “Silicon Valley of Korea” and Daedeok Science Town, which lies just northwest of Daejeon, is home to dozens of private and government agencies devoted to research and education.

The area around Daejeon was traditionally called hanbat (large field), but today it looks less and less rural. The city sits on a large plain surrounded by mountain ranges—Gyeoryongsan, Gyejoksan, Sikjangsan, and Maninsan—and its rapid growth has led it to incorporate neighboring towns. The three major rivers that pass through Daejeon (their paths largely determined the city’s district divisions) and which all converge into the country’s most impressive and biggest river, the Geumgang (Geum River), have been dammed and now provide both electricity and drinking water. Daejeon may be industrial, but there is still much for visitors to see here, including the famed Yuseong hot springs, which are rumored to have been used by ancient royalty. In fact, Daejeon is a former capital of the ancient Baekje Kingdom, likely starting in the 4th century, and it is home to relics and artifacts dating from that time, as well as the Stone and Bronze ages.

GETTING THERE  Although it’s a major transportation hub, there is no airport in Daejeon. The nearest airport is Cheongju Airport (CJJ), 50-1, Ipsang-li, Naesu-eup, Cheongwon-gun (☎ 043/210-6114), about a 35-minute drive north of the city. Buses run from Daejeon's Dongbu Terminal five times a day. From the Incheon Airport, you can get a limousine bus directly to Daejeon. Catch the bus in front of gate 8. Regular buses cost W14,500 and the deluxe bus costs W21,400. The airport limousine bus stops at the Mokwon Daedeok Cultural Center, the Daejeon Government Complex, and the Dongbu Express Bus Terminal.

Daejeon is located at the junctions of the Gyeongbu and Honam lines. It has two train stations. The larger Daejeon Station, located in the center of town has trains to or from Seoul or Busan. Other trains travel to Pohang, Ulsan, Jinju, Masan, or Jecheon. The smaller Seo-Daejeon (West) Train Station is the first stop on the Honam Line. The trains make more frequent stops and run from Seoul through Daejeon, and south to Mokpo, Gwangju, Suncheon, Jinju, and Yeosu. A KTX express train from Seoul will get you to Daejeon in under an hour. From Seoul, train fares start at W19,500 for KTX, W13,900 for Saemaeul, and W9,300 for Mugunghwa trains.

Daejeon is on the Gyeongbu and Honam expressways. To make things more confusing, Daejeon has three express bus stations and two intercity bus stations. (But the two intercity stations are next to two of the express stations, so it’s like there are three bus stations. Follow that?) The main bus station in Daejeon is the Dongbu Express Bus Terminal, located next to the Dongbu Intercity Bus Terminal. The Seobu Express Bus Terminal is right next to the Seobu Intercity Bus Terminal. The fifth bus station in town is the Yuseong Bus Terminal. Daily buses from the Seoul Express Bus Terminal go to Daejeon Dongbu Express Bus Terminal every 5 to 10 minutes between 6am and 9:55pm, costing W7,600 to W11,200 and taking about 2 hours; to the Yuseong Bus Terminal, buses run every 15 to 30 minutes from 6am to 9pm, costing W7,800 to W11,300. From the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal daily buses go to the Daejeon Dongbu Intercity Bus Terminal every 20 minutes, 6am to 9pm, costing W8,300 to W12,200; to the Yuseong Bus Terminal every 30 minutes from 6:30am to 9pm, costing W8,000. From the Sabong Intercity Bus Terminal, daily buses run to Daejeon Dongbu Intercity Bus Terminal nine times daily from 6am to 9pm, costing W8,200 to W12,000.

GETTING AROUND A major subway system (with a planned five lines) is currently under construction. The first section, subway line 1, is currently running daily from 5:30am to midnight. The short trains run every 5 minutes during rush hour (usually around 7–9am and 5–7pm) and every 8 to 10 minutes the rest of the day. With 22 stations, the line runs northwest from Wisa-dong in Banseok through the center of the city to Panam. You can connect to the Korean National Rail Line at Daejeon Station. The base fare is W900, W800 with a TrafficCard, for up to 10km (6¼ miles), and W1,000, or W900 with a TrafficCard, beyond that.

Line 2 will be a circular line that connects with line 1 at three different stations. Line 3 will run in a north-south direction, parallel to the existing rail lines. Line 4 will also run north-south, just on the far western side of the city. Line 5 will cross the city going in an east-west direction.

Daejeon has a good bus system that goes pretty much anywhere you want to go. There are two types of buses, one in which you stand, costing only W600, and a sit-down bus, where you may have to fight for a seat, that costs W1,200. Most buses in the city run through the downtown area and Daejeon Station. There are also regular city buses and express buses that make fewer stops. Fares for express buses are about twice those of regular buses.
Taxis are usually waiting outside of the bus and train stations and you can just flag one down on any street. Basic taxi fares start at W1,800 daily from 6am to midnight and go up to W2,000 from midnight to 6am.

VISITOR INFORMATION A tourist information center (☎ 042/632-1770) is located in front of the main express bus terminal. EXPLORING DAEJEON

Historic Sites

Dosan Seowon (Dosan Confucian Academy) The Dosan Confucian Academy and Shrine was built at the suggestion of Confucian scholars in 1693, the 19th year of the reign of King Sukjong. In 1868, King Gojong ordered the destruction and removal of the main building. However, it was restored in 1921 and a danso (memorial shrine) was built. The academy honors two Confucian scholars, Gwon Shi and Gwon Deuk-gi (from the Andong Gwon family), whose tombs are located on the hill to the west of the complex. Although the architecture is interesting, there isn’t much to see here outside of when they hold memorial services for the two scholars in the spring and fall. Do not be confused by the academy in Andong with the same name. 233, Tanbang-dong, Seo-gu, Daejeon-si. ☏ 042/746-4747. Free admission. Daily 9am–6pm.

Gayang Park ★★★ A forest park in the eastern part of the city, it is divided into two smaller parks—Uam Sajeok Park (Uam Historical Park) and Central Square. Uam Sajeok Park was created to honor Confucian scholar Song Shi-yeol, who was a tutor and political advisor to kings in the mid-1600s. When you walk into the front gate, you’ll see Namgangjeongsa, a 350-year-old tile-roofed pavilion used as his study. A small stream flows below the main hall into a pond in front of the complex. His portrait, wooden printing blocks of his writings, and his desk are on display in a small exhibition hall just up the hill from the pavilion. The original wooden plates were destroyed in a fire in 1907. The blocks that you see today were carved in 1929.
Ppuri Park  A scenic park filled with flower beds and walking paths, located east of Bomunsan, Ppuri (which means “root”) Park is home to stone tablets carved with the Korean family names and their origins—hence the “root” of the park’s name.

Permanent exhibits at this museum, located in Expo Science Park, include a fascinating look at Korea’s geological and natural history, and a section on the history of Korean technology. At the center of the museum is the Astronomical Hall, the largest dome in the county. There is also a 242-seat space theater, similar to a planetarium, where you can see the night sky projected on the dome. The Permanent Exhibit Hall features over 4,000 natural objects. Outside the hall is Cheomseongdae, a structure used to predict the weather during the Goryeo Dynasty. Science and nature documentaries are shown at 11am and 2pm daily. There isn’t much in the way of English signage, but it’s worth a visit for those interested in science.

Yeojin Gallery of Buddhist Art ★★ The director of the museum, Lee Jin-hyung (pen name: Yeojin), is himself designated an intangible cultural asset (no. 6) by the Korean government. If you forget to make a reservation, a stroll around the sculpture garden is still worth the visit. It’s a wonderful way to learn more about both modern and traditional Buddhist art.

Natural Sites

Bomunsan Park ★ Located south of the city center, Bomunsan is a natural city park, throughout which there are ancient sites dating back to the area's Baekje past. At the entrance to the park are restaurants, accommodations, and a folk museum. The remains of a fortress, Bomunsanseong, are on the southern ridge of the mountain. The fortress was built there in the late Baekje Kingdom. Once you take the cable car up, there are several walking trails to explore, leading to a number of small temples, an amusement park, and a few war monuments. Above the amusement park is an observation site from which you can get a good view of the city below. An even better view can be had from the pavilion, which is part of the fortress wall.

Daecheongho (Daecheong Lake) Construction of the third-largest artificial lake in the country began in 1975 and was completed in 1980 with the damming of the Geumgang. The water from the lake provides water to the Daejeon and Cheongju areas. The clear waters reflect the nearby mountains, and the lake area is one of the most scenic in Daejeon.

The area has since been renovated and transformed into a science theme park. The park includes the National Science Museum (see listing above), Starquest, Technopia, Earthscape, and Visions of Korea pavilions. There are also several science facilities in the complex, including Yuseong Hot Springs ★★★ A popular place for the royals during the Baekje Kingdom, this oncheon (hot spring) feeds water from 350m (1,148 ft.) underground. Various hotels and spas get water for their special hot spring spas. An old legend has it that a Baekje woman’s only son was injured in a battle against the Shilla Kingdom. One winter day, she saw a crane with an injured wing. It dipped the wing into a hot spring that was bubbling up from under the snow and seemed to be cured. The woman brought her son there and his wounds were healed as well. And that’s how Yuseong Oncheon got to be famous for its healing properties.

One of the best in the area is the Yousung Spa (✆ 042/820-0100), located inside the Yousung Hotel. Open daily from 5am to 10pm, it costs ₩4,500 for adults, ₩2,200 for children. Early birds can get in before 8am for only ₩3,000.

Gyejoksan

North of Daejeon are the small ridges of Gyejoksan (Mt. Gyejok), which is sometimes called “Bonghwangsan” (Phoenix Mountain). It stands 423m (1,388 ft.) high and offers a good view of Lake Daecheong. On top is Gyejok Sanseong (✆ 042/623-9909), the largest of the fortresses left from the Baekje Period. There are two hiking trails to the fortress, one that is 5.6km (3½ miles) long and takes about 2 hours and a longer 6.3km (4-mile) hike that takes about 3 hours. Most people time their hikes to catch the sunrise or sunset from the top.

GYERYONGSAN NATIONAL PARK

Located just 50 minutes from Daejeon by bus, Gyeryongsan (Mt. Gyeryong) National Park (✆ 042/825-3003) is one of South Korea’s few rugged mountain ranges located near a major city. The national park stretches from Daejeon to Gwangju and Nonsan, and includes 15 peaks, the main one being Cheonhwang-bong. The park has several beautiful waterfalls and interesting rock formations—the name Gyeryongsan means “Chicken Dragon Mountain,” because the granite peaks rise up like a cock’s comb or like the scales on a dragon’s back. The spring brings cherry blossoms along the Donghaksa mountain trail, which leads to a lush green valley in the summer. The maple trees are gorgeous in the autumn and the snow-capped mountains are lovely in the winter. A mountain full of stories and myths, the area has had a long history of shamanism, animism, and the supernatural. Although most of the believers are long gone, traces of those ancient beliefs still exist in the area today.

From the Daejeon Bus Terminal or Yuseong Intercity Bus Terminal, take city bus no. 102 or 103 to Donghaksa. You can also take bus no. 2 bound for Gapsa, from the stop in front of the Yuseong Police Station. Running about 14 times daily, the ride takes about an hour. From the old Gongju Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Donghaksa. Alternatively, take a city bus from Gongju to Sinwonsa. The park is open 6am to 7pm daily and admission is ₩2,000 adults, ₩1,000 teens, ₩500 children. Parking is ₩4,000.
Almost a Capital

The village of Seokgyeri, on the southern side of the mountain, was selected by King Taejo, founder of the Joseon Dynasty, to be his capital in the mid-1300s. But before construction could get fully underway, the king’s geomancers (those who divine spiritual wisdom from the landscape) told him it was a poor choice, and that Seoul would serve his needs better. So the king halted construction, and all that’s left today are a few stones marking what might have been the capital of Korea.

There are minbak (homestay) places lining both sides of the road up to the parking lot. Once you continue up the road on foot, there are plenty of eating options lining the walkway to Donghaksa. The hiking trails begin after you pass the temple.

Donghaksa (Donghak Temple) Overrated

Located in the Sangbong Valley, this small temple was founded by Monk Hoeui-hwasang in A.D. 724, the 23rd year of the reign of Shilla King Songdok. It was later expanded by Monk Dosungooksa during the reign of King Taejo. Home to Buddhist nuns since the Shilla period, it is now also a study center, so parts of the complex are off-limits to visitors. Because the nuns live here, some of the historic architecture has unfortunate modern updates that may be comfortable for the residents but not pleasant to view. This temple’s best assets are the doors to the main hall, carved with cranes, bamboo, and cherry blossoms. To the right of the main temple is a shrine built in 1456 for the deposed boy-king Kim Shi-seup, whose throne had been usurped by his uncle. The original shrine was destroyed—this is a modern version. Just 2km (1½ miles) north of the temple are the twin pagodas Nammaetap, at the site of Chongnyangsa (Chongnyang Temple). They were both built during the Shilla period and modeled after the sculptural style popular in the Baekje Kingdom.

Hakbong-li, Banpo-myeon, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☎ 042/825-2570. Admission ₩2,000 adults, ₩1,000 teens, ₩500 children. Daily 6am–7pm. From Gongju take bus no. 6 to Donghaksa (should take 40 min.). From Daejeon Station or Yuseong, take bus no. 102. It'll take an hour from Daejeon and 20 min. from Yuseong.

Gapsa (Gap Temple) ★★

Established in A.D. 420 by Monk Adohwasang, who is credited with having brought Buddhism to the Shilla Kingdom, Gapsa is said to be one of the oldest temples in the country. Although the oldest of its current buildings dates to 1604, there is much to see here, and the place is famous for the numerous cultural treasures it houses. The road from the parking lot to the temple passes through the small but scenic Ori Forest. When you first enter the temple site, you’ll see a lecture hall with large words GERYONG GAPSÀ written in blue. To the right of that hall is the Dongjonggak (where the site’s copper bell, cast in A.D. 584, is housed). To the left stand the Pyochung-won and the Palsangjeon buildings. The Pyochungwon was created to honor high priests and monk warriors Yeong-Gyu, Sa-Myeong, and Seosan. The Palsangjeon is where the Palsangdo (a visual depiction of the life of Buddha) is preserved.

If you follow the road past the temple, you will find the trail to Gyeryongsan (Mt. Gyeryong). There is a lovely little teahouse nearby and a small valley. Originally there were 28 cheoltong (iron flagpoles) along this path, but 4 of them broke during the reign of King Go-Jong. The area is especially beautiful in the fall.
Sinwonsa (Sinwon Temple)
Built by Monk Bodeokhwasang in A.D. 651, the 11th year of Baekje King Uija’s reign, this temple has undergone several renovations since and was rumored to have been moved to its present site after it was destroyed in the Imjin Waeran. Repaired by Monk Boryeonhwasang in 1876, the last renovations were done in 1946 by Monk Manheohwasang.

SHOPPING
As in all Korean cities, there is no shortage of places to shop here. Daejeon has a nice range of traditional open markets and multistoried department stores.

Traditional Markets
Daejeon has a bunch of small neighborhood markets, but the largest one is the central Jung-ang Shijang, 40, Won-dong, Dong-gu (☏ 042/256-0567), located right near Daejeon Station. Started in 1953, the facilities are being updated by the city government in an attempt to attract customers lost to the major discount stores (like E-Mart). It’s still a bustling market open most days from 9am to 7:30pm.

Another fun open marketplace is Indong Shijang, 42, In-dong, Dong-gu (☏ 042/283-2029). Started in 1919, it has been shrinking in size in the past few years. It sells mostly agricultural products from the area—the main products are rice and grains. It’s open 9am to 7pm Monday through Saturday.

Located in Jangdae-dong, Yuseong-gu, is the Yuseong O-il (5-day) Market, going strong for over 90 years. Taking over a large triangular space (encompassing five or six alleys in the area), the marketplace comes alive on days that end in 4 or 9. An open market for goods of all kinds, it’s open 9am to 8pm on market days.

Specialty Streets
Tucked between small alleyways and side streets, groups of specialty shops have popped up all over Daejeon. One such area is the Wondong Tool Street, where (you guessed it) you can buy many kinds of tools sold by small and medium foundries in the In-dong area. Within walking distance from Daejeon Station, the grouping of about three dozen shops is located between Daeheung bridge and Jung bridge. Most shops are open daily from 7:30am to 6:30pm.

Of more interest to you may be Hanbok Street (Korean Traditional Clothing Street) ★★★ in Wondong. There are about 300 stores specializing in hanbok (the traditional Korean outfit), some of which have been in business since 1954. Some of the stores sell clothes both wholesale and retail, while others specialize in just mending and modifying outfits you may have already. You can also find Korean handicrafts, blankets, and other traditional fabric products for good prices here. Shops are generally open daily from 9am to 8pm.

Although the goods sold here will mostly be too large to take home with you, it’s fun to browse Hanbat Furniture Street in Jungri-dong. Since most of the shops here sell factory direct, you can find some good deals. Open daily 9am to 10:30pm, they’re closed... every third Tuesday of the month. Another area that specializes in furniture is the Seodaeseon Furniture Street in Jung-gu. An older area than the one in Jungri-dong, the prices are more expensive here, but products are more upscale. The stores are generally open daily from 10am to 8pm.

Another fun place to browse is the Herbal Medicine Street in Jung-ang-dong. Started in 1958, it is one of only three markets in South Korea that specialize in herbal medicine. About 100 shops are located in the area, peddling everything from dried roots, unidentifiable plants, and interesting specimens of who-knows-what in little jars. You can also get herbal tea, herbal rice cakes, and a variety of herbal cures for minor ailments. The shops are open Monday through Saturday 9am to 6pm.

If you’re just interested in Korean insam (ginseng), look no further than the ginseng and herbal medicine shops in Busa-dong. There are a variety of roots and medicinal plants at decent prices. And, as a rule, they don’t sell imported roots, so you know you’re getting the good homegrown stuff from Korea’s mountains. Most stores are open daily 8:30am to 8:30pm, but close the first and third Sundays of the month.

Department Stores

Most major department stores are pretty much the same throughout South Korea, and those in Daejeon are no exception. They are huge multistory complexes with several floors of fashion sandwiched between a basement level with a grocery store and Korean fast-food joints and a top floor full of mid- to high-priced restaurants.

In the Jung-gu area, there are two major department stores. One is Galleria Dongbaek, 3-14, Seonhwa-dong, Jung-gu (042/221-3000), which has parking and is open daily from 11am to 8:30pm. Avoid the store on weekends if you don’t like crowds, since they usually have concerts, celebrity events, and contests then. The other department store in Jung-gu is Say, 1-16, Munhwa-dong, Jung-gu (042/226-1234), which has a cultural center and sports center on its top two floors. They’re open daily 10:30am to 8pm.

In central Seo-gu, the popular department store is Galleria Timeworld, 1036, Dunsan 2-dong Seo-gu (042/480-5000). They also have a sports center and cultural complex, as well as a beauty shop and travel agency. With nine floors, musical instruments and CDs are on the first-floor basement, with books and stationery items on the second basement floor. The larger Lotte Department Store, 423-1 Gojeong-dong, Seo-gu
CHUNGCHEONG-DO
DAEJEON

(☎ 042/601-2500), has 12 floors, which include a cultural center, movie theater, game room, and coffee shops. They’re open daily 10am to 8pm, but close two Mondays a month (the dates vary each month, so call ahead).

WHERE TO STAY
Most of the upscale hotels in the city are located in the Yuseong Oncheon Leisure Town, an area built up around the hot springs. There are some love motels in the area too, ranging from ₩25,000 to ₩35,000 for a single/double on weekdays and going up during weekends and high season. A large number of economical yeogwan are located around the Daejeon Dongbu Bus Terminal. None of them takes reservations, and most are designed to serve late-night travelers stopping overnight before traveling to far-flung places.

Yousung Hotel ★ Located in the Yuseong Hot Springs Leisure Town, the Yousung Hotel is conveniently located to Expo Science Park and other attractions. The hot springs have been a favorite of the royal family since the Baekje Kingdom, and the hotel itself was founded in 1915. You can’t miss the large white, multistoried building. Both Western-style and Korean-style ondol rooms are available, and both have nice views of the surrounding park. Beds are comfortable though on the small side, but the extravagant bathrooms (which even feature phones) are a nice touch. Even if you’re not staying here, you can have access to their pool or visit their hot spring spa.

WHERE TO DINE
One of the specialties of Daejeon is dotoli muk (acorn jelly), a dish created when times were hard and people were forced to collect acorns in the mountains to feed themselves and their families. A brown-colored gelatin, dotoli muk doesn’t offer much flavor but is not bad when served with yangnyeom ganjjang (a seasoned soy sauce) on top.
Another famous dish from the region is samgyetang, a chicken soup made with a whole young chicken stuffed with glutinous rice, dates, and ginseng. It's a traditional dish that is supposed to be healthy for you (and was eaten to fight the heat in the summer). The people of Daejeon say that theirs has a unique flavor because of the insam gathered from Geumsan. You can try this tasty dish at Daehung Samgyetang, 27-7 Jung-ang-dong, Dong-gu (☎ 042/255-4148), where the broth is infused with the usual ingredients and deer horn for 5 to 6 hours to create the subtle but complex flavors of their soup.

A special favorite of the region is seolleongtang, a milky white soup made from boiling beef bone forever. It is usually served with kkakdugi (cubed daikon kimchi) and enjoyed year-round. Head to Bonga Gamasot Seolleongtang, 452-2 Gayang-dong, Dong-gu (☎ 042/673-8826), where they cook the broth for 48 hours in a gamasot (a special traditional pot). Sinchon Seolleongtang, 291 Mannyeon-dong, Seo-gu (☎ 042/489-2322), also makes a mean bowl of this soup, and their kimchi is so good that the owner won’t divulge their secret recipes.

Expensive

Manna KOREAN ★★★ This spacious and upscale restaurant has four different locations in the city (I’ve included the address for a couple of locations, below). They have a wonderfully friendly staff and a variety of set menus to choose from. Their specialties are shabu shabu (Japanese-style boiled beef) and traditional set meals.

Moderate

Barbie House CAFE ★★★ Finds If you like to dress up and have tea parties, this is the place for you. Located on the basement level of a nondescript downtown building, this unusual teashop and “dress cafe” offers beverages and dress-up options with a photo session included. The girls who work here are super-friendly and accommodating.

Euneungdeungi-geoli, Eunhaeng-dong, Jung-gu, Daejeon-si. (☎ 042/255-0059) (Korean). For dress-up and photo W10,000; tea W4,000–W5,000. MC, V. Daily 10am–10pm.

Bolam Ssambap KOREAN ★★★ Finds This unassuming little place serves up some mighty good ssambap, a meal with various banchan (sides) and lettuce and other leaves for you to wrap rice in. The nakji bokkeum (spicy squid) is also delicious.

199-5, Beop-dong, Daedeok-gu, Daejeon-si. (☎ 042/622-9950) (Korean). Entrees W7,000–W15,000; set menu for 2 W25,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–9:30pm.

Woossam KOREAN BEEF/PORK ★★★ Finds For a place that specializes in Korean meat dishes, this joint is surprisingly affordable. Located on a corner just up the street from Geonyangdae Hospital, the inside is nicer than it looks from the outside. Regular tables and bench seats are available on the first floor with floor-style Korean tables upstairs. All have tabletop grills for your eating pleasure. I recommend trying the wang-ggot ssamgyupsal (thinly sliced pork), the naechuleol modeum saeng-gogi (various beef cuts), or the galbi ssal (unmarinated rib-eye meat).

1349 Gwanjeo-dong, Seo-gu, Daejeon-si. (☎ 042/544-5933) (Korean). Entrees W5,500–W8,000; set menu for 2 W24,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–11pm.
Inexpensive

Ganchon Kalgooksu KOREAN NOODLES  One of the few decent places within walking distance to the motels in the Yuseong area, this family-run restaurant specializes in kalguksu (homemade “knife noodles”) and sliced meats, which you can cook on the tabletop grill. Ask for the noodles to be mild, if you can’t handle the spice.

537-5 Bongmyeong-dong, Yuseong-gu, Daejeon-si. Flatcakes and noodles W4,000–W5,000; beef and pork meals W12,000–W20,000. MC, V. Daily 10am–midnight.

Cat’s Ann CAFE ★★ Finds  With plush sofas and a cozy interior, this is a nice place to relax and get a cup of coffee or cool off with a fruit shake on a hot day. Just look for the red circle sign with a cat on it, on the second floor. Unfortunately, the menu is only in Korean, but some of the staff speak a bit of English.

Monga KOREAN ★★ Finds  This restaurant specializes in jokbal (sliced pork hock) and sujebi (dough flake soup). It may seem like an unusual combination, but they do both quite well. And at W3,500 per serving, the sujebi is quite a bargain. The nakji bokkeum is terrific, too. Look for the Korean letters with the name in Chinese characters on the second floor of the SK Telecom Building (just about a block from the Lotte Department Store corner).

DAEJEON AFTER DARK

For a medium-sized city, Daejeon has an active nightlife. The most popular areas are the Yuseong district, the Dunsan-dong area (the “new” downtown), the city’s old downtown region, and Gung-dong, near Chungnam University.

A good place to get imported beers or a cocktail is WA Bar, located across the street from the Galleria department store in the old downtown area of the Eunhaeng-dong district. A casual place, it’s popular with people to grab a drink with friends after work.

Just down the street is the most popular bar for expat English teachers from Canada, J Rock. The owner is American and all of the staff speak English. A small, smoky place, it’s a great place to get tips from people who’ve been in Daejeon for a while. There is a small dance floor and a pool table. Watermelon Sugar is another bar popular with expats, within walking distance from J Rock. There is a second location in Gung-dong.

In Dunsan-dong, you’ll find the only Western-style dance club in the city, Bubi Bubi. Cover charge is W10,000 on weekends, but that includes all-you-can-drink draft beer. Popular with the college crowd, it’s one of the few dance clubs in Daejeon where you don’t have to buy expensive anju (bar snacks) with your drinks.

For a late-night beer, cocktail, or coffee, you can try the dimly lit Aram, 104 Dunsan-dong, Seo-gu, Daejeon-si (☎ 042/485-6699), located on the second floor of the Myeongseong Building, a couple of blocks from the Bennigan’s. Open daily from 5:30pm to 4am, this cafe bar has unusual decorations (including a fake pond with plastic swans). You can order food until 8pm, but the beverages flow until the wee hours. Bottles of wine range from W30,000 to W50,000; most teas are W5,000.

If you want to have a fun soju (Korean rice or potato vodka) cocktail, head to the Mokugi Soju Café in Dunsan-dong. The owners are foreigner-friendly and you can get Gongju was the capital of the ancient Baekje Kingdom from A.D. 475 to 539, when the capital was moved farther south, to Buyeo, to stay out of the reach of the Shilla Kingdom, which was gradually snatching up territory (the Shillas eventually unified the peninsula in the 7th c.). Although many remains from this ancient civilization—and remains from Paleolithic settlements, dating back 20,000 to 30,000 years—are present here, the main attraction of this sleepy little city is the Gongju National Museum.

Two major mountain ranges (Charyeongsan and Gyeryongsan) are located near the city, and the Geumgang (Geum River) runs through Gongju from east to west. Since Charyeongsan blocks the northern winds in the winter, the city is a bit warmer than those to its north.

Every year in October the Baekje Cultural Festival ★★★, one of the three best festivals in the country, is held either here or in Buyeo. There are about 100 events held throughout the area, including ceremonies for the four great Baekje Kings, a mask parade, folk-art events, and cultural performances.

GETTING THERE From the Incheon Airport, there are no direct buses to Gongju. You'll have to take a bus to Seoul's Gangnam express bus terminal and transfer to a bus there, or take a bus to Daejeon Bus Terminal and catch a bus from there. The way via Daejeon requires less walking, but will add about 1½ to 2 hours to your trip.

From Seoul's Express Bus Terminal, you can get a bus to Gongju (which terminates at Buyeo). Express buses run every 30 to 40 minutes and take under 2 hours of travel time. The intercity and express bus terminals are next to each other north of the river. Express buses from Daejeon go to Gongju every 5 to 10 minutes and take under an hour. From the East Daejeon Terminal, there are 22 departures daily 7am to 9pm and the bus takes 70 minutes. From the West Daejeon Terminal, buses run about every 5 minutes, daily from 6:30am to 10:30pm, and take an hour. If you take a bus from Daejeon, they'll most likely take you to the city center.

There are no direct trains that come into Gongju; you'll have to take a train to Daejeon or a Mugunghwa train to Jochiwon and transfer to a bus.

GETTING AROUND The city bus station is in the middle of town. Here you can catch local buses to most places of interest. You can also flag down a taxi from any street. Neither bus nor taxi drivers speak English, but they will help you get where you want to go, regardless.

VISITOR INFORMATION The tourist info center, 65-3 Geumseong-dong, Gongju-si (✆ 041/856-7700), is located at the parking lot below the entrance to Gongsanseong.

The city offers a free bus tour of the city's most important places every Sunday from April to October. The all-day tour (it lasts just under 8 hr.) starts at 10am from the parking lot of the Gongsang fortress. It stops at King Muryeong’s Tomb, the city’s national museum, and the folk museum. Call the Gongju Tourist Info Center (☎ 041/856-7700) to make the required reservations. Admission fees aren’t included in the tour.

EXPLORING GONGJU

Gongju National Museum ★ Founded in 1935, this museum focuses on relics excavated from the tomb of the Baekje King Muryeong, who died in A.D. 529. These artifacts include bronze, silver, and woodwork taken from the king’s tomb. The rest of the items on display were found elsewhere in the area—keep an eye out for the bronze Goddess of Mercy statue from the late 500s and the lovely jade flute.

360 Ungjin-dong, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☎️ 041/850-6300. http://gongju.museum.go.kr. Admission ₩1,000 adults, ₩500 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Tues–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat–Sun 9am–7pm (last tickets sold 1 hr. before closing). Closed Jan 1. From the bus stop near the Gongju Express Bus Terminal, take bus no. 8.

Gongsanseong (Gongsang Fortress) ★★ A fortress dating from the Baekje Kingdom, it was originally made of mud but was renovated to stone in the 17th century, during the Joseon Dynasty. Originally called Unjinseong, its name was changed at that time. If you can visit on a Saturday from April to October (excluding July–Aug), you can see the Unjinseong Guard-Changing Ceremony every hour from 2 to 8pm. A re-creation of the Baekje ceremony, the costumes and props are almost near replicas of the old style.

In the nearby Gongju Fortress Park, the Geumgang International Arts of Nature Festival happens annually for 50 days in August and September. There are art installations, temporary outdoor sculptures, seminars, and performances.

Geumseoru, Gongsanseong, Sanseong-dong, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☎️ 041/856-0331 or 010/5024-2421 for English. Admission ₩1,200 adults, ₩800 teens, ₩600 children. Nov–Feb daily 7am–5pm; Mar–Oct daily 7am–6pm. From Gongju, take a city bus to Gongsanseong or walk 10 min. from downtown. Free parking available.

Gyeryongsan Natural History Museum Kids The largest natural history museum in the country, this place exhibits more than 300,000 domestic and foreign animals (stuffed, of course), plants, minerals, and jewels. When you enter the lobby and spot the life-size dinosaur skeleton, you’ll know you’re in for a treat. There are three levels of exhibitions, a theater, and a cafeteria on the top floor.

511-1 Hakbong-li, Banpo-myeon, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☏ 042/824-4055. http://krnamu.or.kr. Admission, 9,000 adults, 7,000 seniors 65 and over, 6,000 youth. Apr–Oct daily 10am–8pm; Nov–Mar Tues–Sun 10am–6pm. Take bus no. 102.

King Muryeong’s Tomb and Songsan-li Burial Mounds ★ Although most tombs from the Baekje Kingdom were pillaged over the centuries, including six of the seven found here, King Muryeong’s tomb miraculously escaped vandals and thieves until it was excavated in 1971. In fact, it was accidentally discovered while pipes were being installed to prevent tombs already excavated (and looted) from flooding. Thankfully the government took precautions, and archaeologists discovered a treasure-trove of Baekje wares in the stone chambers of King Muryeong’s resting place. Today, most of the excavated relics, which include some exquisite examples of Baekje artisans’ simple yet stunning gold, silver, and stonework, are now in the Gongju National Museum collection or in the Seoul National Museum. Still, the tombs—which appear from the outside to look like mounds of dirt—are interesting in their own right. The interiors feature some decorative tiles, teardrop-shaped niches for candles, and even the remnants of Baekje-era murals.

Geumseong-dong, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☏ 041/856-0331. Admission, 1,000 adults, 500 youth, free for kids 6 and under. Daily 7am–6pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. From Gongju Bus Terminal, take local bus no. 1, 25, or 25-1. The tomb is an hour from Daejeon.

Magoksas (Magok Temple) ★★★ Founded by Monk Jajangyulsan in a.d. 640, this lovely temple offers an excellent example of local Buddhist architecture—happily, it was not damaged during any of the wars in the Joseon Period. The complex is divided by a stream (in a yin-yang shape), and connected by a stone bridge. In the courtyard is a slim stone Ocheong Pagoda, which dates from the Goryeo Dynasty. With its bronze crown, it was influenced by the Lama Buddhist Sect of Tibet and is one of only three such structures left in the world. In the hall behind the pagoda, you’ll find an altar dedicated to Vairocana, the Buddha of Infinite Light—the paint is faded, but still visible.

567, Unam-li, Sagok-myeon, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☏ 041/841-6221 (Korean only). www.magoksa.or.kr. Admission, 2,000 adults, 1,500 teens, 1,000 children, free to seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 8:30am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. From the Gongju Bus Terminal, take city bus no. 7 to the last stop, which should take 30 min. (buses run daily 6am–8:30pm). It’s a 20-min. taxi ride from the terminal. Parking, 2,000–4,000, depending on size of vehicle.

Seokjangni Museum ★ Kids The only museum dedicated solely to Korea’s prehistory, the museum is located near the Stone Age site of Seokjangni (hence the name). Excavated between 1964 and 1992, the site has yielded proof that human beings have been living on the Korean Peninsula for 700,000 years. In addition to replicas of Stone Age dwellings and tools, there are hands-on exhibits for visitors to experience life back then.

99 Jangam-li, Janggi-myeon, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. ☏ 042/840-2491. www.sjnmuseum.go.kr. Admission, 1,500 adults, 1,000 teens, 700 children. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm (last ticket sold 30 min. before closing). Closed other days designated by the mayor. From the Gongju Crosstown Bus Terminal, take local bus no. 15 (which runs every 40 min.) and get off at Janggam-li LPG gas station.

Seonggoksas (Seonggok Temple) ★ The construction for this temple began in 1983 and didn’t finish until 1995. While the structures aren’t architectural wonders, the draw is the hundreds of thousands of statues of the Buddha and bodhisattvas that are here. A giant bronze Buddha sits on a lotus base and is quite impressive at 12m (39 ft.)
tall. There are 1,000 bodhisattva statues creating several semicircles around him. Behind them are 333,333 small Buddha statues, which are backlit at night.

If you think the bronze statue is impressive, keep going down the hill and you’ll see a taller copper Buddha statue (this one is standing) and, just a bit farther around, an even taller Jijang Bosal surrounded by many attendant figures.

Bangmun-li, Useong-myeon, Gongju-si, Chungcheongnam-do. (☎ 042/853-3355 [Korean only]. Admission W4,000 adults, W3,000 teens, W2,000 children, free for kids 6 and under. Nov–Feb daily 7am–5pm; Mar–Oct daily 7am–6pm. From Gongju, take the bus bound for Magoksa and get off at Seonggoksa. A taxi from downtown Gongju should take 15 min.

WHERE TO STAY

Although there are no upscale hotels or resorts in Gongju, there are some midpriced and economical sleeping options. A cute place to stay just outside of Magoksa is Awoollim Pension ★★. 452-3 Gugye-li, Ugu-eup, Gongju-si (☎ 041/841-9963; www.awoollim pension.com [Korean only]). A wooden cabinlike building with mountain views, the Awoollim has a decor that is a bit girly, but done with care. Pensions are like a combination of a bed-and-breakfast (minus the breakfast, but including a kitchenette) and Korean-style condos. The Awoollim Pension has only six rooms, so it’s best to reserve in advance. Their site is only in Korean (and the staff’s English isn’t great), but e-mail them for information at awlks@naver.com. Doubles start at W70,000 to W100,000 on weekdays off season, going up to between W110,000 and W130,000 on popular summer weekends.

Also near Magoksa is the Ddangwooea Taeyang ★. 480 Gugye-2-geoli, Ugu-eup, Gongju-si (☎ 041/841-5902). The rooms are more basic than at the Awoollim Pension, but you get a kitchen, TV, and the like, and prices are about W10,000 less.

One of the better places in town is the Geumgang Hotel, 595-8, Singwan-dong, Gongju-si (☎ 041/852-1071). Rooms go for about W50,000 to W70,000. Although not fancy by any means, the rooms are comfortable and good-sized.

WHERE TO DINE

Gongju is famous for its agricultural products, like their sagwa (apples), bahm (chestnuts), and ddalgi (strawberries), which can be found in their open markets, like the largest and most popular, Sanseong Shijang. Otherwise, Gongju has a good variety of locally owned Korean restaurants and not too many Western options.

In front of Gongsanseong is a place to get great bibimbap (a mixed rice bowl), Ochae Bibimbap (☎ 041/856-0757). They serve their bibimbap with a variety of seasonal vegetables, some banchan, and dwenjang (fermented soybean paste) instead of the usual gochujang (chile paste), and it costs only W6,000. Also near Gongsanseong is Saehak Garden (☎ 041/854-2030), well known by locals for their ddalo gookbap (a meal of rice and soup, made with beef). They make their soup with beef bones and simmer it for 2 days to extract all the flavor from them. The meal comes with a nice array of banchan and kimchi and costs only W5,000.

For a seriously old-style Korean flavor, go to Naegohyang Mukjib, 297 Gongap-li, Banpo-myeon, Gongju-si (☎ 041/857-4884), whose name translates to “My Hometown Mook House.” Mook is a Korean savory jelly, and the kind that is locally popular is made from acorns (dotoli muk). In a traditional building that’s at least 200 years old, they serve up the acorn jelly or soon dubu (hand-made tofu) in the traditional way. They’re located not far from Donghaksa.
THE REST OF CHUNGCHEONGNAM-DO

Located in the west central part of the country, Chungcheongnam-do was the center of the ancient Baekje Kingdom. Gongju (above) and Buyeo (discussed below) have the most treasures from that lost civilization, but traces of its history are scattered about the region. Despite its strong ties to Baekje, the region's history dates back to the Paleolithic age.

Included in its boundaries is Gyeoryongsan National Park and Taean Marine National Park, which has some of the best swimming beaches in the country. The provincial capital is Daejeon, which has its own governing body as a “special city.” Called Chungnam for short, the province includes the cities of Asan, Boryeong, Cheonan, Gongju, Nonsan, Seosan, and Gyeryong.

In this mainly agricultural province, most of the people are tied to the land and maintain long-held traditional values. The low plains grow much of the food for the capital region, and its western coasts, though not the best for fishing, are used for salt production. Small islands are located off the coast—the largest being Anmyeon-do, which is connected to the Taean peninsula by bridge.

GETTING THERE

The province has no airports, so the best way to get here is by bus or train.

The Gyeongbu Line skirts around the eastern edge of the province, connecting from Seoul to Cheonan, Jochiwon through Daejeon, continuing down to Busan, via Gimcheon and Daegu. The older Junghang Line connects to the Gyeongbu line at Cheonan and continues west and south through the province, ending at Janghang. Part of the Honam Line starts from Daejeon going through Dugye and continuing down through Jeolla-do, ending in Mokpo. If taking a train into the area, it’s best to stop at Daejeon or Cheonan and transfer to a bus to outlying areas.

Buses to Buyeo leave only from Seoul’s Nambu Terminal, every 22 to 40 minutes daily from 6:30am to 7:20pm. Costing W11,200, the trip takes about 3½ hours. Nonstop buses to Cheonan run every 10 to 15 minutes from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal daily from 6am to 9:20pm, costing between W4,200 and W6,100 with a travel time of about an hour. From Seoul’s Nambu Terminal, buses run to Cheonan about every half-hour, daily from 6:40am to 7:40pm, costing W4,200 for 80 minutes of travel time.
Buses to Taean go from Seoul’s Nambu Terminal every 20 minutes daily from 6:40am to 8pm, costing W9,600 for a ride of 2 hours and 20 minutes. Buses also run from the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal, only three times daily from 7:40am to 5pm. Although it’s only W500 less, it takes almost twice as long.

Buses to Geumsan only go from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal every 40 minutes, daily from 7am to 6:40pm. Fares run W9,400 to W13,700 with about 2 hours and 40 minutes of travel time. Buses also go to Yeongi from this terminal every hour daily from 6:30am to 8:30pm, costing between W5,900 and W8,700 for a 1-hour-and-40-minute ride.

Nonstop buses to Hongseong only go from Seoul’s Nambu Terminal 18 times a day from 6:40am to 7:30pm. The 2-hour ride costs about W9,100. Also from the Nambu Terminal, express buses run to Nonsan 10 times daily from 6:50am to 6pm, costing W10,200 for a 3-hour trip. Buses to Seocheon run only twice a day from the Nambu Terminal at 7am and 4:40pm, costing W14,600 and taking almost 4½ hours. Buses run from this terminal 13 times daily to Yesan, 7am to 7:05pm, costing W7,100 for about 2 hours and 20 minutes of travel time.

From the Seongnam Intercity Bus Terminal, buses run on an irregular schedule (about every hour), daily from 6:20am to 7:15pm. The 1-hour ride costs about W4,600. Buses to Geumsan run daily only at noon, costing W11,200 and taking about 3 hours. Buses to Asan run about every hour, daily from 7:50am to 6:50pm, costing W6,000 for a 90-minute ride. Buses to Iksan run daily at 7:30am, 8:40am, 9:30am, 10:30am, noon, 1pm, 2pm, 4pm, and 5:50pm. Costing about W11,000, the travel takes about 3 hours. Buses to Gimje leave daily at around the same time, but cost W13,000 and travel time is an additional 30 minutes. Buses to Busan take about 4 hours and run daily at 7:30am, 8:40am, 10:30am, noon, 2pm, and 4pm, costing W14,000.

The Seohaean Expressway (road 15) runs from Seoul down the western coast outside of Boryeong and continuing down Mokpo in Jeollanam-do. The Gyeongbu Expressway (road 1) cuts through Daejeon and continues down to Daegu and Busan in Gyeongsang-do. When roads 17, 25, and 30 are completed in Cheonan, it will be faster to get through parts of the province with Gongju serving as the intersection for these new expressways.

The only ferry port in the province is at Boryeong (&041/930-5000), which has domestic service to nearby islands Anmyeon-do, Oeyeon-do, Godae-do, Nok-do, Sapsido, Wonsan-do, Janggo-do, Ho-do, and Hyoja-do. To get to the ferry terminal from either the Daecheon Train Station or Bus Terminal, take any bus heading for Sinheukdong or Daecheon Beach. Get off at the last stop (about a 20- to 30-min. ride). Taxis should take about 15 minutes.

GETTING AROUND There are local buses available that can take you to most tourist attractions. In such a rural area, though, many of the buses don’t have numbers and will just have their destinations written in Korean. Most small-town bus stops are right in front of local grocery or convenience stores. So ask the owner which bus to take. Tip: Buses don’t always stop at bus stops, so be sure to raise your hand to flag down the driver.

Taxis are available outside of intercity bus and train stations, or can be flagged down on the street. Taxi drivers in the region generally don’t speak English, so be sure you can say the name of your destination or have it written in Korean for them to read.

VISITOR INFORMATION The province’s main Tourist Information Center, 112-1 Munhwa-dong, Cheonan-si, Chungcheongnam-do (&041/950-4016; http://tour.chungnam.net), is located next to Cheonan Station. It’s open all year daily from 9am to 6pm, and there are maps and brochures for the region, and some English-speaking staff.
In Buyeo you can find the Buyeo Tourist Information Center, 112-1 725 Dongnam-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun (☎ 041/832-0101), at the entrance to Busosanseong. There are also a couple of tourist info booths in front of the Buyeo National Museum and inside Jeongnimsaji.

BUYEO

Buyeo (formerly Puyo) is both a town and a county, and it was the capital of Baekje Kingdom from A.D. 538 until its defeat by the Shilla in 660. Though today Buyeo is surrounded by farms, during its short reign it was a center of culture and art, and the town is proud of its heritage. Indeed, some of the sidewalks here are paved with tiles meant to replicate those used in neighboring royal tombs.

The mascot of this small city, which is nestled alongside the Geumgang (Geum River), is “Geumdongi,” a cartoon version of a famous gilt-bronze incense burner from the Baekje Kingdom. It’s just one example of the ways history pervades this place. For more information, check out the county’s official site at www.buyeo.go.kr.

Exploring Buyeo

Buyeo National Museum ★★★ Built to reflect the architectural styles prevalent during the Baekje period, the museum has many interesting artifacts from the ancient kingdom, many of them excavated from the royal tombs in Neungsan-li. With over 13,000 items in its collection, only about 1,000 pieces are shown at any given time. One of the most impressive items on display is the Geumdongi, a gilded bronze incense burner recovered from one of the tombs. The base of this unique piece is a rising dragon and it’s topped by a phoenix—it is the item that is the most emblematic of the height of Baekje skill and craftsmanship. They also have relics that date from prehistory to the Joseon period, including a gilt bronze sitting Buddha, prehistoric pottery, and musical instruments. All are displayed in three exhibit halls and an outdoor exhibit space, which offers a variety of stone remains from the area.

Admission, ₩1,000 adults, ₩500 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm (last tickets sold at 5pm). Closed Jan 1. 15-min. walk from Buyeo Bus Station.

Gwanchoksa (Gwanchok Temple) ★★ Located southwest of Buyeo, near Nonsan, this temple has one of the country’s most unusual Buddha statues. Dating from the Goryeo period, the Eunjin Mireuk (the Maitreya Buddha of Eunjin) has a small body, a large head, and a flat mortarboard-like hat on top of its headpiece with wind chimes hanging from its four corners. Standing at 18m (59 ft.), it’s the largest Buddha statue dating that far back.

Admission ₩1,500 adults, ₩800 youth. Daily 7am–6pm. From Nonsan Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Gayagok and get off at Gwanchoksa. It should be a 10-min. taxi ride. Parking ₩1,500–₩3,000 depending on vehicle size.

Jeongnimsaji This was once the site of a temple, and excavated relics show that it dates back to the Baekje Kingdom (not a surprise given its location). But its name dates from a tile found near the remains of a sitting Buddha statue, which reads, Taepyong... the eighth year Mujin Jeongnimsa Dae Jang Dang Cho, which falls in the 19th year of the reign of King Hyeonjong of the Goryeo Dynasty, or around A.D. 1028. After a 5-year excavation, locations and arrangements of buildings and ponds were confirmed and now the site shows where they were. To prevent further deterioration of the remaining Buddha statue, a structure has been built around it. Besides the Buddha, only a five-tier granite pagoda and a lotus pond remain of the original temple complex.

36 Jeongnimsajigil, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do. 041/832-2721. www.jeongnimsaji.or.kr. Admission W1,000 adults, W500 youth. Oct–Mar daily 10am–5pm; Apr–Sept daily 9am–7pm. Located in the center of town, the temple site is a 10-min. walk from Buyeo Intercity Bus Terminal.

Tumuli (Baekje Royal Tombs) of Neungsan-li ★ There are seven tombs grouped together in Neungsan-li, which is located on the way to Nonsan from Buyeo. Thought to have been the tombs of kings or royal family members from the Baekje Kingdom, they are smaller in scale than the Shilla tombs found in Gyeongju. One central tomb is similar in structure to King Muryeong’s grave in Songsan-li. Most of the artifacts excavated from the tombs are now in the collection of the Buyeo National Museum.

254 Dongnam-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do. 041/830-2114 (Korean only). Admission W1,000 adults, W600 teens, W400 children. Mar–Oct daily 8am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–5pm. From the Buyeo Bus Station, take a bus going to Nonsan and get off at the Tumuli in Neungsan-li.

Busosan (Mt. Buso) This hill overlooking Buyeo is the site of the Baekje Kingdom’s last fortress—and the site where the kingdom fell to the Shilla armies, which had joined forces with Tang Dynasty troops from China.

Nakhwa-am ★ The “Rock of the Falling Flowers” is located at the top of the summit overlooking the Baengma River. You can get a nice view from the Baekhwajeong pavilion. According to old legend, 3,000 women from the Baekje royal court jumped to their deaths into the river below. It was said that they chose an honorary death rather than dying at the hands of the enemy (the Shilla-Tang alliance).

About 2km (1 1⁄4 miles) to the east is another site of Baekje graves at Neunganggol. Excavated from 1995 to 1996, these tombs with their tunnel-like stone rooms helped solve some of the mysteries of Baekje burials. Although there isn’t much to see here, there are single graves, double tombs, and a grave for children.

15 Neungsan-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do. No phone. Admission (includes entry to Busosanseong and Goransa) W2,000 adults, W1,100 teens, W1,000 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 7am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–5pm. It’s a 10-min. walk to the old gate to Busosan from Buyeo Intercity Bus Terminal.

Busosanseong (Busosan Fortress) ★★ A mud fortress on top of Busosan, it was the primary Baekje defense against the Shilla for 123 years, starting in 538, during the 16th year of King Seong’s reign. It was reconstructed in 605, the sixth year of King Muwang, and it’s remained untouched to this day. Historians believe that the Baekje royalty used the fortress as a park during times of peace.

San 1, Gwanbuk-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do. 041/830-2527. Admission (includes entry to Goransa and Nakhwa-am) W2,000 adults, W1,100 teens, W1,000 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 7am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–5pm. It’s a 10-min. walk to the old gate of Busosan from Buyeo Intercity Bus Terminal.

Goransa (Goran Temple) This small temple located below Nakhwa-am by the Baengma River was limited in size by its rocky location. The temple’s name comes from gorancho, a medicinal herb that grows nearby. But more famous than the structure is the nearby spring water. Legend has it that a cup of this water will make a person 3 years younger. There is an old tale that an old man became a baby after drinking too much of this water. If you get a chance, take a ferry ride along the river for a scenic view of the area.

Busosan, around Gugyo-li, Gwanbuk-li, and Ssangbuk-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do. No phone. Admission (includes entry to Busosanseong and Nakhwa-am) W2,000 adults, W1,100 teens, W1,000 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 7am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–5pm. It’s a 10-min. walk to the old gate to Busosan from Buyeo Intercity Bus Terminal.

There are no upscale accommodations in Buyeo, but there are a number of motels and yeogwan available in town. One of your best options is the Buyeo Tourist Hotel, 433 Ssangbuk-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do (☎ 041/834-0909; www.bchotel.co.kr). Simple but comfortable, the location has a restaurant that serves Korean cuisine and Korean versions of Western food, as well as a cafe. The rooms have A/C, satellite cable, and a hair dryer. Standard rooms go for W85,000–W95,000.

Totally on the other end of the economic scale is the Samjung Buyeo Youth Hostel, 105-1 Gugyo-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do (☎ 041/835-3101; www.buyeoyh.com). Though it’s mostly for groups of traveling schoolchildren, adults can get a bed for W16,000, W11,000 if you’re a member. A family room that sleeps four is only W42,900, W39,000 for members.

Where to Dine

Buyeo isn’t known for any specific dishes, but there are some solid places here that serve good traditional Korean food. The most popular place in town is the Gudulae Dolsambap, 96-3 Gua-li, Buyeo-eup, Buyeo-gun, Chungcheongnam-do (☎ 041/836-9259 or 041/835-0463). The place offers a delicious dolsambap (stone pot rice served with lettuce and other leaves for wrapping), and it comes with a generous number of banchan and suiuk (cold, sliced pork), which makes the price higher. They give you a raw egg for you to pop into your rice so that it can cook in the hot stone pot and the rice gets nice and crispy on the bottom. The dolsam jeongsik (traditional rice meal) is still a bargain at W10,000. Unfortunately, the sign is only in Korean, so look for an orange sign with black lettering outlined thinly in white.

If you want a maenuntahng (spicy seafood hot pot), the best place in the area is Baengmagang Shikdang (☎ 041/835-2752), which is right across from the Baekjedaegyo.

The Legend of the White Horse

The Baengma (White Horse) River runs past Buyeo, and in A.D. 660 the Shilla and Tang troops had to cross it in order to make their final assault on the Baekje stronghold at Busosan. Legend has it that every time the Tang general, Su Dingfang, attempted to cross the river, a thick fog would form. The general was convinced that King Mu, the Baekje leader, had transformed himself into a dragon so that he could protect his people. So General Su cut off the head of a white horse and, using it as bait, went fishing for the dragon. It worked—he caught the dragon and was able to invade, and defeat, the Baekje Kingdom.
(bridge). They also have a pretty tasty grilled eel, fresh from the river (hence the name of the restaurant). Most dishes fall in the ₩10,000 to ₩20,000 range.

If you just want a good Korean spread, go to the Gaeseong Shikdang (☎ 041/834-3999), where the resident halmuhni (grandma) has been making han jeongshik (traditional Korean meals) for over 45 years (although the sign says 40). The country-style han jeongshik will set you back only ₩8,000, but you can splurge and get one of the beef or pork dishes for ₩20,000 to ₩25,000. This unassuming restaurant is located on the main drag if you’re going toward Guncheong, across the street from Jeongnimsa.

GEUMSAN

Geumsan is a small country town in the hills just south of Daejeon. Well known for its insam, this little town is responsible for about 70% of Korea’s ginseng production. If you happen to be visiting in the fall, don’t miss the annual Geumsan Insam Festival, which includes traditional folk performances, ginseng cooking contests, and all things ginseng, of course.

Buses from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal go to Geumsan about every 1½ to 2 hours, daily from 6:30am to 6:30pm. Bus fares range from the regular ₩10,100 to ₩16,200 for a fancier bus.

You can also make a stop in Daejeon and transfer to a Geumsan-bound bus from there. You can take buses or trains to Daejeon from Seoul or any number of major cities (see the Daejeon section earlier for fares and details). Buses from Daejeon run about every 30 minutes to Geumsan.

To get to the Geumsan Ginseng and Medicinal Herb Market, just walk about 5 minutes from the Geumsan Bus Terminal (follow the signs on the main drag). The best time to come is when the ginseng has been freshly harvested in the fall. The marketplace consists of a large alleyway lined with shops selling the root as well as a variety of other medicinal herbs. The Susam Center (which sells the root fresh), the Ginseng Agricultural Cooperative, and the Ginseng Shopping Center are all located in the area. Try the insam makgeolli (milky rice wine made with ginseng) or deep-fried ginseng for only ₩1,000 from one of the street vendors here. You might not want to buy any dry roots to arouse the suspicions of Customs officers, but you can get a bag of red ginseng candy as a souvenir.

If you’re in the area for more than a day, you might want to try a hike in Daedunsan Provincial Park, which is reachable via local bus from Geumsan. Although the peaks aren’t very high, the hike will still give you a workout and you’ll be rewarded with spectacular views of the craggy rocks and the valley below. The easiest way to the top is by taking the cable car, ₩5,000 round-trip, ₩3,000 one-way. About a 10-minute walk from the cable car station is the best part of the mountains, the Geumgang Gureum (Cloud Bridge), a suspension bridge built across a crevasse 81m (266 ft.) high. Another 10-minute walk from the bridge brings you to a metal staircase that leads to the top and a wonderful view. Entrance to the park is ₩1,300.

Geumsan is a small village with no large hotels, but there are a handful of older motels in the downtown area. One economical option is the Hwanggeumjang Motel, 429 Jungdo-li, Geumsan-eup, Geumsan-gun, Chungcheongnam-do (☎ 041/753-2828). Although the owners only speak Korean, they’re friendly and will give you a standard room for ₩25,000. The hotel is just about a 5-minute walk from the bus station.
BORYEONG & DAEcheon

A small seaside village on the coast of Chungcheongnam-do, Boryeong is known for its beaches. Its most famous beach, Daecheon Beach, is the site of the annual Boryeong Mud Festival ★★★ (☎ 041/930-3820 or -3822; www.mudfestival.or.kr), which is hugely popular with foreigners living in South Korea and happens every year in July. The mud from the area's beaches is sold throughout the country for its healthful and cosmetic properties. A bunch of small rural islands lie off its coast in the Yellow Sea, some of which can be reached by ferry from Daecheon Port.

Boryeong is on the Jung-ang Rail Line, which connects to Seoul via the Gyeongbu Line. From Seoul, take a train to Yeongdeungpo Station and transfer to a train to Daecheon Station.

The Seohaean Expressway (15) connects Boryeong, Seoul, Jeolla-do, and nearby coastal towns. Trains and buses run more frequently from Seoul (with travel time doubled on the roads) during high season, from early July to late August. From the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal, take a bus headed for Daecheon. Buses run daily from 6:40am to 5:50pm, taking about 3 hours. From Seoul's Express Bus Terminal, buses headed for Daecheon run daily from 6am to 9:50pm, taking about 2 hours and 20 minutes.

Other than the tourist info booth (☎ 041/932-2023) in front of Daecheon Station, there is a tourist information center (☎ 041/933-7051) inside the Mud House in Daecheon Beach, open 9am to 6pm daily.

The best beach on the west coast is Daecheon Beach, located about 12km (7 1/2 miles) west of Boryeong. The shallow beach and warm waters make this an ideal beach for swimming. If you come during the popular summer months, you'll think that most of South Korea had pretty much the same idea that you did. The mud from this beach is supposed to have astringent qualities and benefit the skin, yielding mud packs, mud soaps, and other beauty products. The southern end of the beach is usually more quiet, with private homes. This is in stark contrast to the rest of the beach's noise and tourist attractions. At this veritable playground for Koreans, there are plenty of bars, nightclubs, noreebang (karaoke rooms), billiard rooms, cafes, and hwae (raw fish) restaurants.

If you want to experience a mud bath, the Boryeong Mud House (☎ 041/931-4022) offers a mud bath, sauna, and “aroma spa” for only ₩3,000. Massages and mud packs cost extra and you can get a number of mud products (including mud shampoo) to take home with you.

South of Boryeong is the small Muchangpo Beach, the first beach opened to the public on the west coast (in 1928). Although it's not very populous or favored by tourists, if you time your visit right, you can see the “Moses Miracle” parting of the sea on a smaller scale but similar to Jin-do. In the middle and end of each lunar month, the water recedes and reveals the mud and rock below. There you can join the locals in catching baby octopus, sea cucumbers, and various shellfish that normally live underwater. From Daecheon, the city bus takes about 40 minutes.

There are plenty of places to sleep in the Daecheon Beach area. If you don't mind sleeping on the floor, there are dozens of minbak. Doubles are ₩30,000 on off-season weekdays, ₩50,000 on weekends. They charge an extra ₩5,000 per person for up to four. High season, rooms go up to ₩80,000, with an additional ₩10,000 for each extra person. Motels prices are just a bit higher during high season (comparable in low season), but you'll have a firm bed to sleep on.

The Ocean of Fantasy Motel, 945-15 Sinheuk-dong, Boryeong-si (☎ 041/931-1111; www.oceanoffantasy.com), is a good option if you want a small kitchen. Don't let the name fool you. It’s not a love motel but rather good for families (sleeping four, six, or eight). There are motel, condo, or pension-style rooms, all with kitchenettes (the condo rooms have the smallest ones). Their bathrooms are a bit small with only a shower head and no tub, but they’re clean and functional. Ask for a room with a balcony on an upper floor to get the best ocean views. Motel-style rooms are the cheapest with off-season weekdays starting at ￦30,000.

Unless you absolutely have to stay overnight, I’d recommend making Daecheon Beach a day trip from elsewhere, especially during the summer months.

If you visit Boryeong in the winter, you can enjoy the Cheonbuk Oyster Festival, which happens usually in early December. Apparently, the geographic climate of the area and, of course, their much-touted mud help create the best climate for tasty oysters. In the winter, the little devils are grilled over open flames, making their shells pop open and baking the soft meat inside. They are savory, slightly salty, and chewy. You can just have the grilled oysters with some local soju, or try some of the other dishes like raw gul (oysters), pork ribs cooked with oysters, gul bap (rice mixed with oysters), and gul jeon (oyster flatcakes).

If you’re feeling more adventurous, another local seafood delicacy is small pen shells. Boryeong accounts for 60% of domestic production for this shellfish and winter is the peak season. Locals eat their myeok gook (seaweed soup) and jook (porridge) with these little shellfish. Another type of seafood that is best in the winter is the ganjaemi, a fish that looks like a small stingray but tastes very similar to skate. Ganjaemi is the most tender in the winter, before their bones get harder and flesh thickens when the water warms. Since it’s so soft, locals eat the fish raw, either dipped in a seasoned gochujang or cooked in a maeuntahng.

TAEAN MARINE NATIONAL PARK

Taean Marine National Park (☏ 041/672-9737) stretches from Taean peninsula (South Korea’s westernmost stretch of land) down to the southern end of Anmyeon-do. It includes 327 sq. km (about 126 sq. miles) of land and sea. Within its boundaries are about 130 islands, many of which are just tiny specks and totally uninhabitable. Designated in 1978, it includes 30 sandy and very swimmable beaches, including what’s considered South Korea’s third most beautiful, Mallipo. Mallipo Beach, the largest in Taean, is located on the western end. This broad sandy beach’s former beauty is now marred by the dozens of hwae jib (raw fish restaurants), motels, and shops that butt right up to the sand. About a 30-minute walk from here is Cheollipo Beach, a smaller, more run-down version of Mallipo, with a couple of minbak and a small fishing harbor.

In between these two beaches is Cheollipo Arboretum (☏ 042/672-9982; www.chollipo.org), a scenic location built by an American expat, Carl Ferris Miller. Since its opening in 1966, he collected over 6,500 species of both native and other plants, which grow in the seven different habitats within its boundaries. Once accessible only to scholars and scientists, the arboretum is now open to the public for an admission fee of ￦10,000. It’s open Thursday to Tuesday 8am to 5:30pm April through October, closing at 5pm from November to March; closed Lunar New Year, Chuseok, and Christmas. It is now run by the founder’s son.

Other popular beaches in the area include Sinduri Beach, located farther north, and Hagampo, which is even farther up from there. Other than the beaches, recreational fishing is popular off the shores, for fish, crab, lobster, and oyster.

Trains from Seoul to Hongseong run about 16 times daily, starting from 5:20am until 8:40pm, with a travel time of about 3 hours. The bus station is located right across the street from the train station. Express buses from Seoul go to Mallipo nine times daily, 6:30am to 6pm, taking about 2 hours and 30 minutes. Less frequent are buses from the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal to Taean. Running only three times daily, from 7:40am to 4:50pm, it takes about 3 hours and costs €9,100. A round-trip bus from Seoul to Anmyeondo runs only once a day.

You can also get a long-distance bus directly to Taean from Incheon Airport (bus stop 8A), which runs twice daily at 11am and 6:30pm, costing €12,800 to €13,600. Admission to the national park is €1,600 adults, €600 teens, €300 children.

Islands

Anmyeondo ★★ The sixth-largest island in the country is located about 30km (19 miles) from Taean. Originally a waterway created to help transport ships during the Joseon era, it became an artificially made island. A bridge built in 1970 connects it to Nammymeon on the peninsula. There are 16 beaches on the island’s coast as well as a plethora of pine trees (called amyeonsong that only grow here) near the beaches and in Anmyeondo National Forest, located in the center of the island. The island is one of the best places in the country to watch the sunset, and Kkoji Beach is the best on the island, because of its cute bridge and rock formations.

There is a small seafood marketplace, Baeksajang ★★★ (finds), just up the road from Kkoji Beach, where you can choose fish, crustaceans, or shellfish from a variety of bubbling tanks. They’ll cook your fresh catch, slice it raw, or fire up the tabletop grill so you can cook it yourself. I recommend getting fresh shrimp, which you can cook on a bed of sea salt over hot coals.

Sapsi-do This small island (whose name translates to “Arrow Island,” because of its shape) used to be a little-known secret with relatively unspoiled beaches and clean water. Now, however, so many vacationing South Koreans have discovered it that practically every household here offers minbak. Outside of the summer season, though, it is still a quiet retreat. The three main beaches are Geomeolneomeo, Jinneomeo, and Bamseom Beach.

Take a ferry bound for the island from Daecheon Harbor. To get to the harbor, take a bus from Daecheon Station (buses run about every 15 min.).

Seosan

Located on the end of the Taean peninsula, Seosan is a quiet little fishing town with some interesting historical remains. The most famous is the Seosanmae Samjong Bulsang (the “Seosan Buddha Triad”; ☏ 041/660-2538), located in the hills east of town in Yonghyeon-li, Unsan-myeon. Created during the Baekje era, this bas relief carved on the face of stone cliffs depicts a smiling central Buddha figure with a bodhisattva to the right and a meditating Maitreya to the left. The mountain where these figures are located, Unsan, served as the main thoroughfare of the Taean peninsula and the major passage-way from Buyeo to boats heading to China during the Baekje period. This is a prime example of the cultural influence of China at that time. About a kilometer up the road, you’ll chance upon Bowonsaji, a former temple site. From the Seosan Bus Terminal, take a bus headed for Unsan, which runs every 10 to 15 minutes and takes about 30 to 40 minutes.
The most important temple in the area is Gaeshimsa, Shinchang-li, Unsan-myeon, Seosan (☎ 041/688-2256), located in the northern part of Deoksan Provincial Park. Founded by Monk Hyegam in A.D. 651, during the 14th year of the reign of Baekje King Uija, it was rebuilt by Monk Cheonueung in the 2nd year of Goryeo King Chungjeong. It was burned down in the 1470s and rebuilt again a decade later. The temple is especially nice during the spring when the valley comes alive with cherry blossoms. From the Seosan Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Gaeshimsa.

About 12km (7½ miles) southeast of the town is Haemi, home of the former Haemi Fortress, 16, Eumnae-li, Haemi-myeon, Seosan-si, Chungcheongnam-do (☎ 041/660-2540). Built in 1421, during the third year of King Sejo, it was originally built as a prison for captured Japanese invaders. From 1414 to 1651, Haemi served as a center and occasional training spot for the military. In 1866, about 1,000 Catholics were executed here for their beliefs during the Byeonin Persecution. There is a monument for those martyrs near the west gate. The south gate (Nammun) is still in its original form, while the west (Seomun) and east (Dongmun) were renovated in 1974.

An older but similar fortress lies in Hongseong, which is located about midway between Boryeong and Seosan. The Hongseong Simgeumseong was originally made of mud, but later reconstructed with stone. Located behind city hall, the fortress was largely destroyed in an earthquake during the 1970s, but parts of it were rebuilt in 1982. There isn’t much left but a restored magistrate's office (from the Joseon Dynasty), a pavilion, and a front gate, but it’s still a pleasant walk around its perimeter. Train service is provided from Cheonan and Yongsan Station in Seoul (the ride takes about 2 hr.). Buses run from Seoul’s Gangnam Station, Cheonan, and Daejeon.

Cheonan is the second-largest city in Chungcheongnam-do. Cheonan and its neighboring city Asan share a station on the KTX train line and a train from Seoul takes only about half an hour. It is located on the Geongbu Rail Line and it is where the Jung-ang Rail Line branches off, making its way down the province’s west side. There is a tourist information center (☎ 041/551-2011; daily 9am–6pm) at the KTX station, where you can get maps, but the staff here only speak Korean.

A few kilometers from the center of town is Taejosan Park, on whose mountain sits one of the largest seated bronze Buddhas in all of Asia, inside the temple Gakwonsa ★★ (☎ 041/561-3545). The 15m-high (49-ft.) statue weighs 60 tons and took 2 years to make (1975–77). It was built in hopes of unifying the two Koreas. You will have to walk up 203 stairs (the number represents merit and virtue in the Buddhist religion) to reach it, but you’ll be rewarded with a nice view of the city below. Buses run to Gakwonsa regularly from downtown Cheonan.

Located about 15 minutes’ ride from the temple is one of the best contemporary art galleries in South Korea, the Arario Gallery, 354-1 Shinbu-dong, Cheonan-si, Chungcheongnam-do (☎ 041/551-5100 or -5101; www.arariogallery.co.kr). With locations in Seoul and Beijing, it represents Korean artists as well as well-known international artists like Antony Gormley, Anselm Kiefer, and Gilbert & George.

The city is most famous to Koreans for having been the birthplace of Korean independence heroine Yu Gwan-Soon, a 17-year-old student who rallied against the repressive Japanese Occupation and was killed for participating in a student uprising in 1919. Independence Hall, 230 Namhwa-li, Mokcheon-eup, Cheonan-si (☎ 041/560-0014; www.i815.or.kr), was built here to memorialize Korea’s fight for independence from the...
Japanese who controlled Korea's fate from the 1870s to 1945. The largest museum in the country, it is even more nationalistic than other Korean museums, which are busting with national pride already. Admission is ₩2,000 adults, ₩1,100 teens, ₩700 children. The museum is open Tuesday through Sunday 9:30am to 6pm March through October, and until 5pm November to February, with last admissions an hour before closing (open Mon on national holidays). Local bus nos. 320, 350, 352, 380, 381, 382, 390, 400, 410, and 420 go to the museum (the 400-series buses are “seated” buses).

If you’re looking for a place to sleep, just cross the street from the bus terminal and walk straight for 1 block and turn right. There you’ll find a handful of motels, including Joatel, 455-8 Sinbu-dong, Cheonan-si (☏ 041/622-7942), which opened in 2004. There are PCs, Internet access, and good bathtubs and showers with rooms going for ₩40,000 to ₩60,000, with an additional charge of ₩10,000 on weekends. The only unusual thing is that they won’t give you a key, but the owners speak enough English and there’s always someone there to let you in.

A more upscale option is the Cheonan Metro Tourist Hotel, 57-9, Daheung-dong, Cheonan-si (☏ 041/622-8211), an 11-story hotel conveniently located within walking distance from Cheonan Station. Local bus nos. 100, 230, 330, 420, and 900 also stop at the hotel. Their on-site restaurant is affordable and convenient but nothing to write home about. There are standard rooms for ₩130,000 and suites starting at ₩210,000.

One of Cheonan’s most famous foods is hodo gwaja (walnut cookies), a round, walnut-shaped dough mixed with crushed walnuts and sweet red bean in the middle. Walnuts were first brought to Korea by local Monk Yu Cheongsin, who brought a young tree from China. Since then, Gwangdeoksa has been the largest walnut-producing site in the country. The original walnut tree, which is over 400 years old, still lives at the temple today. All the bakeries in town sell these fun and inexpensive treats. One place near the train station is Cheonandang (☏ 041/555-5111).

Another delicacy of the region is the Byeongcheon soondae, a special kind of Korean blood sausage created here about 50 years ago. Because a pork and ham factory was created in Byeongcheon-myeon, the people used the ox blood and vegetables instead of the usual kimchi and japchae (sweet potato noodles) inside the sausages. The result was a richer sausage that became popular with locals and visitors alike. If you head over to Byeongcheon-li, you’ll find a bunch of soondae restaurants located here. The oldest one is Cheonghwajib (☏ 041/564-1558), which sells a bowl of soondae gook (sausage stew) for ₩5,000 and a plate of soondae for ₩8,000, which is large enough to share with a friend.

Asan is located about an hour’s drive south of Seoul off the Seoul-Busan Expressway. A small town, it’s a popular honeymoon spot for native Koreans because of the Onyang Hot Springs, which Asan has incorporated into its town. It shares a KTX station, the Cheonan-Asan Station, with its neighbor, and the train ride from Seoul takes just about 30 minutes. The city’s website is www.asan.go.kr.

The most famous historical site is Hyeonchungsa (☏ 041/539-4600), a shrine built in honor of General Lee Shin-Shin of Turtle Ship fame. Hours are Wednesday to Monday 9am to 6pm (until 5pm Nov–Feb), the last entry is 1 hour before closing. Admission is ₩500 for adults, ₩300 for youth, free for children 5 and under and seniors 65 and over. From either the Cheonan Bus Terminal or the train station, take bus no. 900, 910, 920, or any bus heading for Hyeonchungsa. Buses run frequently and it’s about an hour’s ride. From the Onyang Bus Terminal, take bus no. 900, 910, 920, or any bus headed for the shrine. The ride takes about 15 to 20 minutes.

More fun and relaxing is the Asan Spa★☆★ (☎ 041/539-2000; 288-6 Sinsu-li, Ombung-myeon, Asan-si; www.spavis.co.kr), a popular spa and water park located in the Geumho Resort complex. It has a huge wave pool that can fit up to 1,000 people (and I think I've seen that many here during a hot Aug day). The spa is open on weekdays 8am to 10pm, from 7am to 11pm on weekends or holidays; the “bade” pool opens from 9am to 7pm weekdays and 8am to 8pm weekends. The oncheon pool is open 10am to 6pm weekdays, 9am to 7pm weekends; and the water park opens 10am to 6pm daily. For a soak in the oncheon, it’s ₩8,000 for adults, ₩6,000 for children, but I recommend splurging for the oncheon plus spa (which gives you access to the bade pool and everything else) for ₩29,000 for adults, ₩22,000 for kids on weekdays, and ₩33,000 for adults, ₩24,000 for children on weekends and holidays. From the Onyang Bus Terminal, cross the street and take bus no. 512 or 980 to Asan Oncheon. The buses run every hour and it’s about a 30-minute ride. (A taxi from there will cost about ₩10,000.) From the Cheonan Bus Terminal, take bus no. 980 to Asan Oncheon. The buses run every hour and take about 45 minutes.

DEOKSUNSANG

Located in Yesan County, the Deoksung mountain ranges are known for their unusual shapes, which locals say look like people or ferocious beasts. The nice thing about Deoksungsan is that it’s beautiful but has gentle slopes, which give it good hiking trails for even the less fit. A good hiking course starts from Sudeoksa up to the mountain’s peak and then around past Jeonghyesa and back to Sudeoksa. For those looking for a nice soak after a day of hiking, the Duksan Spa Castle (☎ 041/330-8000; 361, Sadong-li, Deosan-myeon, Yesan-gun), which uses water from the 600-year-old Duksan oncheon, is located conveniently nearby.

Sudeoksa (☎ 041/337-6565; 20-beonji, Sacheon-li, Deoksin-myeon, Yesan-gun), the head temple of the Jogye Order of Korean Buddhism, is located on the southern slopes. It was one of the few temples not destroyed during the Imjin Waeran (1592–98). Its main hall is one of South Korea’s oldest wooden buildings, having been built in 1308 during the Goryeo Dynasty.

4 CHEONGJU

The capital of Chungcheongbuk-do, Cheongju (formerly Chongju) is located on the western side of the province in the center of the Korean peninsula.

During the Unified Shilla Period, Cheongju (whose name was Seowongyeong back then) served as a secondary capital. The city functioned as the provincial army command center during the Joseon era and the capital was moved here in 1908. It attained city status in 1949.

A transportation, industrial, and educational center for the region, the city has grown a bit lopsided with expansion mostly on the west side of town. Cheongju’s downtown area still remains a bustling and popular place to eat, shop, and play. One of the city’s most unusual relics is an iron flagpole, the Yongdusaji Cheoldanggan located at the former Yongdusa site. This flagpole dates back to A.D. 962, during the Goryeo Dynasty, and now stands outside the Cheongju Department Store.
From 1999, the city has hosted the Cheongju International Craft Biennale (☎ 043/277-2501; www.okecj.org) every 2 years, in odd-numbered years.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE  The Cheongju International Airport (CHN), San 5-1, Ipsang-li, Naesu-eup, Cheongwon-gun, Chungcheongbuk-do (☎ 043/210-6114; http://cheongju.airport.co.kr), has limited flights. There are flights three times a week to and from Shanghai, a couple of flights to and from Shenyang, and irregular flights to and from Taipei and Kaoshung. There are 10 flights (5 to and 5 from) to and from Jeju-do run by Korean Airlines (☎ 043/213-2107) and Asiana Airlines (☎ 043/214-6416). There are no flights to or from Seoul or other domestic airports. Buses to downtown Cheongju run 25 times daily, costing ₩1,100. Other buses that run much less frequently go to Chungju, Cheonan, and Daejeon. From Incheon Airport, you can catch a bus to Cheongju in front of bus stop 9D. Buses run irregularly (every 20–60 min.) daily from 6:30am to 10:40pm and cost about ₩16,000 to ₩19,000 with a travel time of about 2 hours.

Cheongju’s train station is located about 20 minutes west of the city and is not very convenient. Only about 10 trains pass through the city daily terminating at Daejeon and Cheonan. From Cheongju to Seoul, you can catch a train to destinations on the Gyeongbu line, it’s best to take a bus to Jochiwon Station and get a train there instead of transferring between rail lines.

Express buses from Seoul cost about ₩12,000. Buses from the Dong Seoul Station run every 15 to 20 minutes, daily from 6am to 9pm, taking about 90 minutes. Fares range from ₩6,500 to ₩9,300. From Seoul’s Sanbong Bus Terminal, there are seven buses a day from 6:10am to 8:10pm, with a running time of about 90 minutes and costing ₩6,300 to ₩9,100. There are buses from Busan every 80 minutes, daily from 7am to 6pm. Buses cost ₩14,200 to ₩21,100 and take over 4 hours. Express buses are available only from Seoul, Busan, Daegu, and Gwangju. More frequent intercity buses go to most major cities, including Buyeo, Gongju, Daejeon, Jeonju, Chungju, and Suwon.

GETTING AROUND  Cheongju has an extensive and efficient bus system, and it’s the cheapest way to get around. However, drivers don’t speak English and the stops are written only in Korean. If you know how to say where you’re going in Korean (or have it written down—ask for help at your hotel), you can ask the driver to let you know when your stop is.

Taxis are inexpensive and usually waiting in front of all bus and train stations. You can also flag down a taxi from any street. Most taxi drivers don’t speak English either, but if you have an address or the name of a destination, they’ll get you there in no time.

VISITOR INFORMATION  The tourist information center, 1449 Gagyeong-dong, Heungdeok-gu, Cheongju-si (☎ 043/233-8431; daily 9am–6pm), is next to the Cheongju Bus Terminal.

Fast Facts  Cheongju

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs There are plenty of banks in the downtown area of Cheongju, along the pedestrian street near Jung-ang Park. They’re open Monday to Friday 9:30am to 4:30pm. Major hotels will exchange foreign currency and traveler’s checks at their currency exchange desks.
EXPLORING CHEONGJU

Cheongju Early Printing Museum ★ The oldest metal printed book in the world was the “Jikji” by Monk Baekun Hwasang from the temple Heungdeoksja in 1377, done 78 years before the Gutenberg Bible. Although the actual book is in the National Library of France (well, the 38 pages left), this museum shows the evolution of printing in Korea with models of the printing process from wooden type to movable metal printing developed during the Goryeo Dynasty. Although it’s a small museum, the displays are well done, with good English signage.

The children’s exhibit lets kids (and adults) experience the culture of Korea’s past firsthand.

Sangdang Sanseong (Mountain Fortress) ★★ A large-scale stone fortress on the slopes of Uamsan, there is no record of when it was actually built (although there are some mentions of it in writings from the Three Kingdoms period). The present structure is the one rebuilt by King Sukjong in 1716, after its restoration in 1596 from damage during the Japanese invasion. There are now three main gates, east, west, and south; two plain gates; three turrets; and three waterways. A small village inside the fortress walls includes some cozy restaurants.

Yonghwasa (Yonghwa Temple) ★ In 1901, seven stone Buddhas, each representing the Buddha of the Future, were found in a swamp northwest of Cheongju. Legend Internet Access Most large hotels, lower-priced motels and youth hostels offer Internet access. If you don’t have your own computer, your cheapest option is the PC bahngs in town. Just look for the letters PC; most of them are found on the second or third floors above restaurants. There are some easily found ones in the Chungbuk University (Chungdae) area. The tourist info center outside the intercity bus terminal also offers free Internet access.

Post Office There are a number of post offices (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm) in town, but the most convenient one is in Sajing-no in the heart of the city.
has it that seven Buddhas appeared to King Gojong’s consort in a dream, asking her to build them a house; she sent workers to find and remove them from the swamp. The Yonghwasa was built and the seven statues were enshrined in the Mireuk Bojeon Hall (“the hall to conserve the Buddha image”). Actually, the seven statues are five Buddhas and two bodhisattvas, but who wants to mess with a legend? The largest of the Buddhas has a swastika on his chest, but don’t be alarmed—before the symbol was co-opted by the Nazis, it was an ancient symbol of luck. When it appears on Buddhas, it is meant to symbolize the radiation in all directions of the Buddha’s power.

The temple sits over the levee from the stream, north of the city’s main bridge, and is walking distance from downtown.

Cheongnamdae ★★ This former presidential villa is located in a hidden area surrounded by mountains near Daecheong Dam. Closed to the public for over 20 years, it was opened to visitors by former president Roh in 2003. It’s a peaceful place to take a walk along the expansive trails, look for wild cranes, or see how former presidents spent their leisure time.

Admission W5,000 adults, W4,000 youth, W3,000 children and seniors. Tues–Sun 9am–6pm (closes at 5pm Nov–Mar), last tickets and bus 1½ hr. before closing. Closed Jan 1, Lunar New Year, and Chuseok. Take bus no. 311 to Munui at the Cheongu Express Bus Terminal (the bus runs every 30 min. and takes about 50 min.). Individual visitors must get tickets at the ticket office (located in front of the Munui-myeon Police Station), then board a bus to get to Cheongnamdae (which takes about 20 min. and costs W2,400 adults, W2,000 teens and children).

WHERE TO STAY

You’ll find the best motels and inexpensive yeogwan grouped together around the express and intercity bus terminals. Many of the higher-quality ones look like fake European castles. Of course, there are plenty of clean and economical love motels in the city as well.

Newvera Tourist Hotel ★★ This friendly tourist-class hotel is just down the street from the bus terminals. The beds are comfortable with good rooms for the price. Some rooms have a bit of mismatched furniture, but they’re clean. Tubs are a bit small and there’s not a shower curtain (as in many of Korea’s hotels). Staff are generally friendly and speak a little English.

Ramada Cheongju ★ This 21-story hotel is one of the most upscale in the city. There are the usual modern amenities for a hotel of its class, including a nice fitness center and a pretty decent restaurant. Rooms have reasonably comfortable beds and either city or mountain views. They charge a bit extra for a corner room, but not higher floors—ask for one if you want a better view. Staff speak perfectly fine English and are very polite.

500-3 Yulyang-dong, Sangdang-gu, Cheongju-si, Chungcheongbuk-do. (043) 290-1000. Fax 043/290-1010. www.ramadakorea.co.kr. 328 units. In room: A/C, TV, hair dryer, Internet, minibar.
Shil Motel ★★ Value Remodeled in 2007, this motel is a bargain, especially for the location. It’s near the park downtown in the mokja galmok (“let’s eat alley”), so there is no shortage of places to eat within walking distance.

WHERE TO DINE
Bongchang-i Haemul Kalgooksu ★ Finds KOREAN NOODLES If you want a hot bowl of kalgooksu, this place is known by locals to make a mean bowl of the haemul (mixed seafood) variety. It’s the perfect spot for a hearty meal that’ll fill you up and won’t break the bank. They also have good mando (dumplings).
765-3 Sadang-gu, Yonggi-am-dong, Cheongju-si. ☏ 043/298-8895 (Korean). Entrees W4,000 and up. No credit cards. Daily 11am–9pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok.

Dotoli Maeul ★★★ Finds KOREAN The name means “acorn village,” which evokes a sort of traditional, country feeling. This place does inexpensive and unpretentious overall Korean food so well that you’ll be hard-pressed to find a seat during lunch and dinner times. Go early or late, and be sure to try the very tasty sujebi.

Gilseong-i-baeksuk ★★ KOREAN The restaurant’s specialties are baeksuk (fish boiled in plain water) and nooloongji (burned rice). I know they don’t sound great, but the fish is tender and fresh and the nooloongji is toasty and delicious. They also make a delicious samgyetang, soup made with whole young chicken stuffed with glutinous rice, garlic, ginseng, and dried dates. It’s a bit pricier than some other spots in town, but the food is well worth the cost. Despite the fact that there’s a second location in town, the building is ridiculously large, but you’ll understand why once you see how crowded it is inside.
407 Yeongjeong-dong, Sangdang-gu, Cheongju-si, Chungcheongbuk-do. ☏ 043/296-2965 (Korean). Entrees W26,000 and up. MC, V. Daily 10am–10pm.

SHOPPING
Cheongju has a pedestrian shopping street (Seong-an-gil) in the shinae (downtown) area, as well as the covered shijang (market) which draws crowds all week long. There are clothing shops, restaurants, and cafes. It’s a great place to shop, browse, or just people-watch.

The large department store/supermarket in town is the Carrefour in Seomun-dong, Sangdang-gu. The Cheongju Department Store, 1-2 Nammun-no, 2-ga, Sangdang-gu, is also a popular large store with several floors of clothes and household items.

If you’re looking for a shopping megaplex, head over to Dream Plus, 1416-3 Gagyung-dong, Heungeok-gu, located next door to the Lotte mart, near the bus terminal. It has many levels of boutiques and tiny shops, and a 24-hour spa and sauna, the Spa-ville ★★, on the third floor. The food court on the sixth floor is a good place to get tasty, cheap meals, and you can head up to the eighth floor if you want to catch the latest Hollywood flick.

CHEONGJU AFTER DARK
There are plenty of places to have a drink in the city and several foreigner-friendly bars. As in other South Korea’s cities, most of the action happens in the area near the universities. One of the most popular bars in the Chungdae jungmun (Chungbuk University’s main gate) area is Pearl Jam, located on the second floor on Gungmuli-gil. The owner’s English isn’t great, but most of the staff speak it pretty well. The bar has all-you-can-drink specials on Friday and Saturday nights (which is cheaper for women than for men). Open from around 6pm to the wee hours, they often have live music on weekends. The Attic, located on the third floor, has a small dance floor and a pool table and has more of an intimate club feeling.

5 THE REST OF CHUNGCHEONGBUK-DO

The only landlocked province in the whole country, Chungcheongbuk-do is the center and heart of Korea. Known as a good agricultural region, the province’s main products are ginseng and tobacco. One of the oldest temples in the country, Beopjusa is located here in the Songnisan National Park. The land consists of mostly mountainous regions, with Charyeongsan to the north and Sobaeksan to the east, which separate it from Gyeongsangbuk-do. Chungcheongbuk-do includes the cities of Cheongju (its capital, discussed earlier), Chungju, and Jecheon. Nine counties fall within its boundaries, which are Boeun-gun, Cheongwon-gun, Danyang-gun, Eumseong-gun, Goesan-gun, Jeungpyeong-gun, Jincheon-gun, Okcheon-gun, and Yeongdong-gun.

GETTING THERE The province has only one commercial airport in Cheongju, which has a few flights to and from Jeju-do and a couple of cities in China. The Gyeongbu Rail Line crosses the southern portion of the province with main stations only at Okcheon and Yeongdong. The Jung-ang Rail Line crosses the northeastern corner of the province, passing through Jechon and Danyang. The Chungbuk Rail Line connects cities in the province from Jecheon to Jochiwon, passing through Cheongju and Chungju.

The Gyeongbu Expressway (road 1) cuts through the southwestern part of the province. The Jungbu Expressway (road 35) connects Cheongju to Seoul and parts north and goes down to intersect the Gyeongbu Expressway. The Jungbu Naeryuk Expressway (road 45) goes down the middle of the province through Chungju and Suano. In the eastern part of the province, the Jung-ang Expressway (road 55) connects Jecheon and Danyang to points north and south of the province.

GETTING AROUND A network of smaller highways and country roads connect major cities and towns to remote villages and country areas. Traveling by bus is the easiest way to get around the province, but many of the buses aren’t numbered. The drivers generally don’t speak English, but if you know the name of your destination in Korean, they’ll let you know where to get off.

VISITOR INFORMATION The province’s main tourist information center, 1440 Gagyeong-dong, Heungdeok-gu, Cheongju-si, Chungcheongbuk-do (☏ 043/233-8431), is located next to the Cheongju Bus Terminal. Open all year daily from 9am to 6pm, there are maps and brochures for the region. The official site is www.cbtour.net.

SONGNISAN NATIONAL PARK ★★★

In the center of the Sobaek mountains, Songnisan National Park (sometimes spelled “Sokrisan”) lies in the border between Chungcheongbuk-do and Gyeongsangbuk-do. Due to its numerous trails, the park attracts hikers all year, with its southern portion being the most crowded. Its most popular attraction is the temple, Beopjusa. Most people enter the park in the Beopjusa area in Boeun-gun, but you can enter the park from the Hwabuk area, if you want to avoid the crowds. Although the Hwabuk section of Songnisan has fewer famous locations and relics, its valleys are more beautiful, with larger waterfalls. Admission to the park from the Beopjusa area is ₩3,800 adults, ₩1,500 teens, ₩1,000 children. From the Hwabuk/Ssanggok area, admission is ₩1,600 adults, ₩600 teens, ₩300 children.

From the Boeun Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus to Songnisan. Buses run every 30 to 40 minutes, daily from 6:30am to 8:10pm, and the ride takes about 20 minutes. There are also buses from Seoul’s Nambu Terminal to Songnisan three times daily and from the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal 12 times a day. Both buses take about 3 hours and 30 minutes. Buses from Cheongju run 26 times daily, 6:40am to 8:40pm, taking 90 minutes. There are also direct buses from Dong Daejeon, Daegu, and Busan.

About a kilometer below Beopjusa is the Songnisan tourist village. It has restaurants, teahouses, souvenir shops, and drinking establishments. The one first-class hotel is the rather aged Lake Hills Hotel (☏ 043/542-5281). The lower-class hotels or the handful of yeogwan in the area are better, more economical choices. The village also has a small post office, a police station, and the park’s main office.

The area is usually the most crowded during the popular autumn months when crowds of visitors come up to see the gorgeous scenery and buy giant bags of dried mountain vegetables gathered from the slopes. The rest of the year, you can expect it to be quieter, although it never loses its “tourist” feeling. There are also a few yeogwan and smaller restaurants near the entrance to Osong Falls. Try the trout, which are caught fresh from the valley near the falls.

Beopjusa (Beopju Temple) ★★★ The site of a giant bronze Buddha statue, this temple was originally built in A.D. 553, in the 14th year of Shilla King Jo-Heung. The buildings on-site have been destroyed and rebuilt many times throughout its sordid history, but now it houses the country’s only remaining five-story wooden pagoda, the Daeungbojeon. When you enter the park, follow the yellow dirt road to the Orisup Trail. Pass the trail and go through a grove of pine trees and you will come to the temple’s main gate. The Seokryeongji (Lotus Flower Pond) is most beautiful when the flowers are in bloom in the autumn. The complex also holds the Ssangsajasekdeung (Twin Lion Stone Lantern) and the Maayerae Uisang, the Maayerae sitting Buddha carved into a rock. But, of course, what everyone is here to see is the 33m-tall (108-ft.) bronze standing Buddha, which was built here in 1990.

209 Sanae-li, Naesongni-myeon, Boeun-gun, Chungcheongbuk-do. (☏ 043/543-3615) (Korean only). Admission ₩3,000 adults, ₩1,500 teens, ₩1,000 children. Daily sunrise–sunset. From the Boeun Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus to Songnisan. Buses run every 30–40 min., and the ride takes 20 min. Daily 6:30am–8:10pm. From Songnisan Bus Terminal, it’s a 20-min. walk to Beopjusa. There are also buses from Seoul’s Nambu Terminal to Songnisan 3 times daily and from the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal 12 times a day. Both buses take 3 1/2 hr. Buses from Cheongju run 26 times daily 6:40am–8:40pm, taking 90 min. There are also direct buses from Dong Daejeon, Daegu, and Busan.

Hiking Trails

Past the temple complex, hiking trails continue up the various peaks of the park. The trail that leads up to the Munjangdae peak is a relatively easy one, and by far the most popular in the park. The entire hike, which offers some fantastic views, should take about 5 hours round-trip on foot. If you want a little variety on the hike back, take the trail down to Shinseondae and then down past the Geumgang hut. That will lengthen your trip another 2 hours. If you want to start early in the morning, take the trail up to Munjangdae and follow the ridge trail to Chonhwangbong, coming back past Sanghwanam and Sanggoam. This itinerary will take about 10 hours, so plan ahead and bring plenty of water.

North of Beopjusa is the middle section of the park, which is split into two sections. The largest is the narrow valley of Hwayangdong Gugok. A beautiful area with white rocks lining the bottoms of clear streams, a small temple, Chaeunsa, sits overlooking the valley from its rocky perch. At the eastern end is a nature preserve.

From Osong Falls, on the slopes of Shinseondae, there is a shortcut to climb up to the summit of Munjangdae, which takes about 2 hours to reach the top. On the way to Osong Falls from Jangamgyo (bridge), you will find an old mountain fortress, Geyonhwon Sanseong, if you walk about 25 minutes along the trail to the right. Originally measuring 650m (2,133 ft.) around, only parts of the fortress remain today.

The other waterfall in the area is the Janggak Falls that descend to a deep pond below. The waters are actually a bit dangerous and about three people drown here every year, so it’s best not to swim in the pond (though you may be tempted in the summer heat). Nearby is the pretty Geumranjeong Pavilion sitting on a cliff covered with pine trees. About 1.5km (1 mile) up from the falls is the seven-level Sangori Pavilion, which was originally built during the middle of the Goryeo Dynasty. Destroyed during the Japanese colonial period, it was restored in 1977. A large temple is said to have been in the area, but there are no remains of its structure today. The trail that leads directly to the peak from Janggak Falls had been closed for years to help preserve the natural environment, but was opened again recently. It takes about 5½ hours round-trip to the peak and back down to the waterfall.

Chungju is Chungcheongbuk-do’s second-largest city, but with a small-town feeling. Since it became an official city in the late 1950s, it has enjoyed continued industrial growth. It serves as the gateway to the Chungju Lake area, Woraksan National Park, and Suanbo Hot Springs.

Every autumn the city comes alive with the World Martial Arts Festival (www.martialarts.or.kr), usually in late September or early October. It usually overlaps the Ureuk Cultural Festival, which commemorates the achievements of the great Shilla musician Akseong Ureuk, who invented the gayageum (a Korean zither-type string instrument).

From the Dong Seoul Express Terminal, you can board a bus to Chungju every 30 minutes daily. The 90-minute trip costs about W8,700. The tourist information booth (☎ 043/845-7829) is located inside the bus terminal and is open daily from 9am to 6pm.

Exploring Chungju
Traditionally serving as a border land shared by the Three Kingdoms—Baekje, Shilla, and Goguryeo—Chungju had a unique culture that was a mixture of the three, called Jungwon culture. A number of precious relics and artifacts remain from that period and are scattered throughout the city. One of those is the Jung-angtop, a pagoda tower which indicated the actual center of the Korean peninsula and also serves as a monument to the victory of Jungwon during the Goguryeo dynasty. The park around the pagoda has an exhibition hall with historic relics from the region.

In a small park near the post office is the Jung-ang Gongwon (central park), inside which are structures from the late Joseon era: the Cheongnyeongheon, which used to be the office of the city magistrate, and the Jegeomdang, part of the magistrate’s residence. Across the stream on the north is the Chungju Hyanggyo, a Confucian academy, originally built in 1398 (and rebuilt in 1897).
Cheongpung Cultural Properties Complex  When the Chungju Dam was built, many historic and cultural items had to be relocated from the flooded area and many of them were moved here, on a small hill overlooking the lake. Located about a kilometer from Cheongpung, the collection includes older homes, the Hanbyeongnu and other pavilions, and the Cheongpung Confucian school.
Jongmin-dong, Chungju-si, Chungcheongbuk-do. ☏ 043/641-5741. Admission W3,000 adults, W2,000 teens, W1,000 children. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–6pm.

Chungjuho (Lake Chungju) ★★★ An artificial lake created by the creation of the Chungju Dam in the mid-1980s, Chungjuho is considered the best lakeside resort area in the country. There are a variety of recreational, sports, and entertainment facilities. Ferries operate in the five areas of the lake, but the most popular route is the Chungju-naru course. A ferry also runs as far as Shin Danyang and is an incredibly scenic ride. In the summer season, the boats run daily every hour from 9am to 4:30pm. In the winter season, the boats run daily about every 2 hours 10am to 3pm.
Jongmin-dong, Chungju-si, Chungcheongbuk-do. ☏ 043/851-5771 (Korean only). Free admission to the lake, but ferry prices vary. A city bus runs about every hour 9am–4pm, late spring to early fall. Other times during the year, the bus runs about 5 times a day from 10am.

Liquorium  This three-story collection claims to be the world’s first liquor museum. The galleries are separated into exhibitions on wine, beer, Asian liquor, and aqua vitae. There is also a display explaining various drinking cultures worldwide.
Inside Jung-angtop Park, Chungju-si, Chungcheongbuk-do. ☏ 043/855-7333 (Korean only). Admission W3,000 ages 17 and over, W2,000 children 16 and under. Daily 10am–6pm. Closed Lunar New Year, Chuseok, and the day before and after Chuseok. From the Chungbu Bus Terminal take bus no. 400, 401, 403, 404, 410, 411, 412, or 413 and get off at Gageum Jung-angtop.

Tangeumdae ★  Not far from Chungjuho is this shrine on a hilltop, whose name means “the hill where the gayageum was played.” This is where the legendary musician Ureuk used to play his gayageum during the reign of Shilla King Jinheung. A small hill, called Daemunsan, overlooks the waters of the Han River below. Outdoor concerts are held here in the summer.

It’s officially mentioned on the record in 1018, during the ninth year of King Hyeongjong’s reign. The water originates deep beneath the earth and has an average temperature of 127°F (53°C). Alkaline in nature, it contains such minerals as calcium, fluoride, lithium, sodium, and magnesium and is supposed to be good for your health. Now, it is a cozy spa resort with spas such as Suanbo Hi Spa (☏ 043/846-8898) and the Nakcheongtang (☏ 043/846-2905).

One place that does good Korean food is the BokSeoul Shikdang ★, 249-1 Seongnae-dong, Chungju-si (☏ 043/842-0135), located next to the post office. Open daily from 4am to 8:30pm, there is bibimbap or haejang gook (spicy seafood hot pot) for only ￦4,000.

A good option in the Suanbo area is Hyundae Shikdang, 101-1 Oncheon-li, Suanbo-myeon, Chungju-si (☏ 043/846-3363), which has seafood, chicken, and even rabbit on their menu. You can get a mushroom hot pot for ￦10,000 or enjoy a rabbit feast for ￦40,000. For a hanjeongshik (Korean traditional meal), a good option is Hyangnamu Shikdang (☏ 043/846-2813, 613-4, Bugok-dong, Sangluk-gu, Anshin-si), located behind the Gloria Hotel. A meal with several banchan will set you back ￦8,000 to ￦10,000. Splurge on their pheasant shabu shabu for ￦50,000 or go budget with their soon dubu for a mere ￦5,000.

DANYANG

Located along the upper parts of the Namhan (South Han) River, Danyang (old spelling: Tanyang) is a resort town which sits at the foot of the Sobaeksan National Park in the county of the same name. Part of the original town was flooded with the creation of the Chungju Dam in 1986, and parts of it were reconstructed. The town is a great base for exploring the region.

Trains from Cheongnyangni Station depart for Danyang about 10 times daily and take about 3 hours. You can also take an express bus from the Dong Seoul Terminal. Buses run 12 times a day. Intercity buses run from Jecheon to Danyang frequently.

If you’re driving from Seoul, take the Yeongdong Expressway to the Manjong IC. Then, take the Jung-ang Inland Expressway and exit at Buk (North) Danyang. Follow the signs to the Maepo IC and to Danyang.

Exploring Danyang

AquaWorld ★★ Located inside Daemyung Resort, this indoor water park was opened in 2003. Open all year, the water park and spa are divided into two main areas:
The 8 Scenic Wonders of Danyang (Danyang Palgyeong)

When Scholar Hwang Lee (1501–70) came to Danyang as a chief governor, he was so moved by the natural beauty that he designated the eight scenic areas.

1. Dodam Sambong—This island in the Namhan River has three peaks, which are said to represent three people involved in a love triangle: the husband, the concubine, and the wife. The story is that a man couldn’t have a son with his wife, so he took on a concubine. The wife was so upset that she refused to speak to him and turned away. Locals say that the orientation of the rocks symbolizes this relationship.

2. Seokmun—Going upriver from the three peaks about 200m (656 ft.), you will find a stone gate shaped like the arc of a rainbow. Locals say that heavenly spirits must have sung a song when they passed by.

3. Sainam Rock—This large rock cliff, surrounded by old pine trees, hangs over a clear stream. On it is inscribed a poem by Confucian scholar Utak (pen name, Yeoktong). The poem reads: “Something far superior to other things / indeed matchless, cannot be cast aside. / There is nothing to be afraid of, even standing all alone. / There is nothing to worry about, in this secluded life.”

4. Haseonam—Along the range of Doraksan are three peaks that people liken to brothers. Haseonam is the first, with a large boulder on it said to look like a reclining Buddha (so it’s called “Bulam,” Buddha Rock). During the Joseon Dynasty, it was given the name “Sonam,” which means “a rock where the mountain wizards strolled.” And local legend has it that the gods once descended from heaven and had a banquet there.

5. Jungseonam—About 5km (3 miles) from Haseonam is the middle brother peak. On its slopes are the Ssang-yong Falls, where it is said that twin dragons ascended to heaven through a crevice. During the Joseon Dynasty, many yangban (those from the gentlemen class) would come here to make music, write poetry, and commune with nature.

6. Sangseonam—Sangseonam was named by Gwon Sang-ha, who was said to have built a thatched pavilion and lived here writing poetry. There are three hermitages in the nine valleys surrounded by the rocky peaks.

7. Gudambong—This peak gets its name, which means turtle, from the shape of its reflection in the lake below, which is said to look like a turtle swimming just below the surface of the water. Gudambong and nearby Oksunbong are both popular in the fall season when their trees change color.

8. Oksunbong—This peak was originally a part of Cheongpung-gun, but the story is that the female entertainer Duhyang coaxed Yi Hwang into including it in Danyang-gun. The magistrate of Cheongpung didn’t agree but Yi Hwang carved DANGU DONGMUN on the rock wall, stating that it was “the gateway to Danyang.” The unusually shaped boulders are surrounded by various trees.
the health pool zone and the amusement zone. The health pool section includes various water massages where you can have the water pressure massage your neck and shoulders, your legs, or your entire body in the “floating” area. The amusement section has a water slide, couple baths, and a massage corner just for women. A variety of hot springs soaks include fruit-flavored, pine, and other mineral hot springs.

Cheondong-donggul (Cheondong Cave) Discovered in 1977, this cave is 300m (984 ft.) long and goes almost straight down into the ground. The inside is a lighter yellow than Gosu Cave (see below).

Gosu-donggul (Gosu Cave) ★★★ Kids A huge limestone cave, it is the most famous in the area. Discovered in the early 1970s, this 1,300m (4,265-ft.) cave is pretty impressive. The name Gosu, which means “field of tall reeds,” comes from the fact that the area used to be filled with fields of tall grasses. After the cave was discovered, rough stone instruments were excavated from the cave’s entrance, showing that this used to be a home to prehistoric people. The average temperature inside the cave is 59°F (15°C) throughout the year. Many of the rock formations have names like Octopus Rock and Virgin Mary Rock. About 120 different stalactites and stalagmites are found here. Because the inner parts of the cave are colder and you sometimes have to hold metal railings, it is recommended that you wear gloves in the winter.

Danyang-eup, Danyang-gun, Chungcheongbuk-do. 043/422-3072 (Korean only). Admission W4,000 adults, W2,500 teens, W1,500 children. Mar–Oct daily 9am–5:30pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. From the Danyang Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus toward Gosudonggul. Buses run every 10–15 min. It’s a 5-min. taxi ride, or you can walk the distance in 15 min. Parking W3,000.

Guinsa (Guin Temple) ★★ Squeezed into a narrow valley northeast of Danyang is this temple, the headquarters of the Cheontae sect of Buddhism (Korea’s version of China’s Taintai). Unlike most of the country’s temples, this one is fairly new, having been founded by Monk Sangwon Wongak in 1945. Even still, the original was burned down during the Korean War, and the current building was completed in 1966, with expansions since. Although there are many buildings squeezed into this complex, the highlight is the five-story main hall, the only such building in the entire country.

132-Baekja-li, Yeongchun-myeon, Danyang-gun, Chungcheongbuk-do. 043/423-7100 (Korean only). Free admission. Daily sunrise–sunset. From Danyang, take a bus to Guinsa (a 30-min. ride), which leaves 20 min. past each hour. There are also direct buses from the Dong Seoul Terminal, via Danyang (3 hr. 40 min. ride) or a couple from Busan (a 5-hr. ride).

Nodong-donggul (Nodong Cave) ★★ In the same area as the other two caves, but down a different road, is the Nodong-gul, located near Nodongcheon, a branch of the Namhan River. This limestone cave is 800m (2,625 ft.) long. It has a 300m (984-ft.) drop, and a steep incline. They’ve constructed an extensive system of stairs and railing making the descent possible. There are the usual stalactites and stalagmites, but also cave pearls and unusual formations. It features one of the largest stalagmites in the world and some unusual species found only in vertical caves. It is said to have been created about 500 million years ago. In the middle of the slope are broken pieces of pottery left behind by those who hid here from the Japanese army during the Hideyoshi Invasion of Korea. When it rains, a huge waterfall forms inside.

Where to Stay
Danyang isn’t a huge tourist destination yet, so it means fewer crowds, but also older, less upscale accommodations. The Danyang Tourist Hotel Edelweiss, 264-2 Sangjin-li, Danyang-eup, Danyang-gun (☎ 043/423-7070; fax 043/423-4234; www.danyanghotel.com), which is not the most conveniently located, has nicely decorated rooms and views of the lake. Standard Western-style and ondol rooms start at W120,000, triples W140,000, and suites W200,000. There are several restaurants, a cafe, a night club, and a spa on-site.

Even more economical quarters can be found in Shin Danyang, between the lake’s ferry pier and the bus station. A perfectly serviceable “love motel” in the area is Opera House, 512 Dojeon-li, Danyang-eup, Danyang-gun (☎ 043/423-5751). With doubles going for just W30,000 to W40,000, it’s a bargain. Rooms come with the basic bed, minifridge, and TV, and also include a computer with Internet access. In downtown Danyang, just look for the ridiculously ornate, white Greco-Roman facade.

Where to Dine
Danyang is known for their watermelon in the summer and their apples and garlic in the fall. Vampire hunters will love Jangdali Shikdang ★★★ (Value). 599 Byeolgyol-li, Dangyang-eup, Danyang-gun (☎ 043/423-3960), where they’ll serve you a huge spread of garlic banchan for a mere W15,000 per person. Their multigrain rice takes over 15 minutes to make, but it’s worth the wait since it’s made to order in individual stone pots. Go along the end of the main drag until it ends, then turn left. The two-story restaurant is located next to the gas station. They’re open daily 8:30am to 10pm, closed Chuseok.

A good place is Sambongsobaek Shikdang, 84-1 Hagui-li, Maepo-eup, Danyang-gun (☎ 043/421-1175). They serve maeu-tang with fish freshly caught from the nearby Namhan-gang. Open daily from 6:30am to 9pm, the restaurant offers dishes ranging from W4,000 to W8,000.

Another place to get tasty fare is the Doljib Shikdang ★★ (☎ 043/422-2842), located near the Danyang Bus Terminal. Most of their jeongshik (set meals) have to be ordered for at least two people, so it’s best to bring a friend. However, their prices are good and the food is made with care. Their maneul sam jeongshik (traditional meal with lettuce and other wraps and garlic) is W10,000, samgyupsal (sliced pork) W8,000, and busut jjigae (mushroom hot pot) W7,000.
Jeollanam-do

Both economically poor and rich in natural beauty, Jeolla-do is one of Korea’s most fascinating regions. Located in the southwestern part of the peninsula, it is bordered on the south by the East China Sea and on the west by the Yellow Sea. It is still sometimes referred to as the “Honam” region and it’s made up of the Jeollanam-do (South Jeolla) and Jeollabuk-do (North Jeolla) provinces.

As in all of Korea’s rural areas, the people here speak a distinct dialect different from that spoken in cities like Seoul. And that dialect isn’t the only thing that sets this region apart. The people from Jeolla-do take pride in their food. Ask anyone from the region and they’ll say that the best food in South Korea can be found here. Having eaten my way around the country, I can’t disagree. Historically, Jeolla-do is the ancestral home of members of the royal Yi family (of the Joseon Dynasty). Their refined cooking techniques have been handed down for centuries. Even at humble restaurants here you’ll be amazed at the number of exceptionally tasty banchan (side dishes) that are brought to your table. Even the simplest of dishes seems to have been made with extra care.

Perhaps the poorest of the country’s provinces, due to the area’s history of conflict with the central government (it has long been viewed—and some would say has long behaved—like Seoul’s rebellious little brother), Jeolla-do has largely been left behind as the rest of South Korea has boomed. Although this is not so great for the people who live there, it is wonderful for visitors. Not only will you get to experience the country’s rural past, but you’ll get to see wonderful scenery not yet ruined by huge highways, high-rise apartments, and industrial complexes.

The area has an irregular coastline, numerous tiny islands, and a vast array of tidal flatlands, making for ideal conditions for fishing and diving. The southern coastline has some of the best scenic ocean views anywhere in the country. Some of South Korea’s most picturesque towns are in Jeolla-do. Don’t miss the seaside town of Yeosu and the beautiful tea plantation of Boseong. If time and weather permit, take a boat out to one of the many small islands that fade into the distance off the southern coast.

1 JEONJU

Perched on the edge of the fertile Honam plains, Jeonju is the capital city of Jeollabuk-do (North Jeolla Province). Famous for its regional cuisine and historic buildings, the city has long been regarded a spiritual center of the Joseon Dynasty, since Confucians placed enormous emphasis on ancestry. And Jeonju was home to the Yi family, which produced a long line of Joseon kings. The city was also the ancient capital for the Baekje Kingdom, making this a spot rich with history.

Jeonju’s government is well aware of the city’s historic significance and is taking great pains to maintain its ancient spirit and character. Well known for its hanji (traditional paper), there are even a paper museum, and an annually held Jeonju Paper Culture
Jeonju Festival (☏ 063/281-2541), which includes a fashion show of Korean couture all made from paper. Around the same time in May, the city holds the Jeonju Pungnam Festival (☏ 063/281-2114) with traditional folk performances, Korean verse competitions, and a folk marketplace.

This capital city has a bit of something for everyone: historical sites and parks in the city, gorgeous mountain scenery, and the remains of ancient Buddhist temples in the surrounding hills. And after you’ve exhausted yourself exploring, you can refuel with some of the best food in South Korea.

More contemporary developments include the Jeonju International Film Festival (☏ 063/288-5433; http://eng.jiff.or.kr), a small but growing festival showcasing films from South Korea and abroad.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The nearest airport is at Gunsan, to which there are 50-minute flights from Gimpo Airport twice a day. Only Korean Airlines (www.koreanair.com) and Asiana Airlines (http://us.flyasiana.com) offer flights. From Gunsan, you have to take a bus to Jeonju. The nonstop city coach bus takes about 90 minutes and costs ₩4,500 one-way.

You can also take a train from Seoul, departing daily at 6:35 and 7:50am, and then running every hour until 11:50pm. Fares vary from ₩3,500 for a Saemaeul train to ₩7,200 for a Mugunghwa train. Most trains take about 3 to 3 ½ hours to get to Jeonju. From the south, you can take a northbound train from Yeosu—the first train of the day departs at 5:20am and the last train leaves at 11pm. Most northbound trains cost ₩11,300 and the ride lasts about 2 ½ hours. The train station in Jeonju is in the northeastern part of the city. You can contact the Korea National Railroad (www.korail.go.kr) for more info.

From the DongSeoul Bus Terminal, buses to Jeonju run every half-hour with a first-class fare of ₩17,900 and regular fare of ₩12,200. The ride lasts about 3 hours. Express buses also run to and from Sangbong, Sungnam, Busan, Ulsan, Daegu, Gwangju, Daejeon, Goyang, and Incheon. Bus companies include Geumho Express (☏ 063/272-5117) to and from Seoul, southern Seoul, Sangbong, Gwangju, Sungnam, and Goyang; Tongyang Express (☏ 063/1588-6900) to and from Seoul, southern Seoul, Sangbong, and Daegu; Joong-ang Express (☏ 063/1588-6900) to and from Seoul, southern Seoul, Sangbong, Daejeon, and Goyang; Chunjah Express (☏ 063/275-1001) to and from Seoul, southern Seoul, Sangbong, Ulsan, Sungnam, and Incheon; Hanjin Express (☏ 063/252-1580) to and from Seoul, southern Seoul, Sangbong, Busan, Ulsan, and Daejeon; and Samhwa Express (☏ 063/277-0572) to and from Incheon and Daegu. You can also take an airport limousine bus directly to and from Incheon Airport (at bus stops no. 3 or 16). Buses run daily from 6:30am to 9:30pm and run every hour. The 5-hour ride costs ₩21,000.

GETTING AROUND  Unfortunately, none of Jeonju’s city buses stops right at the bus terminal (☏ 062/277-1572, 767-2 Geumam-dong, Jeonju-si), but the walk to the main road to catch a bus is quite short. The good thing is that the city bus system is widespread and efficient, even providing service to nearby country towns. There are also plenty of taxis available to be flagged down on the street or waiting by the train or bus stations. The base fare starts at ₩1,000 and goes up based on time and distance.

VISITOR INFORMATION  There is a tourist information center (☏ 063/288-0105; http://tour.jeonju.go.kr) in “Reunion Square” off Jeonju Station, at the Jeonju Bus Terminal, and at the entry to the Jeonju Hanok Maeul. They all have English speakers and are open daily 9am to 6pm.

EXPLORING JEONJU  Gyeonggijeon  Built in 1410, this shrine houses the portrait of King Taejo, first emperor of the Joseon Dynasty, as well as successive other kings. Funerary tablets for both the king and his queen are enshrined here. Although part of the structure was destroyed during the Imjin Waeran (1592–98), the building was renovated in 1614 and still stands today. You can see historic royal carriages here as well.

102 3-ga, Pungnam-dong, Wansan-gu, Jeonju. (☏ 063/287-1330. Free admission. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. From the Jeonju Train Station take bus no. 111 or 163 (heading toward Hotel Riviera) and get off at Jeongdong Cathedral. From the Jeonju Express Bus Terminal, walk to the bus stop in front of the Korea National Open University and take bus no. 211, 220, 221, 229, 231, 241, 251, 291, 501, 502, or 700 going to Nambu Market and get off at Jeongdong Cathedral. From the Intercity Bus Terminal, walk to the Geuman Rotary and take bus no. 211, 220, 221, 229, 231, 241, 251, 291, 501, 502, or 700 going to Nambu Market and get off at Jeongdong Cathedral. It’s about a 5-min. walk from the cathedral.
Gyeonhwon Palace Site  This is the site where King Gyeonhwon decided to build a palace about 1,300 years ago, during the Baekje Kingdom era. Legend has it that he stayed here and intercepted the crops and taxes headed for Gyeongju, the capital of the Shilla Kingdom. Later, during the HuBaekje (Later Baekje) period, General Gyeon Hwon (who, rather confusingly, has the same name as the king) attempted to establish a capital here, but he was ultimately defeated by the Shilla Kingdom (see chapter 2). Although the palace is no longer here, some older stones and relics remain on-site. San 9-1, Gyo-dong, Wansan-gu, Jeonju. ☎️ 063/281-2553. Free admission. Daily 24 hr.

Jeonju Hanok Village ★★  With over 800 traditional houses, this ancient village retains its former charm, while the rest of the city has industrialized around it. Unlike buildings in other traditional Korean villages, the roofs here have a slight curvature, adding to the place’s unique beauty. For a full experience, you can spend the night in one of the traditional rooms (see “Where to Stay,” on p. 207, for more info).

Pungnam-dong/Gyo-dong, Wonsan-gu, Jeonju. ☎️ 063/282-1330. http://hanok.jeonju.go.kr. From Jeonju Intercity Bus Terminal, take city bus no. 211, 221, 231, 241, 251, or 291 bound for Nambu Market; get off at Jeongdong Cathedral or Jeonbuk Art Center and walk 10 min. From Jeonju Station, take city bus no. 142, 211, 221, 231, 241, 251, or 291 (20-min. ride); get off at Jeongdong Cathedral or Jeonbuk Art Center and walk 10 min.

Jeonju Historical Museum  This modern museum’s exhibits illustrate many of the rebellions and turmoil of recent Korean history, from the Donghak revolution onward. It’s best to visit first thing in the morning or in the afternoon since the building is usually overrun with visiting schoolchildren from 10am to noon on weekdays.

Jeonju National Museum  The museum is the research and preservation center for Jeollabuk-do’s rich cultural history. Located on the southwestern side of town, it is home to over 24,000 artifacts, only a fraction of which are on actual display. Although the exhibition space is small, it is a great place to see local finds from the Baekje period as well as artifacts from the lesser-known Seonsa and Mahan kingdoms.

Pungnammun  This impressive gate is the only surviving section of the wall that once surrounded the city. Originally built to serve as the south gate in 1389, the present structure was built in 1768 and renovated in 1979. Not only is it a relic from the Joseon Dynasty, but it is also the site where the conflict between Catholicism and Confucianism was played out. The first Korean Catholic martyr was executed here in 1790 for his religious beliefs (see box below).

Traditional Liquor Museum  This may sound like a place to put on your party hat and imbibe, but it’s actually a serious museum created to preserve the traditional rice wine brewing process. It harkens back to a time when each household brewed its own
Catholicism in Korea

Long isolated, Korea was first exposed to Christianity when envoys to Beijing brought books back home with them. In 1784, a Chinese priest arrived, and a French priest followed in 1836. But although a small percentage of Koreans were intrigued with Catholicism and converted, the Joseon Dynasty saw the religion as a threat. Threatened by the fervor of these newly converted Catholics, the Confucian government cracked down hard, and there were multiple mass executions of believers. The most well known of these are the Sinyu Persecution of 1801, Gihae Persecution of 1839, Byoong Persecution of 1846, and Byeongin Persecution of 1866. These bloody conflicts took the lives of over 800 Catholics, some of whom were canonized by Pope John Paul II in Seoul in 1984. Today, Catholicism is one of South Korea’s three major religions (along with Protestantism and Buddhism), with over five million followers.

WHERE TO STAY

As in most cities in South Korea, there is no shortage of safe, clean, inexpensive motels and their Korean equivalent, called yeogwan. In Jeonju, many of them can be found near the train and bus stations in town. They are very similar to each other, most take cash upfront, and they charge around ₩25,000 to ₩40,000 for a standard room. Below, I’ve listed more upscale options.

Hotel Riviera  At this place, sometimes called the Chonju Core Riviera Hotel, rooms (both Western-style and Korean-style ondol) are a bit on the small and spare side. Built in 1996, this second-class hotel has great service and is a popular place to hold academic seminars, since it has large meeting and banquet rooms.

Jeonju Core Hotel ★ Conveniently located in downtown Jeonju, the Jeonju Core is close to Jirisan and Naejangsan. The only four-star hotel in the city, it provides excellent service. Although the hotel is more than 20 years old, facilities are clean with comfortable rooms, both Western and Korean style available. Unfortunately, the sauna is open only to male guests.

You Say You Want a Revolution?

In 1894, long-suffering Korean peasants reached the end of their patience with royalty and with the yangban (the aristocracy). Tensions had long been simmering among the peasant class, angry over the oppressive rule of the Joseon Dynasty, which taxed them heavily while providing little in return. Severe droughts in the early 1800s had led to crippling famines, and taxes had grown so onerous that many farmers were forced to sell their ancestral farms to wealthy landowners, who then rented it back to them at outrageous prices. Local uprisings in 1812 and 1862 focused their rage on these landowners, and were brutally suppressed by government soldiers.

At the same time, an ideology called Donghak (Eastern Learning) was spreading throughout Korea’s rural areas. A mix of Buddhism, Confucianism, and other elements, it was both a political and a spiritual movement. Akin in many ways to Marxism, it was centered on the premise of basic human rights—and on driving out foreign influences. The peasant class had grown frustrated by the influence exerted over Korean politics by the Chinese and particularly the Japanese, whom they felt did not care about their needs.

Finally, in January 1894, the peasants rose up en masse in what is called the Donghak Peasant Revolution. Their aim was to expel foreigners (specifically the Japanese)—no surprise there—and to bring about social reforms like democracy, land redistribution, and tax reduction. At first they managed to defeat some government troops, but by March 1895 the military, with the help of Japanese soldiers, had crushed the rebellion completely.

But while the revolution itself failed, it did have a lasting impact. It sparked the Sino-Japanese War (1894–95), as China and Japan struggled for dominance over the Korean Peninsula. Japan won—and promptly made Korea its pawn. Within 10 years, Japan had formally annexed Korea and would remain in control until the end of World War II.

Hanok Living Experience Center

This traditional village has over 800 houses, renovated and kept from the Joseon Dynasty. You can experience how the traditional royal class lived firsthand by staying in one of their traditional rooms. The Korean-style ondol rooms feature traditional furniture made by a master craftsman and all stays include breakfast. Don’t expect high-end facilities here (you are staying in a traditional village, after all). All rooms are the basic Korean ondol style, so beds consist of really thick blankets laid on the floor. You leave your shoes at the door and step in between sliding wooden doors covered in paper. First- and second-class rooms have personal restrooms, but the third-class option has shared facilities. All rooms include free use of on-site bicycles and a 50% discount coupon for the sauna at the Jeonju Rivera Hotel nearby.
Inexpensive

Mint Motel This love motel is conveniently located within walking distance to the bus stations. Don’t be put off by the seedy lighting or the adult video collection, since the rooms are clean and comfortable. Both Korean- and Western-style rooms are available. If you want a room with a computer, ask for a “PC bahng.”

WHERE TO DINE

Jeonju is famous for its bibimbap (mixed rice bowl), which can come with up to 30 local ingredients. Virtually every traditional restaurant in town will have a version of it on their menu, so be sure to try it at least once while you’re here.

Jeollado Eumshik Iyagi ★ KOREAN Plan on spending a long time at this place, known for hanjeongshik (traditional formal meals), since the meal comes with a seemingly endless number of courses and dishes. You can splurge and get the ₩200,000 sang chalim (formal table setting meal), or opt for the more economical (but still not cheap) ₩20,000 dinner or something in between. Bring a friend because these formal meals with various banchan of seasonal vegetables and seafood require at least two people to finish.

Moderate

Gabgi Hwegwan (Kids) KOREAN Another joint well known for bibimbap, this spot also specializes in yook-hwae (raw beef) and galbi (beef short ribs). This is also one of the few places in town that offer a kid’s size serving of the famous Jeonju bibimbap.

Gajok Hwegwan ★★ KOREAN Famous for the bibimbap, this place really knows how to do it right (it helps that Gajok Hwegwan has been serving it up since 1980). You know this is a high-volume business when you see the giant pyramid of bowls kept on hand just for their signature dish. The menu has limited English, but it’s easy to order and everything comes with a generous number of banchan.

Inexpensive

Honam Gak KOREAN You’ll find an array of local Jeonju cuisine in this large restaurant, which was built to look like a traditional house, curved roof and all. You can try one of the tasty bibimbap dishes or splurge and get the house special meal (Honam Gak teukseon jungchan), which comes with more banchan that you can ever finish in a day, let alone one meal. The side dishes vary depending on the season, but you'll likely get sautéed vegetables, kimchi (fermented cabbage), flatcakes, salted seafood, shinseollo (a “wizard’s stew”), and more.

SHOPPING
Jeonju is well known for its traditional crafts, especially fans and other items made from hanji (paper made from mulberry). Historically, Jeonju was known for making the best bamboo and mulberry paper fans in Korea, and has been home to master fan makers called Seonjajang for centuries. Cheap paper fans can be found all over the city, but for higher-end crafts, try the Crafts Exhibition Center, 1-65 Gyo-dong Wansan-gu, or the larger Jeonju Masterpiece Shopping Center (☎ 063/285-0002), which sells a variety of traditional handicrafts. Both centers are open daily 10am to 7pm; the latter is closed on Mondays.

If you want to do some upscale clothes shopping, stop by the Core Department Store (next to the Core Hotel; (☎ 063/280-1111). It has six floors of (primarily) fashion, rising above a supermarket and food court.

If you're an early riser or late sleeper, you can browse the Nambu (Southern) Market (☎ 063/284-1344), which is open daily from midnight to 9pm. It has been the largest market in the Honam region since 1905 and is a living history of the people of this region. Most goods sold here are agricultural in nature, but there are other items for sale. Take a bus to Paldal Road or the Nambu Market. Other traditional markets include the Joong-ang (Central) Market, which is open daily from 6am to 9pm, and the newer Dongbu (Eastern) Market, which has rotating items on sale daily (blankets, Korean traditional clothing, and rice cakes on Mon; school uniforms on Tues; produce on Wed; and so forth).

IMSIL
When one thinks of South Korea, cheese is usually not the first thing that comes to mind. In Imsil, however, cheese making not only is a way of life, but has become a tourist attraction as well. Cheese was introduced to South Korea in 1959 by a Belgian missionary, who came to Jeollabuk-do to help people surviving the Korean War. The Imsil Cheese Village (☎ 063/643-3700) was founded much later, in 2005. Originally called Zelkova Village (after the trees that line the entry to the village), its name was changed by the village assembly. They offer 1- to 2-day programs, including the regular cheese experience. This program, which starts at 10:10am, 11:30am, and 1:30pm, lasts about 3 to 3½ hours. Costing W16,000 per person, it includes a ride on the cultivator, hands-on cheese making, and a lunch of pork cutlet with cheese. You can add on other optional programs (like harvesting vegetables, feeding calves, grass sledding, or making soap from goat’s milk) for W3,000 to W4,000 more per person.

If you’re not into cheese or want to also enjoy some of the most beautiful scenery the countryside has to offer, head to Okjeongho ☆☆ (Okjeong Lake, aka Unam Lake; (☎ 063/640-2641). This is a gorgeous body of water created by a dam on the Seomjin River. It's best viewed via a 2-hour drive around the water or from the top of Guksa Summit.

From Jeonju Bus Terminal (☎ 063/281-2739), buses run every 10 minutes, from 6:05am to 10pm. The 30- to 40-minute ride costs W3,000. From Seoul, take a bus to Imsil from the Nambu Bus Terminal (Seoul subway station line 3, exit 5). The 4-hour ride will cost about W12,000.

Imsil has a Korail Train Station off the Jeolla Line.

2 NAMWON

This city is known as the “City of Love” or the “Town of Fidelity,” because it served as the setting for the traditional Chunhyang-jeon, a story about a beautiful girl born into a low-class family who falls in love with the son of the town’s magistrate (see the box "The Legend of Chunhyang," below). There is even a Chunhyang Festival (www.chunhyang.org), named after the girl, every year on the eighth day of the fourth lunar month (usually late Apr or early May).

In addition to its romantic history, Namwon serves as the transportation hub for climbers visiting Jirisan (Mt. Jiri) National Park.

GETTING THERE  There is regular train service to Namwon on the Jeolla Line, which connects Seoul to Yeosu. The Saemaul (Express) trains take 4 hours and cost W23,700 for first class and W19,600 for second class. The Mugunghwa trains run more frequently and take an additional half-hour. Seats cost W13,500 to W17,100.

Express buses are available to and from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal. They run about 17 times a day starting at 6am, and the last one departs at 10:20pm. The ride lasts just under 4 hours and costs W8,800 to W13,000. You can also catch an intercity bus from Jeonju (only 45 min. away), Gwangju, Daegu, and Hwaeomsa.

GETTING AROUND  Local buses will take you pretty much anywhere you want to go, but be sure to check schedules and plan accordingly to avoid long waits. There are also taxis available to be flagged down on any street. Taxi drivers generally don’t speak English, but if you tell them where you want to go, there shouldn’t be a problem. Luckily, some of the main attractions in Namwon are within walking distance.

VISITOR INFORMATION  There is a small tourist information booth in front of the train station. Be sure to pick up a map and general information from the friendly staff, who speak pretty good English. You will also find a small tourist information booth at the Gwanghallu-won. The Namwon City Tourism Department can be reached at 063/632-1771 or www.namwon.go.kr.

EXPLORING NAMWON

Gwanghallu-won (Gwanghallu Garden) ★★★  The beautifully landscaped Gwanghallu-won is the site of the annual Chunhyang Festival, since this is supposedly where the legendary lovers met. The buildings inside include the historic Gwangtong Pavilion, which is now called Chunhyang Hall. The Ojak Bridge, built over a pond, is supposed to ensure a happy marriage to any couple who step on it once a year. Other than being known for the traditional love story, Namwon is also the mecca for Korean pansori. From April to October, there are free daily performances here at noon. In July and September, you can enjoy evening performances at the open-air stage of the Chunhyang Cultural Arts Hall across the stream.

78 Cheongeo-dong, Namwon-si, Jeollabuk-do. 063/620-6182 (Korean only). Admission W1,600 adults, W900 teens, W600 children. Winter daily 8am–6pm; summer daily 8am–10pm. From Namwon Station, take the intercity bus to Gwanghallu. A taxi ride from the Namwon Bus Station will cost about \text{₩}3,000.

Namwon Tourist Complex  This large complex rests on the foothills across the Yocheon stream from Namwon. Sleeping options, restaurants, and amusements line Dongpyeongje Street (the main drag). Many sculptures and other works of art are scattered throughout the area. Also inside the complex is the small but interesting Chunhyang Theme Park (☏ 063/620-6792), with old-fashioned swings, a fish pond, and a fake house that someone like Chunhyang would have lived in. On the top of the complex, you’ll find Namwon Land, an amusement park with a Ferris wheel and usual rides.

Eohyeon-dong, Namwon-si, Jeollabuk-do.  © 063/632-6070. www.namwontheme.or.kr. Free admission to the complex, but separate admission for various attractions. Admission to Chunhyang Theme Park is \text{₩}3,000 for adults, \text{₩}2,500 teens, \text{₩}2,000 children. No set hours for the complex, but Namwon Land and several eating establishments open late on weekends. Chunhyang Theme Park 9am–10pm Apr–Oct (until 9pm Nov–Mar).

The National Center for Korean Folk Traditional Performing Arts ★★  This center was created in 1992 to preserve Korean folk traditions, and it organizes performances throughout the country and internationally, in addition to publishing any related research. The collection of traditional instruments is impressive and educational. At 5pm every Saturday (and other times throughout the year), they put on Korean traditional music performances. Those held here and at the Chunhyang Cultural Arts Hall (across the stream from the Gwanghallu-won) include folk songs by nongak (farmer’s percussion band) and other forms of traditional music.

The Pansori Tradition

Sometimes called Korean opera, pansori is a form of storytelling by a singer and a drummer. The sorrikku (the singer, or “noisemaker”) tells a story (usually a satire or a love story) while the gosu (drummer) beats out the rhythm and sometimes makes short sounds of encouragement (called chuimsae) as the story is told. Members of the audience also belt out short words or sounds as well. A full story or madang, with alternating speaking parts (anili) and singing parts (chang), can take hours (sometimes 4 to 5) to complete. The singer holds a fan in one hand and uses it for emphasis, to show emotion and indicated changes of scene.

Originating during the middle of the Joseon Period (1392–1910), pansori began as part of the oral tradition by traveling performers. Although performers were considered low-class by the aristocrats, by the end of the Joseon Dynasty, the yangban began to appreciate the pansori performances. Due to its oral nature (it was usually passed down from person to person and not written), of the original 12 pansori madang only 5 remain today—“Simcheong-ga,” “Chunhyang-ga,” “Heungbuga,” “Jeokyeokga,” and “Sugung-ga.” In 2003, UNESCO added pansori to its list of Masterpieces of Oral and Intangible Heritage of Humanity.
Shilsangsa (Shilsang Temple)  Located along the northern border of Jirisan National Park, this temple (sometimes spelled Silsanga) faces Cheonwangbong, the mountain’s highest peak. Originally built in 828 during the Shilla Dynasty, it is the first of the Gusan Seonmun (the nine Zen Buddhist temples that started “Seon,” the Korean Zen sect). Japanese invaders burned down the complex in 1592, and it was completely burned down during King Gojeong’s reign. It was rebuilt in 1884 on a smaller scale from its former self. Its iron Buddha from the late 9th century is one of the earliest examples of its kind.

WHERE TO STAY
The largest concentration of accommodations is at the Namwon Tourist Complex, which has hotels and lower-priced yeogwan and minbak (homestays), for the more price-conscious. There are also several yeogwan and motels near the bus terminal (many of them with attached bathhouses). They run about W30,000 to W35,000 for a standard room that sleeps one or two. Newer accommodations are located near the express bus terminal.

A conveniently located, slightly more upscale accommodation is the Namwon Gukmin (Kukmin) Hotel, 437 Shincheon-dong, Namwon-si (☎ 063/633-7515), with rooms starting at W50,000 per night. Cheaper options are the Greenpia Motel, 277-1, Yongdamil, Juchon-myeon, Namwon-si (☎ 063/636-7200), and the Chunhyanjang, 37-121, Oyon-dong, Namwon-si (☎ 063/636-0330), with rooms starting at W30,000 per night.

For a casual place to lay your head and a good home-cooked meal, try the Namwon Shikdang Minbak, 167-1 Bukcheon-li, Unbong-eup, Namwon-si (☎ 063/634-0044) in Unbong. The accommodations are basic, but they serve a great dish of roast pork.

WHERE TO DINE
The Namwon Tourist Complex has a number of reasonably priced restaurants to choose from. For late-night amusements, there are also a number of noraebang (private karaoke “singing” rooms) and bars in the area.

For a more traditional flavor, try the restaurants around Gwanghallu-won (some of the best ones are between the back gate and the post office). Many of the restaurants are decorated to imitate the kind run by Wolmae (Chunhyang’s mom), who was a gisaeng. A famous restaurant in the area, well known for its loach, or mudfish (a type of freshwater fish that is flat and has mild, white meat), is Namwon Chunhyang-gol Saejip, 60-206 Cheongeoh-dong, Namwon-si (☎ 063/625-2443), whose name means “new house.” They do all things loach, including loach stew, loach sashimi, and the newest addition to their menu, deep-fried loach. Dishes range from W7,000 to W25,000.

SHOPPING
Namwon is well known for its wooden crafts, and you can find some traditional folkware at the Namwon Folkcrafts Sales Center, 470 Uhhyeoong-dong, Namwon-si
The Legend of Chunhyang

The story of Chunhyang, Chunhyang-ga, is one of a handful of surviving Korean pansori, in which a performer sings a story while a drummer sets the rhythm. Korea’s version of Romeo and Juliet is about Chunhyang, the daughter of a gisaeng, a female entertainer for government officials akin to a Japanese geisha, who falls in love with Mong-ryong, the son of a magistrate.

The two marry in secret, but Mong-ryong is forced to return to Seoul to finish his education. While he is away, a local magistrate tries to force Chunhyang to be his concubine. She refuses and is thrown into prison, tortured, and sentenced to death. At the last minute, Mong-ryong returns disguised as a beggar (but in fact a secret royal inspector) and rescues her.

(☎ 063/626-5840), or the Namwon Lacquer Center, 515 Josan-dong, Namwon-si (☎ 063/631-5725). There are also some shops in the Namwon Tourist Complex and near Gwanghallu-won, where you can buy furniture and other wares made from local bamboo.

THE REST OF JEOLLABUK-DO

The northern half of Jeolla-do, Jeollabuk-do (sometimes called “Jeonbuk”) encompasses six small cities, including Jeonju and Namwon (see earlier), Iksan, Gimje, Gunsan, and Jeong-eup. Still, most of its residents live in rural areas. Due to its shallow water, there is almost no good natural harbor. Only Gunsan has a large-scale harbor and ferry terminal. Unlike Jeollanam-do to the south, Jeollabuk-do has virtually no wide, sandy beaches and very few associated islands.

Still, because of its fertile soil, the area has been the primary rice provider for the peninsula for centuries. Its red soil is also supposedly good for your health and can be found in specialized cosmetics and beauty products from the region. Although there aren’t any major tourist destinations in the province, there are many national parks, historical areas, and quieter temples.

There is only one airport in the province at Gunsan, 385 Seonyeon-li (☎ 063/469-8345). Korean Airlines (☎ 063/471-5001) offers flights to and from Jeju twice daily. Flights to Seoul’s Gimpo airport were discontinued in 2002 and there are no current plans to revive service. There are local city buses to Gunsan city that run every hour. There are also two nonstop intercity buses to Jeonju and Iksan, which run twice a day. One auto-rental company, Kumho Rent-a-Car (☎ 063/452-8000), has service at the airport.

It is easier to reach the region by train as the Honam Line runs south from Daejeon and connects Iksan and Jeong-eup to Mokpo (the end of the line). The Jeolla Line runs southeast from Iksan to Jeonju, Imsil, and Namwon before going to Suncheon and Yeosu in Jeollanam-do. The short Gunsan Line starts from Iksan and heads west to Gunsan.
It's best to take a bus to Jeonju from Seoul, and then explore the rest of Jeollabuk-do from there.

The Honam Expressway (road 25) runs through the middle of the province. It connects Iksan and port city Gunsan to Jeonju.

GETTING AROUND Local buses will take you pretty much anywhere you want to go; the only problem is that they run pretty infrequently (about every hour or two) from select destinations. So make sure you know what time the return bus is so that you're not stuck waiting an hour for the next bus. Fares run about W800 to W900 for local buses, so be sure to have plenty of W1,000 bills and coins with you (drivers usually don't give you change). Unfortunately, bus schedules aren't always posted at the bus stops (sometimes there aren't even bus stops), so ask your driver what time the return trips run and plan accordingly, especially when venturing out to less popular places.

Although not recommended, if you want to rent a car, I suggest renting one in a city (like Seoul or at least Jeonju) because you won't find car-rental companies in remote areas (for instance, there is only one company that services Namwon).

Taxis are usually available to be flagged down in cities and major tourist attractions, but you won’t find them in some of the smaller remote villages. As in most places outside of Seoul, drivers don’t speak English, so be sure to have a map or know the name of your destination in Korean.

MUJU & DEOGYUSAN NATIONAL PARK
About 4 hours from Seoul, Muju County is known for its annual Firefly Festival in mid-June. Because the Sobaek Mountains divide the county, the beautiful Muju Resort (☏ 063/322-9000; for more information see “Where to Stay,” later) is popular for skiing and sledding in the winter. The summer attracts golfers and hikers.

The Deogyusan (Mt. Deogyu) National Park spans a large area of the Sobaek Mountains and includes the scenic Gucheondong Valley, which is worth exploring for its interesting rock formations, wonderful cliffs, and waterfalls. The town of Muju, the gateway to the valley on its Jeollabuk-do side, is not much of a destination. The city does have the Hanpungnu Pavilion, said to be one of the most beautiful in the province.

One of the remaining temples in the valley is the Baengnyeongsa, named because of a white lotus that appeared after the death of a monk who meditated here in seclusion. The most popular and scenic hiking trail takes you up from the park’s entrance to Baengnyeongsa. It takes about 3 hours to go up and back down.

Also in the national park are Anguksa (Anguk Temple) and the Jeoksangsanseong Fortress, both of which offer beautiful views from their height in the mountains.

Entrance to the national park costs W3,200 for adults, W1,200 for teens, and W600 for children, which includes entrance to either the Anguksa or the Baengnyeongsa, depending on which of the two main entrances you use—plan to head to the Jeoksang entrance if you want to see Anguksa and the Samgong entrance if you want to see Baengnyeongsa.

GOCHANG
This small town and county of the same name are located southwest of Jeong-eup in the southwestern part of the province. In this largely rural area, the most famous attraction is the Gochang-eup Fortress ★★ (aka the Moyangseong, after Gochang’s name during the Baekje period), located on the hill overlooking the village. Built in 1453, during the early Joseon Dynasty, it is surrounded by the slopes of Mt. Bandeug and has three gates, one each to the east, west, and north; two floodgates; and a tower. Most of the original fortress is intact and the rest has been reconstructed, so it is in fine shape these days. The Moryang Fortress Festival is held here on the ninth day of the ninth lunar month of the year (usually in early Oct). If you happen to be in the area then, make sure to catch it, as it is one of the few traditional festivals left of its kind.

Next to the fortress (and walking distance from the bus station) is the Gochang Pansori Museum (http://www.pansorimuseum.com/eng). A private museum, it is a nice introduction to this historic and uniquely Korean way of singing. It’s open Tuesday through Sunday 9am to 6pm, but the ticket booth pulls down its shutters 30 minutes before closing. The museum is closed Jan 1. Admission is ₩800 for adults, ₩500 for youths 7 to 18, and free for those 65 and older and kids 6 and under.

The prehistoric cemeteries surrounding the small town of Gochang (along with those at Hwasun and Ganghwa) have been collectively declared a UNESCO World Heritage site. The thousands of goindol (dolmen) found in these sites form part of the remnants of a Megalithic culture found both here and in other parts of the world. There are over 2,000 (out of the 36,000 on the entire Korean peninsula) found in the eastern mountains of Gochang-eup. The Korean word for dolmen, goindol, literally means “a rock that is propped up by other rocks.” The Gochang Dolmen Museum (☏ 063/560-2576; 676, Dosan-li, Gochang-eup; www.gcdolmen.go.kr), which is mainly a bunch of dioramas depicting the life of the prehistoric dolmen makers, is open Tuesday to Sunday 9am to 6pm (until 5pm Nov–Feb). Admission is ₩3,000 for adults, ₩2,000 for teens, ₩1,000 for children.

Daily buses from Seoul go to Gochang about every 35 minutes. The ride takes about 3 hours and 40 minutes. Buses are also available from Jeonju (80-min. ride) every 30 minutes. Those from Gwangju run every 30 minutes and take just under an hour. Buses also run from Jeong-eup every 10 minutes and take about 30 minutes to arrive in Gochang. Gochang’s official English website can be found at http://culture.gochang.go.kr/eng.

SEONUNSAN (MT. SEONUN) PROVINCIAL PARK

This park is famous for its dense forest, steep peaks, and oddly shaped rocks (some are sheer-faced as if they’ve been sliced in half, while others are rounded and almost form figures). Although these are not the highest ranges in the country, the sheer faces of some of the rocks here make this a very popular spot for mountain climbers.

The original Seonunsa (Seonun Temple) ★★, built in 577 during the Baekje period, was an impressive complex. It is now only a shadow of its former self (at its height, it had 89 shrines and 3,000 monks living within its confines), ever since much of it was destroyed during the second Japanese invasion in 1597. Still, the temple is renowned for its beautiful scenery during all four seasons—brilliantly blooming 500-year-old camellia trees and cherry blossoms in the spring, thickly green forests hiding cool valleys in the summer, colorful foliage in the fall, and peaceful white snow blanketing the winter scenery. It also houses a Buddha statue from the early Goryeo dynasty, which was later found to have a hidden record from the Donghak Farmer’s Revolution hidden in its chest.

While in the area, walk up a bit from Seonunsa to the Jinheung-gul (Jinheung cave) and the Dosol-am (sometimes spelled Dosoram), a hermitage set in a pine and bamboo grove. Enshrined in the hermitage is the Jijang Bosal, the “King of Harmless Ghosts” and the lord of the underworld, where many come to pray for help in the afterlife.

You can take a direct bus to Seonunsan from Jeong-eup Station. Buses run four times a day and the ride takes about 50 minutes. Buses are also available from Gochang, which take about 30 minutes and run about eight times a day. The park is open daily from 8am to 6pm in the summer, 9am to 5pm in the winter.

If you decide to overnight in the area, your best bet is the Seonunsan Tourist Hotel (☎ 063/561-3377). Located near the entrance to the park, it is the largest hotel in the area. Its facilities are a bit dated and show wear, but their ondol rooms are comfortable and clean, ranging from ₩60,000 to ₩100,000. Even if you decide to stay at the less expensive Seonunsan Youth Hostel (☎ 063/561-3333) or any of the private minbak in the area, you can still drop in for a soak or a mud massage at the Seonunsan Tourist Hotel’s Cheongjutang (bath).

As for eats, the regional specialty is Puncheon eel, caught in the area streams, where freshwater meets seawater. Many restaurants specialize in this somewhat sweet-tasting eel. Most of them are located around the entrance to the park. One good joint is the Cheong-won Garden (☎ 063/564-0414), where they serve this fish broiled in soy sauce for about ₩14,000. You can wash it all down with some of their special (and fragrant) wild berry wine for ₩8,000.

BYEONSAN BANDO (MT. BYEON PENINSULA) NATIONAL PARK

At the only national park in South Korea to encompass both a seashore and mountains, the mountains here are surprisingly rugged for being so close to the ocean and rising up from the fertile plains. Stretching 35km (22 miles), the park is divided into two large sections—Oebyeonsan (outer Byeonsan), on the coast, and Naebyeonsan (inner Byeonsan) inland.

The main attractions at Oebyeonsan are Byeonsan Beach and Chaeseokgang (Chaeseok River). One of the few good beaches on South Korea’s west coast, its fine sand and nearby pine forest attract tourists, especially during the summer. Chaeseokgang lies at the west of the Byeonsan peninsula, where it meets the sea and the cliffs. Those cliffs, the Tojeokamcheong, look like thousands of books stacked on top of each other. It’s a great place to enjoy the sunset any time of year.

Seafood restaurants line the shore of Byeonsan Bando on the way to Chaeseokgang. Great scenery and a bowl of hwaedupbap (rice and raw fish) can be had for ₩10,000 at such places as the Hwang-geum Hwaetjib (☎ 063/582-8763, San 47, Gyeonpo-li, Byeonsan-myeon, Buan-gun). Plates of fresh hwae (raw fish) cost anywhere from ₩20,000 to ₩80,000 depending on the size and assortment of fish.

Naebyeonsan is especially well known for its waterfalls, gorgeous valleys, and fragrant pine woodlands. On the east side of the mountain is the diminutive Gaeamsa (Gaeam Temple), originally built in 676. It was expanded in 1313 and has gone through many reconstructions. The largest temple in the park is Naesosa ★★★ (☎ 063/583-7281, 268 Seokpo-li, Jinseo-myeon, Buan-gun), which was originally built in 633 during the Baekje period as Sosoraesa. It has also been through many renovations, with the latest done by a Zen monk in 1865. It’s one of the few temples in the country with buildings left unpainted. The walk to the temple is beautiful, lined on either side with fir and pine trees (although the recorded Buddhist chanting can be a bit distracting). It’s definitely worth a visit if you’re in the area. Entrance to Naesosa is ₩2,000 adults, ₩800 teens, and ₩500 children.

From the Buan Bus Terminal, there are buses every 20 to 30 minutes from 6:30am to 8:30pm that go to Naesosa. The ride takes about 50 minutes.

The easiest way to get to Byeonsan Bando National Park is to take a bus or taxi from either Jeong-eup Station or the Busan Bus Terminal. The park is open daily March through October from 8:30am to 6pm (from 9am Nov–Feb). Admission is ₩2,000 for adults, ₩800 for teens, and ₩500 for kids, free for children 6 and under and seniors 65 and over. There is no admission fee for beach access. If you get a chance, try to buy a jar of the wonderfully aromatic wild honey from local vendors in the Naebyeonsan area, which is supposed to have medicinal value and is one of the three famous things (sambyeon) from the region. The other two are the wild orchids and the tall, straight fir trees.

Accommodations in the area include a number of small yeogwan and minbak with single/double rooms usually in the ₩30,000 to ₩35,000 range on weekdays and ₩40,000 to ₩50,000 on weekends. The most high-end hotel in the area is the Byeonsan Daemyung Resort ★ (☎ 063/580-8800; 257 Gyeoppo-li Byeonsan-myeon, Buan-gun; www.daemyungresort.com), which has both Korean and Western-style rooms. In popular summer months (July–Aug), it may be easier to find a place to sleep in the nearby town, Gyeokpoham.

THE KING OF HARMLESS GHOSTS

The Jijang Bosal, or King of the Harmless Ghosts (he’s also known as Bodhisattva Ksitigarbha, as Dizang in Chinese, and as Jizo in Japanese), is a popular bodhisattva for Mahayana Buddhists. A Buddhist saint of sorts, he made a vow not to achieve “Buddhahood” until all the hells were emptied, and thus became the bodhisattva of beings in hell. He is usually depicted as a monk with a shaved head and often carries a staff to force the gates of hell open. He also carries the “wish-fulfilling jewel” to light the darkness.
DAEDUNSAN (MT. DAEDUN) PROVINCIAL PARK ★

Daedunsan is almost equidistant from both Jeonju and Daejeon, making it an ideal day trip from either city. Its dramatic high peak can be reached by hiking up for 2 hours or by taking the cable car (which offers beautiful views of the valley below). At the top, one trail leads you straight up to a metal staircase (go up about 10 min.) to the Geumgang Bridge, a narrow suspension bridge which is 50m (164 ft.) long, 1m (3¾ ft.) wide, and about 80m (262 ft.) high. But the fun doesn’t end there. After the bridge is another set of metal stairs, steeper and more precarious than the last one. Climbing up those stairs takes you to the top of the mountain, where you may be surprised to find old women selling bottles of water and candy bars, which they carry up the mountain every morning.

You can take a bus from either Jeonju or Daejeon and get off at the small tourist village near the Daedunsan Tourist Hotel. There is only one bus daily from Daejeon Dongbu Intercity Bus Terminal to Daedunsan and it leaves at 10:30am. The 1-hour ride costs ￦3,200.

MAISAN (MT. MAI) PROVINCIAL PARK & JINAN

The name “Maison” means “horse ear mountain,” so named because the two peaks are said to look like the ears of a horse (especially when looking at them from Jinan).

Tapsa (Pagoda Temple) ★★ is one of the most unique small temples in the country. About 120 pagodas made from neatly piled stones were created here by a hermit who lived here. Only 80 of them exist today. You’ll pass the smaller Unsusa on the way up, and another temple, the Geamdangsa, just below Tapsa. Near this temple, there is a trail that leads up to Naong-am, a grotto cave used as a sanctuary by a Shilla monk. Farther down the road is the Isan-myoo, a shrine dedicated to Dangun and Joseon Dynasty kings Taejo and Sejong. The way up to Tapsa is steep and precarious, but it’s worth the climb.

You can take a daily local bus from Jinan, which leaves every 30 minutes and takes about 10 minutes. To get to Jinan, catch the 50-minute bus ride from Jeonju (buses run 7:30am–6pm). Jinan itself is a charming little provincial town near the edge of a forest, well known for its insam (ginseng) and shiitake mushrooms.

GANGCHEONSAN COUNTY PARK

Although national and provincial parks are popular tourist destinations, county parks are usually lesser known. That’s a shame, because some of them are truly special. Jeollabuk-do has two county parks, one of which is Gangcheonsan. Located southeast of Naejangsan, it is just outside of the small village of Sunchang (see section below). Although this park’s peaks aren’t very dramatic, the big draws here are the gently curving surrounding valleys and streams that flow through them.

To the left of the park’s entrance is a lake, Gangcheon-ho, which usually has clear, calm waters that mirror the surrounding landscape. The area is great to visit any time of year, with cherry blossoms, forsythias, and azaleas blooming in the spring; refreshingly cold waters flowing in cool valleys in the summer; maple trees aflame with color in the autumn; and snow-capped mountains in the winter.

The main hiking trail (now covered with sand) runs along the stream to Gangcheonsa (Gangcheon Temple). Built in 887 by Monk Doseon Guksa, the temple used to be a huge complex with several associated hermitages, but it was destroyed during the Imjin Waeran in the 1590s. Rebuilt soon after, it was destroyed again during the Korean War. It was reconstructed slowly afterward, but it never again attained its former glory. The buildings are rather unimpressive today, but the setting is idyllic.
Just beyond the temple is a suspension bridge that was built in 1980. If you cross the bridge and follow the trail up the hillside, you’ll reach a pavilion, where you’ll get the best view of the valley below. From the top of the reservoir there are two steep trails that lead up to the fortress. The southern trail is steeper, while the northern one runs along the ridge.

You can catch a bus to Gangcheonsan from the Sunchang Bus Terminal about every hour. Buses also run from Gwangju and Jeong-eup (the one from Jeong-eup stops a few kilometers below the mountain village). Many restaurants, souvenir shops, and a handful of accommodations are available in the small village outside the park’s entrance. Admission is W1,000 for adults, W700 for teens, W500 for children, free for those 65 and older and 6 and under.

SUNCHANG

Sunchang (the village and county) is well known for gochujang (chile-pepper paste). It’s so popular, in fact, that it has a museum dedicated to the fermented condiment, the Janghada (Jaryu Museum), Baeksan-li, Sunchang-eup, Sunchang-gun (☏ 063/650-1161; www.janghada.com). If you reserve in advance, you can make your own gochujang and take a jar home with you. Visitors can also learn how to make shikhae (the sweet rice drink) and injeolmi (a traditional rice cake dusted in toasted soybean powder). Open Tuesday to Sunday 9am to 6pm; the last admission is an hour before closing. Admission is free, but it costs W24,000 for adults and W14,000 for children for the 2-hour experiential program. They even have sleeping quarters for those who want to spend the night in Sunchang.

Nearby, at the foot of Amisan is the Sunchang Gochujang Minsok Maeul (Chile Paste Folk Village) (☏ 063/653-0703), a relatively “new” village, where several dozen artisans moved into the town’s hanok (traditional houses) to make and sell their handmade chile paste. Visitors can visit each place and taste the gochujang and jangajji (picked vegetables), made the old-fashioned way. They even have a Sunchang Gochujang Festival in early November.

There are express buses from Seoul Central City Terminal to Sunchang five times daily, at 9:30am, 10:30am, 1:30pm, 2:45pm, and 4:10pm. The ride takes about 3½ hours. There are buses from Incheon (via Damyang) to Sunchang twice a day, taking about 5 hours. There are also direct buses from Jeonju (every 30 min. 6:30am–8:30pm) and from Gwangju (every 20 min. 6am–9:30pm).

WHERE TO STAY

There are plenty of places to sleep in Muju, most notably the Muju Resort Family Hotel or the more modest and economical Gukmin Hotel, owned by the same company and both at San 43-15 Simgok-li, Seolcheon-myeon, Muju-gun, Jeonbuk (☏ 063/320-7000; fax 063/320-7055; www.mujuresort.com). As at most resorts in South Korea, the rooms will be a little overpriced, especially during high season.

In Gunsan, there are two first-class tourist hotels, the Gunsan Tourist Hotel (☏ 063/443-0811, 462-1 Gyeongjang-dong, Gunsan-si, Jeollabuk-do), located near the bus station, and the more upscale Ritz Plaza Hotel (☏ 063/1588-4681, 1195-49 Beonji, Namun-dong, Gunsan-si, Jeollabuk-do).

Although Iksan’s tourist industry has not begun to bloom, the most upscale accommodation in the city is the Grand Plaza Tourist Hotel (☏ 063/843-7777 or 843-1714, 329-2 Pyeonghwa-dong, Iksan-si, Jeollabuk-do). Other lower-price options can be found in the same area, around the Iksan Express Bus Terminal and the train station.
There are a few motels in Gochang and an economical choice is Cheong Green Park Motel (063/561-3161 or 011/9627-6072, 512-12 Chiryong-li, Heungdeok-myeon, Gochang-gun, Jeollabuk-do), a love motel with doubles starting at W30,000.

WHERE TO DINE

Other than the bibimbap, the region is famous for its hanjeongshik, which comes with two soups, 13 banchan, four or five vegetable banchan, and a salted fish.

In Muju, try the Jeonju Hangukgwan, 418-19 Deogyu-li, Seolcheon-myeon, Muju-gun (063/322-3162), open daily from 7am to 11pm, or Seommaeul, 1357-1 Eupnae-li, Muju-eup, Muju-gun (063/322-2799), open daily from 9am to 10pm.

In Iksan, I found the Geumgang Shikdang, 568 Wungpo-li, Wungpo-myeon, Iksan-si (063/862-7000), to be quite good. They’re open daily from 9am to 9pm.

In Gunsan, if you like blue crabs, try Goongjeon Ggotgyejang, 23 beonji, Geumseon-li, Oksan-myeon, Gunsan-si (063/466-6677 or 8), with meals ranging from W20,000 for a raw crab meal to W45,000 for a steamed crab meal. They’re open daily from 10am to 10pm. If you’re looking for a cheaper meal in Gunsan, Jayu Sigan, 742-1 Jochon-dong, Gunsan-si (063/452-7522), has kal goksu (hand-cut noodles) starting at W3,000, daily 11am to 2am (they close the second Sun of every month).

Outside of the national and provincial parks, there are small restaurants at the entrances, where local owners serve dishes from the region. Ask the ajumma (married women) what the specialty of the region is, or you can’t go wrong ordering the hansik, which is short for hanjeongshik.

SHOPPING

Jeollabuk-do is known for its regional traditional crafts. The Iri Gems and Jewelry Center (063/835-8007) in Iksan is the only jewelry center in the country. Jewels are processed locally, set, and sold at the center daily, except on Tuesdays. Also in Iksan is the Jinan Ginseng Center (063/433-0292 or 3), which is well known throughout South Korea for its high-quality insam.

As far as traditional crafts are concerned, Gosu ceramics from Gochang and wooden-ware from Jangsu are representative Korean handiworks that make nice souvenirs. In Gunsan, try the Gunsan Korean Traditional Specialty Products Center (063/433-3113) for shopping. If you’re into musical instruments, check out the traditional drums made in Jangsu.

One of the administrative centers of the Baekje Kingdom, Gwangju is now South Korea’s sixth-largest city. It used to be the provincial capital until the office was moved to the southern village of Namak in 2005. Although it looks like any other South Korean city, its citizens have an independent spirit, exemplified by Gwangju’s importance in the country’s civic and human rights movements. The latest rebellion was May 18, 1980, and echoes can still be felt in the city.

Known as the economic and educational center for the region, it is famous for its Art Biennale, held every other year in the fall. If you happen to be in the city in October, don’t miss the Kimchi Festival, a wonderful introduction to Korea’s famed pickled dish.

Surrounded by the great agricultural plains of the region, the city nestles up against Mt. Mudeung. The old section of town follows the path of a stream, stretching northwest and including the main business and entertainment areas of the city. The best pedestrian street is Jungjang-no, where you’ll find shops, restaurants, cafes, bars, and theaters. Major businesses have their offices in Geumnan-no, which has an arcade of shops underneath the serious businesses. East of Geumnan-no (toward Jungjang-no) is an area called “Art Street” where you’ll find galleries, traditional teahouses, and art-supply stores.

GETTING THERE  The Gwangju Airport (☏ 062/940-0214) is located 11km (6¼ miles) west of the city center in the Gwangsan area of town. It is a domestic airport with flights 10 times a day to and from Seoul, 8 times a day to and from Jeju-do, and 11 times a week to and from Sanghae. Flights from Seoul take just under an hour. You can find out schedules from Asiana Airlines or Korean Air, both of which have offices in the city. Several local buses go from the airport into the city, daily from 5:30am to 10:30pm, costing W700. The airport limousine bus runs daily from 6:20am to 10:10pm and will set you back W1,000. There are, of course, plenty of taxis waiting outside the terminals. Deluxe taxi base fares start at W3,500 and regular taxi base fares start at W1,500, but I recommend taking a limousine bus, since you’re likely to encounter traffic due to construction of the city’s subway extension to the airport.

There are plenty of trains to and from Gwangju, since the city has two train stations. The Songjeongni Station (☏ 062/1544-7788) is not too far from the airport and the Gwangju Station (☏ 062/514-7788) is closer to the center of town. Trains from Seoul arrive at Yongsan Station and run several times daily. KTX trains are the fastest, run most frequently, and are the most expensive, taking 2½ to 3 hours. While the Saemaeul trains take about 4 hours, the Mugunghwa trains take about 4¼ hours.

Buses to and from Gwangju’s Express Bus Terminal (☏ 062/360-8114) run much more frequently than trains. Direct buses are available from Seoul, Dong-Seoul, Busan, Daegu, Daejeon, Ulsan, Incheon, Suwon, Wonju, and Jeonju.

GETTING AROUND  Gwangju has a small subway system, currently with only one line, which is pretty inexpensive, but doesn’t go to far-flung places. A one-way trip costs W1,000 (or W950 with a travel card) and W400 for children. An extension to the subway is currently underway. Trains start running at 5:30am daily, and run at 8- to 10-minute intervals, except during rush hours, when they run every 5 to 7 minutes.

You can get a Bitgoeul Card (☏ 062/226-5053 or 4), which is good for both buses and subways, at subway stations and Kwangju Bank. The base fee is W4,000 and you can recharge the card in any amount from W1,000 to W500,000. Not only does the card give you a discount on travel (a trip costs W950 for adults, W670 for teens and W300 for children), but it allows you a free transfer from subway to bus (or bus to different bus) within 30 minutes, and a free transfer from bus to subway within 1 hour.

Buses are an inexpensive and easy way to get around Gwangju. They run frequently and take you pretty much where you want to go. Bus fare starts at W1,000 adults, W700 for students, and W300 for children, and the easiest stop to find downtown is the one in front of the YMCA. For more information on bus routes, consult the tourist information center (see “Visitor Information,” below).

Taxis in Gwangju are fairly inexpensive, costing about W10,000 to get across town. Deluxe taxis (the black ones) cost more money, of course, but the drivers tend to drive a bit slower (and safer) and they speak a bit of English.

VISITOR INFORMATION  The Gwangju Tourist Information Center (☏ 062/525-9370) runs several kiosks throughout the city, including inside the airport in front of the arrival gates on the first floor (☎ 062/233-3399), open daily 8am to 8pm. There are also tourist information centers at the train station (☎ 062/522-5147), inside the bus station (☎ 062/365-8733), at Songjeongni Station Plaza (☎ 062/941-6301), and on the first floor of the YMCA (☎ 062/233-9370). The city’s website is http://eng.gjcity.net.

Jeungshimsa ★ Located in western Mudeungsan, this temple was founded by Julgam Seonsa during the Shilla Dynasty. Like many of Korea’s temples, it was destroyed during the Korean War and rebuilt. It houses the oldest structure in the area, the Obaek-jeon, which houses 500 Nahan statues and the 10 judges of the underworld. Just about a kilometer up from Jeungshimsa is Yaksasa, the only temple in the city that survived destruction during the Korean War.

Gwangju City Tour Bus
This tour bus run by the city of Gwangju is ridiculously cheap (only ￦1,000 per person without an English guide). However, the fee doesn’t include the cost of lunch (￦5,000 to ￦6,000) nor the entrance fees to museums and experiences along the route. The courses vary depending on the season and the day, but they run on Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays, except in the winter. The tours generally run from 9 or 9:30am to 6pm from Gwangju Station. Kwangju (Gwangju) Folk Museum  In the same park as the Gwangju National Museum (it’s a 15-min. walk between the two) is the Folk Museum. Most of the folk relics from the region are in the National Museum, but their collection is mostly geared toward dioramas, depicting lifestyle and folk traditions of the Honam region.

Maegok-dong, Buk-gu, Gwangju. ☎ 062/525-8633. Admission W500 adults, W300 youths, W200 children. Tues–Sun 9:30am–5pm. Closed days after national holidays. Take the bus to the National Museum and walk from there.

May 18th National Cemetery  Opened in 1997, the May 18th Cemetery was created to commemorate the civilian casualties from an uprising that occurred on May 18, 1980. Similar but smaller than the Tiananmen Square massacre, the Gwangju uprising was fueled by student protests to demand democracy. The official count was 259 dead, but many claim that there were hundreds more. A short walk through the memorial garden leads to the cemetery where the victims had initially been buried.

34 Wunjeong-dong, Buk-gu, Gwangju-si. No phone. Free admission. Mar–Oct daily 9am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. From Gwangju Express Bus Terminal, take bus no. 25-2 or 311, which takes 30 min., and runs every 40 min. Bus no. 518 also comes here. Parking available.

Mudeungsan (Mt. Mudeung) Provincial Park  Overlooking Gwangju city, this beautiful mountain is an easy climb. The highest peak is Cheonwang-bong with two other peaks. The best views are in the Wonhyo Valley (on the north) and Yeongchu Valley (on the south). At the base of the mountain, there are famous temples: Yaksa-am, Jeungshimsa, and Wonhyosa. The mountain is gorgeous all year-round, even in the white of winter. The mountain is famous for the tea that’s grown here at the Chunseol Tea Plantation as well as the mountain-grown watermelon that used to be a favorite gift for royalty. All of the dozen or so trails here have their own charm, but only a couple go through the forest.

Hwasun-gun, Damyang-gun, Jeollanam-do or Jisan-dong, Dong-gu, Gwangju-si. ☎ 062/625-0761 (Korean only). Free admission to the park. Wonhyosa (Wonhyo Temple)  Located near the entrance to the Mudeungsan Provincial Park, Wonhyosa was also founded by the famous Monk Wonhyo Daesa. Excavations show that the temple was built at the end of the Shilla Dynasty and renovated during the reign of King Chungsuk (1314–39) of the Goryeo Dynasty. Destroyed during the Korean War, it was rebuilt from the mid-1950s to the 1960s. Three of the main buildings were renovated in the 1980s. During the renovation some 100 relics of copper, gold, and clay were excavated from the Daewun-jeong site.

Inexpensive
Geumsujang Hotel ★ ★ Located within walking distance from the train station, this hotel has more ondol rooms than Western beds, but usually has Western options available. Really a bargain for a hotel of its class, the rooms are clean and spacious compared to most South Korean hotels in this price range. The restaurant and amenities are excellent for the price.

WHERE TO DINE
There are a couple of neighborhoods in the city with concentrations of restaurants specializing in certain dishes. There is Oritang (Duck Soup) Street on Yudong Street, which is the alley next to the Hyundai Department Store. Most restaurants are open daily 9am to 10pm (a few stay open into the wee hours). A whole duck costs around W28,000, or W20,000 for a half portion. Grilled duck (seasoned with salt and sesame oil) goes for about W32,000.

In Jisan-dong, there is a street called “The Street of Traditional Food” where there are dozens of restaurants specializing in bolibap (barley rice bowl). Located in the Jisan Resort near the Mudeungsanjang, the restaurants here serve bowls of barley rice with seasonal vegetables, spicy chili paste, and a spoonful of sesame oil. Supposedly health food, it’s also quite tasty and will cost you only about W5,000 for a bowl. Many restaurants in the area are open 24 hours.
If you’re into fresh seafood, look no further than Hwae Town (Raw Fish Town) at the Daein Market. Over a dozen raw-fish restaurants are lined up between the Gwangju Dongmun Bridge and the market in Gyeelim-dong. The Living Fish Center is open 24 hours, but the restaurants are open daily from 10am to midnight. You can get your fill of raw fish for about ₩30,000 to ₩80,000.

For the beef lovers among us, look no further than the area in front of the Gwangsan-gu Office in Songjeong-dong. Your nose will lead you to the collection of ddeok galbi joints in the alley there. Ddeok galbi, supposedly invented by a halmun (grandma) in Jeonju, is made by mincing beef rib and other beef parts, shaping it into a square like a Korean rice cake (ddeok), and roasting it on charcoal. An order of the delicious beef costs about ₩7,000, and all of the places on this street are excellent.

If you’re tired of Korean food and don’t mind splurging a bit, stop in at Pariparamong, 120-2 Shinan-dong, Buk-gu, Gwangju-si (☎ 062/528-2251). They specialize in high-end European cuisine. Although the food may not be “authentic,” you’ll get great service if you want a break from rice and noodles. Meat-course meals start at ₩38,000 and the house-special full course is ₩80,000.

SHOPPING

Gwangju is a traditional city in the middle of an agricultural area. Specialties of the area include handmade brushes (for calligraphy and ink painting), lacquerware, and tea grown in nearby Mudeungsan.

Stop by “Art Street,” which becomes the Gaemi Shijang (“Ant” Market) on weekends, where you’ll find art and antiques from the area. Even on weekdays this three-street area is the city’s cultural hub. Masters of pansori and gayageum (a traditional stringed instrument), as well as master calligraphers and potters, live and work in the area. Be sure to check out the beautiful musical instruments and the calligraphic works from the region. To reach “Art Street,” located behind the Jung-ang Elementary School, take bus no. 11, 17, 30, 222, or 333 to the Docheong bus stop and walk about 5 minutes.

5 DAMYANG

Located just 22km (14 miles) north of Gwangju is the center of the country’s bamboo cultivation. Filled with stunning bamboo forests, Damyang-gun (Damyang County) will be one of the most scenic stops on your South Korea journey. Although plastics have replaced the everyday use of many bamboo products, the area still attracts visitors who are drawn to the quiet, simple beauty of the bamboo groves. Other than its famous bamboo products, there are many pavilions and historical places where literary works have been created in centuries past. Once you visit the area, you’ll see why scholars and poets were inspired by the beauty of the surrounding mountains and the fields to write. If you’re here during the spring, don’t miss the Bamboo Festival.

GETTING THERE

There is no direct train to Damyang, but you can take a train to Gwangju and take either a bus or a taxi on to Damyang. Intercity buses that run to Damyang from the Gwangju Bus Terminal include nos. 301, 303, 311, and 312. Buses run daily from 6am to 10:30pm, every 10 minutes.
You can take a bus directly from Seoul to Damyang daily at either 10am or 4pm. The nearly 4-hour ride costs W14,900. Buses also run from Incheon to Damyang, lasting 4 hours and costing W17,900.

If you’re driving, take the Honam Expressway (road 25 from Seoul) and follow the signs to get off at Damyang. Don’t forget to drive through the Metasequoia Road, a small stretch of scenic road, lined on both sides by the tall trees creating a canopy of leaves in the spring and summer and dramatic snow-covered branches in the winter.

GETTING AROUND  Local buses will take you pretty much anywhere you want to go; the only problem is that they run pretty infrequently (about every hour or two) from select destinations. So make sure you know what time the return bus is so that you’re not stuck waiting an hour for the next bus.

If you’re not the adventurous type and prefer to take a tour, you can catch a bus tour (☎ 061/1588-8545) of Damyang at the Gwangju Station Plaza. The tour starts just before 9am on Saturdays and takes 6 1⁄2 hours, visiting 10 of Damyang’s best-known destinations. The tour costs W17,000 per person.

VISITOR INFORMATION  Contact the Damyang/Guncheong Culture and Tourism Department at ☎ 061/380-3150 or www.damyang.jeonnam.kr.

EXPLORING DAMYANG

Bamboo Theme Park (Daenamugol Tema Pakeuh) ★ The largest bamboo forest in Korea, it was designed by Shin Bok-jin, a former photographer. Taking more than 30 years to create, this bamboo garden is thick with the grass, which makes it especially nice to hear the rustling of the leaves when the wind passes through.
51 san, Bongseo-ri, Geumseong-myeon, Damyang-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☎ 061/383-9291. Admission W2,000 adults, W1,500 students, W1,000 children. Daily 9am–5pm. From the Damyang Bus Terminal, buses leave daily at 8am, 11am, 1:10pm, and 8pm, returning from the park 20 min. after departing. By car, from the Damyang IC, take road 24 toward Sunchang, turn right after Seokyeongyo bridge, and follow the signs to the park.

Byeongpungsan (Folding Screen Mountain) When you see the highest point in Damyang County, you’ll understand immediately how it got its name—the rock outline does indeed resemble a folding screen. Two lakes atop the mountain run down to provide water to the Yeongsan River. There is a nice hiking trail that goes through Mannamjae Pass, Mumyeongbong Peak, and Daebang Lake; it is about 9km (5 ½ miles) long and takes about 4 hours to complete.
Subuk-myeon, Damyang-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☎ 061/380-3150 or 4. Free admission. From the Damyang Bus Terminal, buses run here about 13 times a day. From Gwangju, take a bus to Subuk-myeon and catch a local bus to Byeongpungsan. The bus runs about every 40 min.

Chuwolsan (Mt. Chuwol) Located on the border of Bukheong-myeon, Sunchang-gun, and Yong-myeon, Damyang-gun, this is said to be one of the most beautiful mountains in Jeollanam-do. The strange rock formations jut out between green bushes and flowering shrubs, creating a wonderful backdrop for hiking.
Wolgye-li, Yong-myeon, Damyang-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☎ 061/382-2838. Free admission. From the Damyang local bus station, buses run about 4 times a day. By car, pass the Damyang IC, going toward Damyang, and cross the Dang-eup Hyanggyo, taking national road 29 at the Yongmyeong 3-way, follow the signs to Chuwolsan. The entrance to the hiking trail is right after the Chuwolsan tunnel.

Damyang Bamboo Museum This is the place to learn everything you’ve ever wanted to know (and some things you didn’t realize you wanted to know) about bamboo.
Created to promote the region’s prime agricultural product, it has more than 2,500 bamboo products on display. Items date back from the Joseon Dynasty to modern products made from that highly resilient and renewable resource. With over a 500-year history, the bamboo products of the region are made by skilled craftsmen, whose art has been handed down through the generations.

401-1, Cheonbyeon-li, Damyang-eup, Damyang-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☏ 061/380-3114 (Korean only).
Admission ₩1,000 and over, ₩700 teenagers, ₩500 ages 7–12, free for children 7 and under and seniors 65 and over. Daily 9am–6pm. From Gwangju, take the express bus going toward Damyang and get off at the Baekdong intersection. From Damyang, take local bus no. 311 or 322 and get off at the Baekdong intersection (and walk 1 min. from there). You have to catch the return bus on the main road (a 5-min. walk from the museum).

Jungnogwon  Take a walk through this natural bamboo forest for a relaxing time. Although the bamboo here has been around for centuries, they’ve added some cheesy things (like statues of fake pandas frolicking). The rustling of the bamboo and catching the light through the tall grasses is still a treat for the senses. Springtime is nice to visit, but summer is when the bamboo is at its greenest.

37-6 Hyanggyo-li, Damyang-eup, Damyang-gun. Admission ₩1,000 adults, ₩700 youth, ₩500 ages 7–12, free for children 7 and under and seniors 65 and over. Mar–Oct daily 9am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–6pm. Take bus no. 311 and get off at Gwanbangjeolim (a man-made forest). Cross the street, walk over a bridge, and then walk 5 min. to Jungnogwon. Alternatively, take a taxi from the Damyang Bus Station—it should cost under ₩2,500.

Soswaewon ★★★★★ Finds  This small private garden, whose name means “clean and refreshing,” was built by Yang San-bo (1503–57) when he decided to retire in nature. One of the representative gardens of the Joseon Dynasty, it was created in 1530 (the 25th year of King Jungjong). The original 10 buildings were designed so that the inhabitants could best see and hear nature around them. Only a few of them remain today. Still, it is a beautiful garden (sometimes compared to Thoreau’s Walden, though much smaller in scale) and you can see how someone was inspired to write and grow old there. The walk up to the pavilion lined with bamboo prepares you for the peaceful retreat.

123-oe Jigok-li, Nam-myeon, Damyang-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☏ 061/382-1071, Damyang/Guncheong Culture and Tourism Department. Admission ₩1,000 ages 19 and over, ₩700 teens, ₩500 ages 7–12, free for children 7 and under and seniors 65 and over. Daily roughly sunrise–sunset. From Gwangju Bus Station, take local bus no. 225 (it’s an hour ride and the bus runs every 40 min.). Driving from Seoul, take the Honam Expwy. (road 25) toward Damyang. From Damyang, take Hw. 12 to local road 887 and follow the signs.

WHERE TO STAY

The Damyang Resort Spa & Hotel, 399 Wonyeul-li, Geumseong-myeon, Damyang-gun (☏ 061/380-5000; fax 061/381-0606; www.damyangspa.com), is the only upscale accommodation available in the area and has standard rooms starting at ₩159,000, with 10% to 25% discounts offered on weekdays. It is on 13 hectares (32 acres) of land and has several spas, a swimming pool, and its own arboretum and pond. If you just want to visit the spa (☏ 061/380-5111) and swimming pool, it’ll cost ₩9,000.

There are plenty of love motels in the area, and most of them will set you back ₩30,000 to ₩35,000 for a double. Many of them won’t take reservations, but generally it isn’t difficult to get a room, even during high season in the summer. You just pay cash at the front desk when you check in and leave the key at the desk when you go. Just down the road from Soswaewon is the Lucky House, 55 Yeoncheon-li, Nam-myeon, Damyang-gun (☏ 061/382-3312), which has the characteristic circular beds.
If you’re looking for other budget accommodations, try the Park Village, 119-1 Unam-li, Daeduk-myeon, Damyang-gun (☎ 061/383-7800), which has rooms for W20,000 to W30,000 a night. Another inexpensive option is the Best Yeogwan, 52 Yeoncheon-li, Nam-myeon, Damyang-gun (☎ 061/383-8800), which also has rooms for W30,000 a night.

WHERE TO DINE

The specialty of the region is bamboo, of course. So, perhaps not surprisingly, you’ll find dishes made with bamboo shoots, bamboo tea, and daetong bap (rice steamed in the hollow of bamboo stalks). Some places add other grains, chestnuts, pine nuts—you name it—to the rice, and these additions mix well with the subtle flavor infused by steaming the rice in bamboo. Chefs also cook chicken in a bamboo pot (the chicken is mixed with rice, jujubes, and chestnuts). Another regional specialty is ddeok galbi, an especially tasty beef rib dish from the area.

There are many places that serve these regional specialties, but a couple of places of note include Songjukjeong (located in front of the Bamboo Museum; ☎ 061/381-3291), which I found to be slightly better than the Bakmulgwan Apjip (whose name means “house in front of the museum”; ☎ 061/381-1990), though the latter also serves good regional specialties. But my absolute favorite in town is Hyang-gyo Juknogwon ★★★, Hyang-gyo-li, Damyang-eup (☎ 061/381-9596), which serves bamboo-steamed rice with a wonderful array of banchan for the usual W10,000.

SHOPPING

As you’d figure, you can find all manners of bamboo products, from back scratchers to works of art created by master craftsmen. The Traditional Bamboo Market is held every 5 days or so (when the date ends with a 2 or 7) by the flats of the Baekchon River. The market starts around 7am and goes to midafternoon. If you miss those days, you can still find stores that sell bamboo wares any day of the week.

BOSEONG & YULPO

Just as Damyang is synonymous with bamboo, mention Boseong-gun (Boseong County) to any Korean and they’ll immediately think of green tea. The region reportedly produces nearly 70% of the country’s tea leaves.

This area is one of my favorite places in South Korea regardless of the season, but the best time to visit is spring, when there is a Dahyangje Festival (The Aroma of Tea Festival) in early May and when you can watch women harvest the bright green new leaves by hand.

Yulpo is a seaside town just down the mountain from the Boseong tea fields. There you will find hot springs where you can soak in green tea baths, enjoy foods made with green tea, and stay in an inexpensive yeogwan or minbak near the ocean. Yulpo beach is best visited in July or August, when the water is at its warmest.

GETTING THERE  There is no direct train to Boseong from Seoul, but you can take a train to Gwangju and then take a bus from the Gwangju Intercity Bus Terminal. Buses bound for Boseong come every 30 minutes, and the ride lasts about 90 minutes. From Boseong-eup, take a bus bound for Yulpo or the Daehan Daeup (Boseong Tea Plantation;
The Yulpo-bound buses run every 30 minutes, and it’s a 15-minute ride.

You can take a bus directly from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal to the Boseong Bus Terminal. Buses run twice a day from Seoul at 8:10am and 3:10pm and take just under 5 hours. Other than Seoul and Gwangju, you can also catch buses to Boseong from Suncheon, Yeosu, Busan, and Masan, which all run several times a day.

GETTING AROUND

There are local buses that run from the Boseong Bus Terminal. Most of them run on a 30- to 60-minute schedule, so plan accordingly. You can also catch taxis outside the bus terminal, or flag them down if you see them pass on the street.

EXPLORING BOSEONG & YULPO

Daehan Daeup (aka Boseong Dawon, Tea Plantation) ★★★

Established in 1939, this still-operating tea plantation is open to tourists year-round. The best time to come is early in the morning, so you can watch the fog lift from the lush green fields. It’s easier to take the paths to the side of the fields than the steep wooden stairs that go straight up, but it’s worth the climb, since the view of the fields from the top is pretty spectacular. You know these must be old fields since they’ve left a couple of family burial mounds undisturbed in the middle of the tea plants.

1291, Bongsan-li, Boseong-eup, Boseong-gun, Jeollanam-do. 061/852-4540. Admission W1,600 adults, W1,000 youth and seniors 65 and over. Daily 6am–5pm; 7am–4pm in winter. From Boseong, take the local bus bound for Yulpo and get off at Daehan Dawon. The bus runs every 30 min. and it’s a 15-min. ride. By car, take road 18 (past road 2) toward Yulpo and the plantation will be on your right side.

Daewonsa (Daewon Temple)

One of the oldest Buddhist temples in South Korea, it was originally founded during the Baekje era and rebuilt during the Shilla Dynasty. They offer a temple stay based on the theme “Let us prepare for death,” which has programs on death invocations and praying before death. The road to the temple is lined with cherry trees that bloom beautifully in the spring. The temple proper is located behind the Tibetan Museum (061/852-3038).

On Cheonbongsan (Mt. Cheonbong), Juscan-li, Bundoeok-myeon, Boseong-gun, Jeollanam-do. 061/852-1755. Admission W2,000 adults, W1,000 youth. Daily 10am–6pm, closes at 5pm in winter. From Boseong, take a local bus to Daewonsa. If you’re driving, take road 18 to road 15 (toward Gwangju) and follow the signs to the Daewon Temple.

Yulpo Haesu Nokchatahng

In Yulpo, you can visit the hot springs, where you can soak in a hot bath of seawater and green tea. Located on the seaside, down the mountain road from the tea plantations, the hot springs are small, but you get a view of the ocean while you soak. They have only four pools and one sauna, but they provide a unique, relaxing experience.

Dongyul-li, 678, Hoecheon-myeon, Boseong-gun, Jeollanam-do. 061/853-4566. Admission W5,000. From Boseong, take the local bus bound for Yulpo and get off at the nokchatahng (green tea bath), and walk on the road perpendicular to the main road. The bus runs every 20 min., takes 25 min., and costs W1,300. From the Daehan Dawon, the bus will cost W850.

There aren’t many places to stay in Boseong, since it is mainly an agricultural area. However, if you want to overnight in the region, you can stay at any number of minbak or yeogwan in the seaside town of Yulpo. Most places are similar and usually cost W25,000.
to ₩30,000, but be forewarned that prices can double during the popular summer season.

For a unique experience, you and your family can stay overnight at the Ungchi Vacation Farm, 1412-4 Gangsan-li, Ungchi-myeon, Boseong-gun, Jeollanam-do (☏ 063/852-6300), a sort-of government-run farm, located in the middle of a dense pine forest. They have a huge mushroom field, freshwater shrimp, chickens, and a deer “farm” within an enclosed forest.

WHERE TO DINE
This being the green tea region of the country, it stands to reason that you’ll find many dishes featuring it as a special ingredient. These include nokcha sujebi (green tea dough flake soup), nokcha naengmyeon (cold buckwheat noodles with green tea), and nokcha kalgooksu (handmade noodles with green tea).

Other than the two restaurants at the Daehan Dawon, you can try regional specialties at places in Yulpo, including Nokcha Hyangi (the name means “the fragrance of green tea”), 321-1 Yulpo-li, Hwacheon-myeon, Boseong-gun (☏ 061/852-9794). Located close to the Yulpo Nokchatahng, they serve all manner of green tea dishes (even a green tea pork cutlet, nokcha donkatsu), which start at ₩5,000.

There are some restaurants in Boseong, too, including Teukmi Gwan, located in front of the Boseong Hyang-gyo, 93-13 Boseong-li, Boseong-eup, Boseong-gun (☏ 061/852-4545). They specialize in pork and beef dishes, but you can also get regional green tea dishes, including their nokcha naengmyeon with bright green tea noodles, starting at ₩5,000. For a traditional hanjeongshik, Hangil-lo (☏ 061/853-0202 or 061/852-3281, 766-3 Boseong-li, Boseong-eup, Boseong-gun) is an economical option with meals at ₩9,000 to ₩10,000 or bowls of bibimbap or naengmyeon for only ₩5,000.

SHOPPING
Save room in your luggage for some green tea, since it’s a great thing to bring home with you, not just as a gift but also as a reminder of your trip. There are all sorts of tea products you can buy straight from the source, but I especially like the hyunmi nokcha (green tea with toasted brown rice), the naeng nokcha (tea bags for making iced green tea in cold water), and galu nokcha (green tea powder you can use to make all kinds of green tea dishes, like green tea ice cream or green tea cheesecake). Other than Daehan Dawon, there are dozens of other green tea plantations in Boseong that sell their green tea products directly.

For other items, try the traditional O-il Jang (“5-day” Markets) in Boseong County. The Boknae-myeon Shijang, 152-14 Boknae-li, Boseong-gun, and the Joseong-myeon Shijang are open on days that end in 3 or 8. The Boseung-eup Shijang, 2-1 Wonbong-li, Boseung-eup, Boseong-gun, and the Deungryang-myeon Shijang, 446 Yedang-li, Deukryang-myeon, are held on days that end in 2 or 7. The Beolgyeo-eup Shijang, 663-2 Hwaejeong-li, Beolgyeo-eup, Boseong-gun, and the Hwacheonmyeon Shijang in Hwacheon-myeon are open on days that end in 4 or 9.

7 YEOSU & SUNCHEON

Located on the southern coast of the peninsula, Yeosu is a pretty little port city. The town, whose name means “beautiful water,” is located on the western end of the Hallyeo Marine National Park. The city includes 317 tiny islands off the coast, most of them uninhabited. A couple of those islands, Odong-do and Dolsan-do, are now connected by bridges to the mainland. Yeosu was the naval command center for Admiral Yi Sun-shin, who invented the turtle ship (see box below). There is still a full-size replica of one of the iron-clad ships that helped defeat the Japanese navy. The city is busy getting ready to host the 2012 World Expo.

Sitting pretty on the upper end of the Yeosu peninsula, just 40 minutes from Yeosu, is Suncheon. Sometimes called the “City of Beautiful People,” it is the second-largest metropolis in Jeollanam-do. Nearby is Jogyesan Provincial Park, which surrounds Mt. Jogye. At its base are two Seon (Zen) Buddhist temples which have been instrumental in introducing and spreading this sect in Korea.

Both cities, currently experiencing rapid expansion and industrialization, are in danger of losing some of their original charm.

GETTING THERE
There are direct flights from Seoul’s Gimpo Airport to Yeosu Airport, 979 Sinpung-li, Yulchon-myeon, Yeosu-si (061/683-7997;) which is located equidistant to Yeosu-si and Suncheon. Asiana Airlines and Korean Airlines offer a total of eight flights daily to and from Gimpo Airport. Korean Airlines has one flight daily to and from Jeju-do. There are both airport limousine and local buses (no. 32, 33, 35, or 96) available to Yeosu city or Suncheon. You can catch the buses in front of the airport and local service starts at W1,000.

Yeosu is the last stop on the Jeolla train line, which starts in Iksan. There are 15 daily trains from Seoul to Suncheon with just as many trains from Suncheon to Yeosu. Trains run once a day to Mokpo, Iksan, and Jinju, and more frequently to Busan.

Buses from Seoul to Yeosu run daily every 40 minutes. Fares start at W28,600 and the ride lasts about 5½ hours. Daily buses from Busan run every 40 minutes and take about 3 hours. Daily buses from Gwangju run every 30 minutes and take about 2 hours. Express buses run from Daegu also, but from other cities, you’ll have to take regular intercity buses, which take a bit longer.

From the Yeosu Ferry Terminal ([061/663-0117]), you can take boats to and from islands, including Jeju-do, Geomun-do, Geumo-do, Sa-do, Yeon-do, Oenaro-do, and Cho-do.

If you’re driving, take either the Honam Expressway (road 25) or the Namhae Expressway to the Suncheon IC. To get to Yeosu from there, take national highway 17 and follow the signs to Yeosu.

Floating Turtles

Korea’s most famous naval commander is Admiral Yi Sun-shin, who led the navy against Japanese invasion during the wars of 1592 to 1598. Legend has it that the admiral, who was killed during a skirmish in 1598 at the age of 43, never lost a single one of the 23 battles he commanded. But he may be most famous for his use of turtle ships, boats armored with thick wood planking, iron shields, and spikes that the Korean navy used to inflict heavy damage on invading Japanese ships. Capable of ramming other ships without sustaining damage, these turtle ships are considered one of the triumphs of Korean ingenuity.
GETTING AROUND  Both Suncheon and Yeosu have good bus systems that will carry you around the cities, between them, and to sites on the outskirts of each. Most buses in Yeosu start from the bus terminal and run through downtown. In Suncheon, you can catch buses from (and between) both the bus terminal and the train station.

Suncheon offers a free city tour that starts from Suncheon Station. There are two routes, both taking about 7 hours (route 1 takes about a half-hour longer). Route 1 starts at 9:30am and goes to the Naganeupseong Folk Village, Songgwangsa, and Seonamsa. Route 2 stops at Suncheon Bay, Sangsa Dam, Swonamsa, and Naganeupseong Folk Village. You’ll be responsible for your own entrance fees, but you’ll get a group discount.

VISITOR INFORMATION  You can find a tourist information center on the first floor of the Yeosu Airport. There is also one at the entrance to Odongdo, one at Yeosu harbor, and one in front of the Suncheon Train Station. The Yeosu city website is http://yeosu.go.kr.

Fast Facts
In Yeosu, the post office is located on the city’s main street. You will find many banks and businesses around the old city center. Most banks are open from 9am to 4:30pm Monday to Friday.

In Suncheon, the post office is just a little way down from the train station. Most banks and businesses can be found in the business district between the bus terminal and the central market.

EXPLORING YEOSU & SUNCHEON
Note: The first Wednesday of every month is designated a “cultural day” in Suncheon City, and many attractions are free.

Dolmen Park (Hwasun Dolmen Site)  One of UNESCO’s World Heritage sites, the park has a collection of dolmen (megalithic stone tombs) and other relics uncovered from 49 villages in Suncheon, Boseong, and Hwasun counties. They were excavated before the Juam lake creation in 1984, when the land was submerged. The original excavated area included Paleolithic sites with a total of 140 dolmens from nine different clusters.

466 Usan-li, Songgwang-myeon, Suncheon-si.  Admission, 2,000 adults, 1,500 teens, 1,000 children. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. Take bus no. 63, which takes you right in front of Dolmen Park.

Hyangilam  Originally a small mountain-top hermitage, Hyangilam is now a turtle-themed temple complex with shrines and other associated buildings. There are 291 steps up to the temple, where you’ll get a spectacular view of the ocean. It is said that if you make a wish watching the sunrise from here on New Year’s morning, your wish will come true. Superstitions aside, the sunrise on any day is quite spectacular and arriving in time to catch it is a great way to beat the busloads of tourists who arrive in the afternoon. Don’t bother waiting for the free shuttle bus (especially when they take their lunch break noon–1pm), because it’s just a short ride to the foot of Impo Village, where you’ll have to pass a gauntlet of ajumma trying to sell you got (mustard) kimchi. You’ll have to walk the difficult part uphill anyway. There are plenty of small motels in the village below if you want to catch the sunrise in the morning. Unfortunately, the temple was burned by an arsonist at the end of 2009 and is currently being rebuilt.

Jukhak-li, Seungju-eup, Suncheon-si.  Admission, 2,000 adults, 1,500 teens, 1,000 children, free for kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct and Dec–Jan daily 6am–10pm; Nov and Feb daily 6am–9pm. Parking W2,500. From Yeosu Station, take bus no. 111 or 113. The ride lasts just over an hour.

Naganeupseong Folk Village ★ In ancient feudal fashion, this folk village consists of a “castle,” with about 100 families still living inside the fortress walls. It is a wonderful snapshot of how the people of the region used to live, with their thatched roofs and clay kitchens. If you happen to be here for the first full moon of the year, you’ll be able to see a traditional folk celebration. The rest of the year, be sure to make your way up to the castle to take in the view of the entire village.

Dongnae-li/Seonae-li/Namnae-li, Nakan-myeon, Suncheon-si. ☎ 061/286-5246. www.nagan.or.kr. Admission W2,000 adults, W1,500 teens, W1,000 children. Daily 9am–6pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Free parking. From either Suncheon Train Station or the bus terminal, take bus no. 63 or 68 (takes 50 min.).

Odong-do ★ Now connected by a bridge and a walkway, this rocky island is the perfect place for a leisurely stroll. The best time to go is right around sunset, just in time to see the island’s dancing fountains, whose lights change color and water moves to piped-in music. You’ll have a prime view of the lights from the city and from the ships at the port when you walk back into town after sundown. The island is famous for its camellias, which bloom from around mid-February to mid-March. Boat trips around the island start from the wharf. Some will cross Dolsan Bridge and Hang-il-am.

San 1-11, Sujeong-dong, Yeosu-si. Admission W1,600 adults, W700 youth, W500 children. Daily 6am–midnight in summer, until 11pm in winter. Lighthouse daily 9:30am–5pm. Bus nos. 2, 8, 10, 17, 18, 85-1, 101, 103, 107, and 555 all take you to the entrance. If you don’t want to walk the 15 min. to the island, you can take the little train, which costs W500 adults, W400 youth, W300 children. Parking W600/hr., W6,000 daily maximum.

Seonamsa (Seonam Temple) ★★ This beautiful temple is on the west side of Jogyesan in a natural setting. You’ll have to walk about 1km (¾ miles) from the mountain’s entrance to reach the temple, but the walk along the valley past two arched bridges (one is Seungseon Bridge, considered South Korea’s most beautiful stone bridge) is a pleasant one. If you have time, take the hiking course to the left of the temple. It takes you to Ma-aebuli, the 17m-tall (56-ft.) sculpture engraved on a rock.

Jukhak-li, Seungju-eup, Suncheon-si. ☎ 061/754-5247 (Korean). Admission W1,500 adults, W1,000 teens, W600 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Apr–Oct daily 8am–7pm; Nov–Mar daily 8:30am–6pm. From either the Suncheon Train Station or the bus terminal, take bus no. 1 (which runs every 30–35 min.). The ride takes 40 min.

Songgwangsa (Songgwang Temple) ★★★ Also located on the west side of Jogyesan, Songgwangsa is one of the Sambosachal (three temple treasures of Buddhism) in South Korea. Songgwangsa became the Seungbo (monk) temple, since so many high monks were produced here. In 1969, the temple was reorganized as a monastic center for Mahayana Buddhism with the establishment of an international meditation center so that non-Korean monks could also study and train here. One of the most impressive treasures housed in the temple is the Bisari Gusi, a rice storage container carved from a tree so large that it could hold enough rice for 4,000 monks. They have regular prayer services daily at 6:30pm (5pm in the winter), at lunch, and at dawn.

About an hour’s walk from the temple is a tiny hermitage called Cheongja-am. The best part of its site is the two 700-year-old juniper trees.
Suncheon Drama Film Set ★★★ Although this is an artificial film set (the largest in South Korea), the three villages in this open seteuh-jang provide a trip to South Korea’s not-so-distant past. One set is a re-creation of the streets of Suncheon from the 1950s. The ‘60s and ‘70s sets are a replica of Seoul’s daldogne, poor neighborhoods found in the less desirable uphill areas of the city. There’s a total of about 200 houses in all. If you’re a fan of Korean dramas, you may recognize some of the locations from shows like East of Eden.

Suncheon-man (Suncheon Bay) Bird Sanctuary A wide estuary and tidal flat-land, Suncheon Bay became an established natural eco-park in 2004, but has been overdeveloped in the past couple of years. Several endangered birds stop here along their migratory routes, when the place isn’t overrun by noisy families fishing for crabs. The best time to see our feathered friends is in the quiet winter months, but dress warmly since the ocean breezes can be quite chilly. You can take a boat around the area for W6,000 adults, W3,000 for kids. There is a separate admission for the Suncheon Bay Eco-Museum (☎ 061/749-3006 or -3007), which has displays largely dedicated to the hooded crane.

WHERE TO STAY
There are plenty of low-budget options in Suncheon, including hostels, love motels, yeogwan, and minbak. The largest groups of inexpensive love motels (about W30,000 for a standard room) are near the train station, in Yeonhyang-do, and in the Geumdang area. Tourist-class hotels can be found in the old downtown area of Jangcheon-dong. And, of course, there are the really cheap 24-hour saunas, called jjimjilbahng, where you can get a bath and sleep in group quarters for W10,000.

City Tourist Hotel, 22-24 Namnae-dong (☎ 061/753-4000; fax 061/753-3049), with rack rates starting at W65,000, has a bar, cafe, bakery, and a couple of restaurants, and it offers free shuttle service to and from the airport. Conveniently located and more upscale is the Suncheon Royal Hotel, 35-8 Jangcheon-dong (☎ 061/741-7000; fax 061/741-7810), with rates starting at W90,000 for a standard room. Located just a couple of blocks from the bus station, they also offer free airport shuttle service.

If you’re looking for other budget accommodations, in Yeosu there is a small cluster of love motels on the main street near the Expo center and the docks.

For more midrange accommodations near Odong-do, try the tourist-class Yeosu Chambord, 1054-1 Gonghwa-dong (☎ 061/662-6111; fax 061/662-1929), with rates starting at W70,000. Probably the best hotel in Yeosu is the Hotel Eastern Jewelry, 343 Chungmu-dong (☎ 061/663-2011; fax 061/664-2114), within walking distance of the train station. Rack rates start at W110,000.
WHERE TO DINE

Being a port town, it goes to figure that Yeosu is well known for its hwae. There is even a Hwae Town, where dozens of seafood restaurants line the streets, some of them starting as early as 5am.

Other than hwae, there are a plethora of seafood specialties in the region. You can indulge in everything from oysters to spicy eel and a variety of grilled fish. A concentration of good restaurants can be found in the Jung-ang-no area. For spicy octopus, try Myeongsin Nakji, 441 Gyeo-dong, Yeosu-si (☏ 061/662-7056), which has spicy sautéed octopus for W8,000 or (for the adventurous eater), live octopus for W15,000, from 10am to 10pm daily. For overall fresh seafood, there are Baekcheon Shikdang (☏ 061/662-3717), Ihak Shikdang (☏ 061/662-1661), and Geumcheon Shikdang (☏ 061/662-4883).

Suncheon is also well known for its seafood. There are good Korean restaurants concentrated in the Jung-ang-dong (old downtown) area and some traditional restaurants in between newer American fast-food joints in Yeonhyang-dong (the new downtown) area. For just plain good Korean food, try Seonamsa Saejogye Sikdang (☏ 061/751-9121). Seomjingang Garden (☏ 061/782-3712) serves delicious local seafood.

If you happen to be in the area in mid- to late October, don’t miss my favorite food festival in South Korea, the Namdo Food Festival (☏ 061/286-5240; www.namdofood.or.kr), held at the Naganeupseong Folk Village, featuring regional foods from 22 cities across the area.

SHOPPING

Being a midsize South Korean city, Suncheon has no shortage of shopping available. Your best bet is to head over to Jung-ang-dong, to Hwanggumno Fashion Street near the medical rotary, where you’ll find a number of boutique stores lining the alleyways. There is also an underground shopping center and several open-air markets, including the Jung-ang Market and the Bukbu Shijang in Maegok-dong. There are also the usual huge departments stores and discount marts, including Home Plus (in Jorye-dong; take bus no. 50, 55, 56, 58, or 59), E-Mart (in Doekam-dong, about 10 min. from the train station), and Homever (which is located about a block from the E-Mart). For higher-end fashions, try New Core Outlet in Jorye-dong (take city bus no. 50, 55, 58, or 59). There is also a Toy Department Store (Jangnamgan Baehwajeom) in Jorae-dong.

Yeosu, though smaller, has some shopping options as well. In Jung-ang-dong, there is a shopping area akin to Seoul’s Myeongdong, mostly for fashion and jewelry. There is an E-Mart right across the street from the bus terminal, open until midnight. For more upscale shopping, try either the JU Department Store in Munsu-dong or the Lotte Marts in either Guk-dong or Seowon-dong.

SUNCHEON & YEOSU AFTER DARK

In Yeosu, there are a couple of bars in Yeoseo-dong (the new downtown area of town, not too far from the bus terminal). One that is popular with expats is the cafe/restaurant/bar Yellow Monkey, 229-6 Yeoseo-dong (☏ 061/653-6633). There are a number of bars, hof (German-style beer bars), and noraebang. Another bar popular with expats is the more upscale, franchise beer joint Wa Bar (☏ 061/654-2229), just a block away with a newer location in Hak-dong (☏ 061/682-0281).

In Suncheon, there are a couple of places popular with English speakers, including Elvis, 1593-4 Jorye-dong (on the second floor), and Julianna’s, a Western restaurant/bar (where you can get burgers and chicken wings) in Yeonhyang-dong (Suncheon’s new downtown area).

8 THE REST OF JEOLLANAM-DO

Jeollanam-do (old spelling: “Cheollanamdo”) is in the southwestern part of the Korean peninsula. Its name is often abbreviated Jeonnam. The provincial capital is now Namak in Muan, moved from Gwangju in 2005. Other than the cities highlighted above, the region has some wonderful places to visit, which haven’t been discovered even by the majority of vacationing South Koreans. The province is well known for its traditional culture, including the art of pansori, which originated here.

With its interesting coastline, over 2,000 islands, and mountainous national parks, there are small pockets to be discovered all along Jeollanam-do’s shoreline. Inland, there are historic ceramic kilns, ancient mountain temples, and hidden valleys to be found. Of course, the region is also well known for its fresh seafood and other dishes. So be sure to savor the flavors of each area as you visit.

GETTING THERE & AROUND

The province has one “international” airport at Gwangju and a domestic airport in Muan (which replaced the airports in Mokpo and is hoping to eventually replace the Gwangju airport as well).

The KTX high-speed rail offers service to Jangwong, Songjeongni, Naju, Mokpo, and Gwangju. The Korean National Railroad (Korail) has a number of lines that run through the province and end at Mokpo, Yeosu, or Suncheon.

Buses connect Jeollanam-do to all parts of the country. Major cities are accessible from Seoul and from each other’s local bus terminals. Buses bound for tourist destinations are best reached from local bus terminals in the nearest city or town.

VISITOR INFORMATION

The Jeollanam-do Tourist Information Center is at ☎ 062/940-0214, with the official county site at http://english.jeonnam.go.kr.

MOKPO

Mokpo is Jeollanam’s major port city and was first opened for trade in 1897. A rail line from Seoul connected it to the capital region in 1913, after which it became a vitally important harbor, especially during the time when Japan colonized Korea. Vestiges of Japanese influence can be seen all over town, even with the overwhelming presence of celebrated Naval Admiral Yi everywhere as well.

Mokpo used to be one of the largest cities in the country before the 1970s. Since then, it has seen many of its population migrate to more industrial cities. That doesn’t mean it’s a quiet town, however. The city has plenty of residents and has taken great pains in the past few years to attract more visitors. The high-speed KTX train from Seoul has contributed to the tourist boom to the city.

Since they closed the Mokpo airport in 2009, the closest airport is in Muan. Between the train station and the ferry terminal is the old town, which is always bustling with activity. The Mokpo Tourist Information Center (☎ 061/244-0939), 10 Hang-dong, Mokpo-si, is located at the Yeogek Terminal. It’s open daily 9am to 10pm year-round. There is also another tourist info center at Yeongsan Lake (☎ 061/270-8279), 300 Jukgyo-dong, Mokpo-si.
Exploring Mokpo

Conveniently, many of the city's top tourist sites are in the Gatbawi Culture District, which is home to the Namnong Memorial Hall, National Maritime Museum, the Mokpo Natural History Museum, the Hall of Folk Culture, and the Culture and Art Center. Plan to spend about 3 hours exploring this area.

Culture and Art Hall
Built in 1997, the four-story center stands overlooking the ocean. It has six exhibition halls and a theater that seats almost 700 people. They don’t have any permanent displays here, but have revolving exhibits and occasional folk and international performances. The building is located in front of the Hall of Folk Culture, which shows traditional arts and culture.

12 Yongdang-dong Mokpo-si, Jeollanam-do.

Mokpo Natural History Museum ★★ (Kids)
This two-story building has the usual suspects you would expect from a natural history museum. There are dinosaur bones, exhibits of mammals and birds found on the peninsula, over 900,000 species of insects, various plant specimens, whale skeletons, and a small pool where visitors can observe and even touch live crawfish, snails, minnows, and other creatures from South Korea's freshwater streams.

9-28 Yonghae-dong, Mokpo-si, Jeollanam-do.
061/274-3655. Admission W3,000 adults, W2,000 teens, W1,000 children 7–12, W500 children 5–6, free for seniors 65 and over and children 4 and under. Tues–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 9am–7pm (until 6pm Nov–Feb); ticket sales end 1 hr. before closing. Closed Jan 1. From the Mokpo Bus Terminal, take bus no. 6 or 14 and get off at Yonghae-dong Geumho Apts; from there, transfer to bus no. 7 and get off at the Gatbawi Cultural Center. From the Mokpo Train Station, take bus no. 1 and get off at the Mokpo MBC Studio; from there, transfer to bus no. 7 and get off at the Gatbawi Cultural Center. It’s a 15- to 20-min. ride from the bus terminal by taxi or car. The museum is next to the tourist information booth and the Munhwa (Art) Center (Culture and Art Hall).

Namnong Memorial Hall ★
This private museum was created as a memorial to Namnong Heo-Geon, who was a master of the Korean version of Namjonghwa (Chinese painting of the Southern School). The collection includes masterpieces of five generations of their family as well as about 400 works from other great painters of the Joseon period.

91 Yonghah-dong Mokpo-si, Jeollanam-do.
061/276-0313. Admission W1,000 adults, W500 youth, free for children 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Dec daily 9am–5pm. (See directions for the Natural History Museum above.)

National Maritime Museum
This is the only maritime museum in the country and is dedicated to preserving and presenting Korea's rich maritime history. The first exhibit hall displays over 3,000 excavated relics from the “Underwater Cultural Heritage of Wando” and a replica wooden ship from the Goryeo Dynasty. The second hall is the “Underwater Cultural Heritage from Shinan” exhibit and includes over 22,000 items from Chinese ships of the 14th century. The third hall shows the “Life of a Korean Fishing Village,” with displays of traditional and modern fishing methods. The last hall shows models of “Korean Traditional Boats,” although modern ships, like oil tankers, are also included here.

Nearby is one of Mokpo’s Eight Scenic Locations, the Gatbawi. Not one but a pair of rocks east of the city's main harbor, the name comes from their shape, which resembles... a satgat (a conical bamboo rain hat). The two boulders are Jeonbawi and Satgabawi. According to a local story, the larger one is called the “father rock” while the smaller is the “son rock.”

8 Yonghae-dong, Mokpo-si, Jeollanam-do. ☏ 061/270-2000. www.seamuse.go.kr. Admission ₩600 adults, ₩300 youth, free for children 6 and under. Tues–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat–Sun and holidays 9am–7pm (until 6pm Nov–Feb). From the Mokpo Bus Terminal, take bus no. 6 or 14 and get off at Yonghae-dong Geumho Apts.; from there, transfer to bus no. 7 and get off at the Gatbawi Cultural Center. From the Mokpo Train Station, take bus no. 1 and get off at the Mokpo MBC Studio; from there, transfer to bus no. 7 and get off at the Gatbawi Cultural Center. It’s a 15–20 min. ride from the bus terminal by taxi or car.

Yudalsan ★ The representative mountain in town is Yudalsan; there is a park atop its peak. From here, you can get a nice view of downtown Mokpo and the harbor, as well as the many small islands that dot the archipelago of Dadohae Maritime National Park. There are five pavilions, a memorial tower, a statue of Admiral Yi, and a monument to the royal dead on its slopes.

Under Ideungbawi, there is also an outdoor sculpture park with more than 100 sculptures by the Korean Sculpture Association. On the right side of the parking lot is Dalseong Park, which includes an orchid garden. Dalseongsa is located in Jukgyo-dong on the southeastern section of the mountain. A newer temple, it was built by Dae Heungsa in 1915.

The best time of year to visit is from late March to early April, when the forsythias are in bloom, painting the entire hillside with its yellow flowers.

Free admission. From the Mokpo Train Station, it’s a 20-min. walk. Walk past the Kookmin Bank, and past the Cheukhudong Church up Mt. Yudal. You can also catch a bus to Yudalsan from the Mokpo Bus Terminal. By car, exit the Mokpo tollgate and take the road that leads to Mokpo Port, following the signs to Yudalsan.

Where to Stay
There is no shortage of cheap places to sleep in Mokpo, and most of the inexpensive motels and yeogwan are located between the train station and the ferry terminal. There is also a grouping of yeogwan and love motels near the bus terminal.

The most highly regarded hotel in the city is the Shinan Beach Hotel ★★ (☎ 061/243-3399; http://shinanbeachhotel.com), which looks down over Yudal Beach. It has old-fashioned charm with Western-style or traditional ondol rooms starting at ₩99,500. It’s ₩20,000 more for an ocean view. Suites start at a rack rate of ₩270,000.

An economical place is the third-class Baekje Tourist Hotel, 10-13, Sangnak-dong 1-ga (☎ 061/242-4411). Although its facilities are a bit dated, the staff is accommodating and the rooms are good for the price.

Where to Dine
Being a seaside city, Mokpo is well known for its seafood. There is no shortage of hwae joints in town. One of the specialties of the region is seballakji (baby octopus), which is sometimes served as hwae or cooked in a sweet and spicy dish made with gochujang. Another specialty is galchi jolim (stewed hairtail fish), for which there is even the Mokpo Hairtail Festival in September.

The best bargain for hwae in the city is at the Bukhang Raw Fish Center, a live fish market that attracts locals and tourists, who haggle for the best deals on their dinner. Hwae stands and restaurants around here have the lowest prices in town.

For restaurants and upscale cafes, head over to Carless Street, about a 5-minute walk from Mokpo Station. Here you can get a taste of an unusual local coffee (you’ll wonder why it’s so rich until you find out that they’ve put a raw egg yolk in it) or just grab an inexpensive bowl of noodles.

If you’re tired of Korean food, head on over to the Gatbawi area in Hadang, where you’ll find a handful of bistros serving Western food.

Shopping

Although you won’t be packing a live fish in your luggage, it’s worth taking a look at the Mokpo Seafood Market. Stands that sell the region’s popular delicacy, fermented skate, are everywhere, but you can also find dried fish, the catch of the day, and a lot of other wiggly, shiny, wonderful things from the sea. It’s open daily from 7am to 8pm.

About a 5-minute walk from Mokpo Station is Carless Street, where the alleyways are closed to vehicular traffic, and you can view your share of boutique shops and open stalls, selling everything from clothing to manufactured goods from the region.

For large-scale discount and department stores, Mokpo has more offerings than most other cities in the Jeollanam-do region. The most popular is the E-Mart in Okam-dong, open daily from 10am to 11pm. You can get there by taking bus no. 10, 13, 20, 105, 109, 112, 119, or 300. They are also building a new mega–shopping center called Formo (short for “For Mokpo”), which will be a megaplex with stores, amusement centers, and a large movie theater.

Mokpo After Dark

Being a small city, Mokpo doesn’t have a really hopping nightlife. There are the usual cocktail bars and clubs where you can get overpriced drinks and have to pay a premium for the anju (drinking snacks). The hofs are your best bet for inexpensive drinks.

One of the main attractions of Mokpo when the sun goes down is Luminarie, “The Avenue of Light.” Located not far from the shops and restaurants of Carless Street, the street of brightly lit arches starts from in front of the Mokpo Cinema down about 500m (1,640 ft.). There are some late-night cafe and bar options on Carless Street as well. Not to be overshadowed, Yudalsan is also brightly lit at night, almost like an amusement park.

MUAN

Muan is the name of the county (gun) and town (eup) in Jeollanam-do. Best known for its White Lotus Festival (E 061/450-5319) in early August, the Muan Hoesan Baekryeonji ★★★ (E 061/285-1323) is considered the largest habitat for the rare flower in all of Asia. Entrance to the gardens is ₩3,000 for adults, ₩2,000 for children.

Muan is hoping for some revitalization with the opening of the Muan Airport (E 061/455-2114; http://muan.airport.co.kr). Currently, there are domestic flights daily to and from Gimpo Airport, serviced by Korean Airlines (E 061/985-2000) and Asiana Airlines (E 061/453-8811), and there are plans to add flights to and from Jeju-do as well. There will be international flights to and from Shanghai, Beijing, Shenyang, and Guangzhou in China, serviced by China Eastern Airlines (E 061/453-8301), Shenzhen Airlines (E 02/766-9933), and China Southern Airlines (E 062/1588-9503). Avis (E 061/452-2873) provides car-rental service. There are four limousine buses daily to and from Gwangju and Mokpo airports, costing ₩4,800 for a 60-minute ride.

To get to Muan by train, you can catch a train bound for Mokpo from Seoul Station and get off at Illo Station. From there, take local bus no. 800 to Muan. To get to Muan via bus, take a bus from Seoul’s Gangnam Express Bus Terminal (Seoul subway line 3, exit 1) to Muan. There are two buses a day, 8:30am and 4:20pm, and it’s about a 4-hour ride from Seoul.
JIRISAN NATIONAL PARK

South Korea's first national park, Jirisan (tourist info ☎️ 061/780-2224) was established in 1967. Its highest peak, Cheonwangbong, is 1,915m (6,283 ft.) high, but several other peaks climb over 1,000m (3,281 ft.). Home to numerous historical sites and temples, the mountain range is surrounded by five cities/counties—Namwon, Gurye, Hadong, Sanchezong, and Hamyang (the latter three are in Gyeongsang-do).

Climbing Jirisan for more than a day without a guide is not recommended, since the national park does not have many amenities and there are many precipitous cliffs. There are, however, less difficult trails for nonprofessional climbers.

The easiest trail is the Nogodan course, which starts from the Seongsamjae rest area. The full course takes about 3 hours, but note that climbing the last 15 minutes to the top requires a reservation at least 3 days in advance. Since the National Parks' reservation site is only in Korean, call the Korea Travel Phone (☎️ 1330) and ask the agent to make a reservation for you online at www.knps.or.kr. You won't be able to make a reservation, but you can access some information on their English site, http://english.knps.or.kr. Access to the summit is open only four times a day (10:30am, 1pm, 2:30pm, and 4pm). Take a bus from the Gurye Bus Terminal to Seongsamjae. Buses take only 30 minutes but leave every 2 hours, so plan accordingly.

The most scenic course also starts at the Seongsamjae rest area, but takes you up to Hwaeomsa. You can also take a 3-hour hike up a side road from Nogodan ridge. If you prefer a shorter walk, there is a promenade near the entrance to the path to Nogodan from the temple Hwaeomsa. The promenade takes about an hour round-trip. Additional information about Hwaeomsa is in the "Temples in Jirisan" section, below.

The third, longer trail is best experienced when the leaves show off their autumn colors. The trail starts at Jikjeon Village and goes to Piagol, where a Maple Tree Autumn Foliage Festival is held every year in late October or early November. You’ll pass the largest temple in Jirisan, Yeongoksa, at the entrance to Piagol Valley. The full course to the top takes 7 hours round-trip, but you can stop midway and return if you don’t have that much time. Take a bus to Piagol from Gurye to the last stop. The buses run every hour and take just under an hour.

Admission to Jirisan costs ₩1,600 adults, ₩600 teens, ₩300 children, free for children 6 and under and seniors 65 and over. A bit more information about Jirisan is in the Hadong section of the Gyeongsang-do chapter.

Temples in Jirisan

The following are temples on the Jeollanam-do side of Jirisan (except Silsangsa, which is detailed in the Namwon section earlier in this chapter). The temples on the Gyeongsang province are detailed in chapter 9.

Hwaeomsa ★★★ One of South Korea’s top 10 temples, Hwaeomsa (pronounced “Hwa-umsa”) sits on the southwestern part of Jirisan (Mt. Jiri) in the middle of Nogodan peak. Built during the Shilla Dynasty (during the fifth year of King Jinheung), the original structure was burned down during the Japanese Invasion in 1592. The temple was rebuilt during the Joseon Dynasty. In front of the main Buddha hall are a stone lantern and lion pagoda, both of which date back to A.D. 670.

12 Hwangjeon-li, Masan-myeon, Gurye-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☎️ 061/782-7600 (Korean). www.hwaeomsa.org (Korean). Admission ₩3,800 ages 20 and over, ₩1,800 ages 14–19, ₩1,200 ages 7–13, free for seniors 65 and over and children 6 and under. Daily 7am–7pm. From Gwangju Bus Station, take local bus no. 225 (it’s an hour ride and the bus runs every 40 min.). From the Gurye Bus Terminal, take a city bus to Hwaeomsa Temple (the buses run every 20 min.). Then walk 15 min. to the temple.
If you look at the top of Osan, you’ll see the main hall of this small hermitage perched on precarious columns, hugging the side of the mountain. It’s worth a trip up the steep incline just for the dramatic scenery below (they provide shuttle buses from the bottom). Originally called Osansa, it was founded during the Baekje Period by Monk Wonhyo (the same guy who founded Hwaeomsa and Yeongoksa). The hermitage fell into ruin during the Joseon Dynasty, but was renovated in the 1980s. A steep, rocky stairwell leads up to the Sanshin-gak area and the entrance to the Doseon-gul (cave), where Wonhyo supposedly meditated.

Yeongoksa ★ The largest temple in the national park, Yeongoksa lies in the Piagol valley of Jirisan. Like its neighbor Hwaeomsa, the temple has a rich history and is surrounded by picturesque scenery. The first temple built in Jirisan, it was founded by Yeongijosa in 543 (during the fourth year of the Shilla King Jinheung). Like most temples, it was destroyed during the Imjin War, but was rebuilt in 1627. Unfortunately, it didn’t escape the Korean war unscathed, either, so it was rebuilt in 1981.

EXPLORING JEOLLANAM-DO

Jeollanam-do has beautiful scenery and some of the most interesting temples in the country. Many of them are outside the major cities, but they’re worth a side trip.

Bulgapsa South of the small town of Yeonggwang is a small temple at the base of Bulgapsan. Originally built in A.D. 384, it has been rebuilt several times since. The main hall was built sometime in the 1700s and is in a period of restoration. The temple is known for its beautiful surroundings.

8 Moak-li, Bulgap-myeon, Yeonggwang-gun, Jeollanam-do. © 061/352-8097 (Korean). www.bulgapsa.org. Admission $2,500 adults, $1,500 teens, $1,000 children, free for children 4 and under. Daily 8am–6pm. From Gwangju city’s Gwangcheon terminal, take bus no. 218 or 318 (a 1 1/2-hr. ride).

Gangjin Celadon Museum Celadon, Korea’s ethereal green porcelain, has been produced in the Gangjin region for centuries and this museum is the only one dedicated to the Goryeo celadon, made here from the 9th to the 14th century. There are 188 celadon kilns in the area (about half of celadon kilns for the entire country). The museum has a couple of skillfully created pieces. Unfortunately, the signage is only in Korean upstairs, with just a few English labels downstairs. More fun is the hands-on experiential zone, where you can make mosaics from broken celadon, spin a masterpiece on a potter’s wheel, or have your hand- and footprints baked in celadon.

127 Sadang-li, Daegu-myeon, Gangjin-gun, Jeollanam-do. © 061/430-3718 (Korean). Admission $2,000 adults, $1,000 teens, $500 children. Daily 8am–6pm. From the Gangjin Gunnae Terminal, take a local bus headed for Malyang and get off at the museum. The bus runs every 30 min. 6am–8:40pm, and the ride lasts about 30 min. There are also buses to Gangjin from Seoul, Gunsan, Gwangju, and Mokpo.

Seomjingahn Train Village ★★ Kids A re-created train station made from refurbished wood, they’ve also renovated an old train to take you on a scenic, 25-minute ride (50 min. round-trip) along the Seomjin River to Gajeong Station, where you can go for a lovely hike in the woods and take the train back. For serious train enthusiasts, they even offer an overnight in a converted train “pension” ★★★ (© 061/362-5600; www.gstrain.co.kr). Rooms range from $70,000 to $150,000, depending on the size, and going up $20,000 on weekends. Reservations are recommended for both the train ride and the pension stay.

770-5, Ojili, Ogok-myeon, Gokseong-gun, Jeollanam-do. © 061/360-8309, www.gstrain.co.kr. Rides are $5,000–$6,000 adults, $4,500–$5,500 children round-trip ($500 less one-way). Daily 9am–6pm, but trains run 9:30am, 11:30am, 1:30pm, 2:30pm, and 5:30pm. It’s best to take a taxi from the Gokseong bus or terminal.

Unjusa ★★★ Kids Located in Hwasun County, south of Gwangju, no one knows the actual founder of the temple, but it is believed that the temple was constructed during the Shilla Dynasty. Although the temple structure itself is not very impressive, the site is renowned for its pagodas and unusual Buddha statues. Of the original 1,000 pagodas and 1,000 Buddhas, only 18 pagodas and 70 statues remain. The most interesting stone statues are located to the left of the road leading up to the temple, especially the two lying figures, the only ones in the country.

Yonggang-ri/Daecheo-li, Doam-myeon, Hwasun-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☎️ 061/374-0660 (Korean). www.unjusa.org (Korean). Admission ₩2,500 adults, ₩1,500 teens, ₩1,000 children, free for children 4 and under. Dadohae Maritime National Park

Dadohae-haesang (http://dadohae.knps.or.kr) includes Shinan-gun, Jindo-gun, and Goheung-gun of Yeosu-si and Wan-do-gun in Jeollanam-do. When it was designated as a national park in 1981, it became the largest one in the country. The entire park includes 1,596 islands and small islets (many of them uninhabited) with gorgeous views and varying landscapes. The eight sections of the park include the southern shore of Dolsan-do and a group of small islands to the south; the southern tip of the Goseun peninsula and Naro-do; Geomun-do, Baek-do, and their associated islands south of the Goheung peninsula; the southern tip of Wan-do, Shinji-do, and the islands to the south; the southern part of Jin-do and islands to its south; parts of Docho-do, Bigeum-do, and Eui-do; Heuksan-do and Hong-do and islands farther west; and the remote Manjae-do.

The most popular site in the park is the temple Hyangilam, which sits majestically upon a cliff on the southern tip of Dolsan-do. Since the maritime park consists of islands near and far, the best way to see parts of it is by ferry. Passenger boats are available to various islands from harbors on Mokpo, Yeosu, and Wan-do. Since some of the islands are remote, plan ahead and check the weather beforehand.

Islands

Bigeum-do ★★ Finds The quiet beauty of this island is still preserved since it’s still largely undiscovered by tourists. The island is the leading producer of naturally, sun-dried salt, and the salt fields are indeed a sight to behold. The island’s two beaches, Hanuneom and Wonpyeong, have facilities that are open mid-July to mid-August.

Bigeum-myeon, Shinan-gun, Jeollanam-do. ☎️ 061/243-2171 (Korean). From Mokpo Ferry Terminal 1, take the fast-sailing liner bound for Bigeum-do at 7:50am (the ride lasts about 50 min.). Alternatively, from Mokpo Ferry Terminal 2, take one of the ferries bound for Gasan or Sudae. They run at 7am, 1pm, and 3pm and the ride lasts 2 hr. to 2 hr. 20 min.

Bogil-do Finds About an hour south of Wan-do by boat lies this quiet little island, which was made popular by artist Yun Seon-Do, who lived here for 10 years. While the 17th-century scholar Song Si-Yeol was on his way to exile in Jeju-do, he was forced to dock on the island due to bad weather. He carved some of his poetry on a rock, which remains today. Although the island has some beautiful sandy beaches, it’s best known for its pebble beach, Yesong-li, and the sound the rounded stones make as the waves lap the shore. The best times to visit is May to June or August to September. Taxis and various minbak are available on the island.
Hong-do ★★★ The name Hong-do means “red island,” but no one knows for sure if the name came from the island’s red soil or because it seems to turn red when the sun sets over the ocean. Whatever the case, the island is an ecological wonder and is now part of Dadohae Maritime National Park. Because of its protected status, visitors are allowed to go only to villages and designated tourist areas. Hong-do is composed of about 20 small islets, but the main island (which is said to be shaped like an ant) has two villages, one in the pinched waist center and one on the northern section. The middle village is where the wharf is and several minbak are clustered around it. A sightseeing ferry around the island takes about 2½ hours. If you have the time, visit nearby Heuksan-do, which is about 30 minutes away by boat. Some parts of the island (like the lighthouse) are accessible only by boat. You can rent a private boat for about W60,000 round-trip. Ask at the ferry information booth on the wharf.

Jeollanam-do. ☎ 061/246-2244 (Korean). Admission W1,000 adults, W500 teens, W300 children. From Mokpo Express Ferry Terminal (☎ 061/240-6060), take the ferry to Hong-do. Sightseeing ferries run about every 2 hr. 7am–5pm (depending on the weather). Starting at W15,000, the ferry lasts 2½ hr.

Jeong-do Since 2008, the Tapyeong Salt Farm and its associated Salt Museum have been an ecological tourist location. Residents of Jeung-do have been producing salt since the 1950s (about 15,000 tons per year), but it hasn’t been open to visitors until recently. Watching the workers harvest the salt from the ocean flats is a sight to see, but visitors can participate in the salt-collecting process, including turning the water wheels and raking the salt. At the end of the experience, they’ll give you a kilogram to take home with you (you can also buy their special local sea salt flavored with dry seaweed). Be sure to book your salt harvesting experience at least 3 days in advance. It costs W7,000 for adults, W6,000 for those 17 and under.

Tip: Pack a picnic lunch or dinner if you plan to visit on a Sunday, since most of the restaurants on the island will be closed as the Christian residents take the day off.

Jin-do The third-largest island in South Korea, Jin-do includes an archipelago of about 250 smaller islands. The Jin-do itself is known for two things: its native dogs, the jindokgae, and what’s called the “Moses Miracle of Jin-do.” Near the end of the second month of the lunar calendar to the middle of the sixth month, a “road” appears in the middle of the ocean when the water recedes for about an hour a day. You should call the Korea Travel Phone (☎ 1330) to see when peak times are before you visit. There are taxis and buses available on Jin-do.

Wan-do The largest island in Jeollanam-do, Wan-do is also the name of the county that encompasses it. The county includes 203 islands, 143 of which are uninhabited. Wan-do is famous for Cheonghaejin, a military complex created by Jang Bogo, a famous general from the Shilla Kingdom. The island has wonderful hiking trails and the Wan-do Botanical Garden. A bridge connects Wan-do to Sinchi-do.

Wan-do-gun, Jeollanam-do. You can drive to Wan-do from Haenam, or take an intercity bus from Gwangju, Busan, Mokpo, Gangjin, or Yeongam. Express buses are also available from Seoul. You can also take a ferry to and from Jeju-do.

NAEJANGSAN NATIONAL PARK

Declared a national park in 1971, Naejangsan is one of the smallest in the country. But that doesn't mean you should skip it—quite the contrary. Naejang, which means “many secrets,” is beautiful, particularly in the fall, thanks to the 13 varieties of maple that grow here. Its highest peak, Shinseon-bong, is relatively low, but still rugged for its height (only 763m/2,503 ft.). The valley and ridge trails aren’t very strenuous, but those up the sides of the hills are very steep. That’s why they've built a cable car that goes up to the peak from near the entrance to Naejangsa. If you follow the valley to the left from the ticket booth, you'll see Dodeok Falls. Geumseong Falls is farther along the valley, if you take the path to the left.

If you pass the wooden path lined with white oaks and maples in the southern part of the park, you’ll arrive at the entrance to Baegyangsa ★★★, 26, Yaksu-li, Bukha-myeon, Jangseong-gun, Jeollanam-do (also spelled “Baekyangsa”). Built in 632 during the reign of King Mu of the Baekje Kingdom, its name was changed by Monk Chongtosa then again during the reign of Joseon King Sonjo. The word baegyang means “white sheep,” based on a legend that one of the temple’s monks, Hwanyangsonsa, was delivering a sermon and a white sheep came down from the mountain to listen. At the end of the ceremony, the sheep appeared again in the monk’s dream and told him that he was turned into a sheep after having committed a crime in heaven. The next day, the sheep was found dead in the temple. Admission is ₩2,800 for adults, ₩1,300 for teens, ₩700 for children, free for those 65 and over and kids 6 and under. The temple is open daily March through October 9am to 6pm (until 5pm Nov–Feb). From the Gwangju Bus Terminal, buses run daily 6am to 7:50pm every hour, and the ride takes about an hour.

The other major temple in the mountains is farther away, but the scenic walk makes it worth the extra effort. When you enter the ticket booth, walk by the marketplace and shops, and you’ll come to a small valley (Naejang-cheon). Walk on this trail for 30 minutes and you will come to a lotus pond with a garden house in the middle, the Uhwajeong. After you pass it, you’ll come to a cable car—walk beyond that, through a canopy of maple trees, and you’ll reach the main entrance to Naejangsa ★★. Originally called Yeonggeunjosa, the temple was built by Monk Yeongeun-josa in 636 during the Baekje Period. It was destroyed and rebuilt many times, but it was completely destroyed during the Korean War and rebuilt in its current incarnation in the 1970s. Admission is ₩3,200 for adults, ₩1,300 for teens, ₩700 for children, free for those 65 and over and kids 6 and under. The temple is open daily from sunrise to sunset. From the Jeong-eup Bus Terminal take bus no. 171 to Naejangsan National Park. The bus runs every 20 minutes or so. Entrance to the park is ₩1,600 adults, ₩600 teens, ₩300 children.

WOLCHULSAN NATIONAL PARK

Wolchulsan’s granite peaks rise dramatically from the flat fields surrounding it. It has a narrow and deep valley and interesting trails. The highest peak in the area is Cheong-hwang-bong, which climbs up 809m (2,654 ft.). To the south lies Muwisa and to the west is the quiet Dogapsa, a temple built by the Shilla monk Doseonguksa that was burned during the Korean War and has yet to be restored. Still, it’s worth a quick visit.
The main entrance is the oldest structure still standing in the temple complex (built in 1493). The newer main hall has newly painted pillars and walls. During its repair in 1960, an ink sign was discovered, shedding light on the temple’s history. It read that the temple was built by the great Monk Sinmi in the fourth year of King Seonjong. Monk Sinmi was highly trusted by King Sejo and probably received compensation from him to build the temple. During the height of its glory, 730 monks lived on-site.

About 500m (1,640 ft.) down from the top of Gujeong-bong is the Maae Yeorae Jwasang ★★, a stone Buddha carved in the rock there. Some say that his eyes are looking at the west sea, but to me, they look closed as if he is meditating or sleeping. The Maae Buddha is said to have been created in the year a.d. 9.

Though most people take day trips to the area, there are camping facilities available in the Cheonghwangsa area. There is also a minbak area in the Gyeongpodae district.

Just outside of the national park is Gurim Village ★★★, which has an ancient history (as you can see by the prehistoric relics found here). It is starting to get more popular because of its 4th- and 5th-century kilns and its Yeongnam Pottery Culture Center ★★, 354 Seogurim-li, Gunseo-myeon, Yeongnam-gun, Jeollanam-do (☏ 061/470-2566), which is on the site of the original kilns where they first produced glazed pottery during the Unified Shilla Period. Not only do they house artifacts which have been excavated from the area, but they also create replicas of historic works for sale. The center is open daily 9am to 6pm throughout the year; admission is W1,600 adults, W600 teens, W300 children.

DURYUNSAN PROVINCIAL PARK

Located on the southernmost point on the Korean peninsula, Duryunsan with its beautiful scenery is home to many temples and ruins. Its dense forest of subtropical plants leads up to a rocky peak, with views of the surrounding sea and nearby islands.

The most famous temple here is Daedunsa ★★★ (aka Daheungsas), built during the fifth year of Baekje King Jinheng’s reign by Monk Ado. Situated on the northern slope of Mt. Duryun, the temple is the headquarters of the Jogye Buddhist order. There is a free shuttle that will take you up the first 2km (1¼ miles) of the mountain, if you don’t want to make the full hike. The long walk through the forest to the temple entrance is supposed to be part of the meditation process of visiting. You will be rewarded with the view of 1,000 smiling Buddha statues inside the Cheonbuljeon. The temple is open daily from 9am to 6pm throughout the year, and admission is W2,500 for adults, W1,500 for teens, W1,000 for children, free for kids 6 and under and seniors 65 and up. In a separate area to the right is Pyochungsa, a shrine built in 1788. It is dedicated to the warrior monk generals who fought the invading Japanese army during the Imjin Waeran. There are many trails spidering out from Daedunsa, but the most popular goes up to its associated hermitage Bungmireuk-am, where a majestic stone Buddha has been sculpted from the flat rock face (now housed inside a wooden hall). It’s worth the 45-minute climb up for the wonderful views.

There are seven buses daily from Seoul to Haenam, starting at 7:30am with the last bus at 5:55pm. The 5½-hour ride costs W17,800 (W26,500 for deluxe buses). From the Haenam Intercity Bus Terminal take a bus bound for Daedunsa. Buses run every 30 minutes daily, 7:30am to 8pm.

The Haenam Cable Car ★★ (☏ 061/534-8992; 138-6 Gurim-li, Samseon-myeon, Haenam-gun; http://haenamcablecar.com) starts at the village and goes to the tallest peak of Duryunsan. The 10-minute ride, which affords a spectacular view of the surrounding scenery, costs ₩8,000 adults, ₩5,000 children ages 3 to 12. The cable car runs daily 8am to 6pm (until 5pm Dec–Mar).

WHERE TO STAY
Outside the major cities and tourist areas, you can find low-cost sleeping quarters in minbak everywhere. In low season, costs range from ₩20,000 to ₩30,000, but prices can double during popular summer months. Although you can make reservations in advance for some of the upper-end resorts and condos, you’ll sometimes get better rates if you just walk in, especially on weekdays and during the low season.

In the Haenam area, there are plenty of low- to midpriced motels. Some love motels like the Sapphire Motel (☎ 061/537-4825) and Motel Tiffany (☎ 061/537-0080) offer Internet access. The Ddang-ggeut Tema Pakeuh (☎ 061/535-1000), shaped like one of General Yi’s turtle ships, is a midpriced option in the area. Double/single rooms cost ₩48,000 on weekdays.

For a taste of history, stay at the Yuseongwan ★★, 799 Gurim-li, Samsan-myeon, Haenam-gun (☎ 061/534-2959), which has been a yeogwan since 1914, but is located in a 400-year-old home. Room rates range from ₩30,000 to ₩120,000, depending on the size of the room. There are no televisions or refrigerators, but there are shared shower facilities and a generous, home-cooked meal for only ₩7,000 for breakfast (₩10,000 for dinner).

Most first-class hotels can be found in the Jirisan area or near beaches. One nice place is the Jirisan (Chirisan) Plaza Hotel, 32-1 Hwangjun-li, Masan-myeon, Gurye-gun (☎ 061/782-2171; fax 061/782-3675), with rack rates starting at ₩180,000. A slightly better bargain with nicer rooms is the Jirisan Swiss Tourist Hotel, 427-1 Hwangjeon-li, Masan-myeon, Gurye-gun (☎ 061/783-0156 or 7; fax 061/782-1571).

A nice option in Mokpo is the Shinan Beach Hotel, 440-4 Jukyong-dong, Mokpo-si (☎ 061/243-3399; fax 061/243-0030), with rates starting at ₩100,000 for a standard room. It’s an additional ₩20,000 for an ocean view. Probably the best in town is the Hyundai Mokpo, 1237-6 Sampo-li, Samho-eup, Youngam-gun (☎ 061/463-2233; fax 061/469-5000), with rates starting at ₩157,000 for a standard room. Another newer hotel is the Shangria Beach Hotel, 1144-7 Sangdong, Mokpo-si (☎ 061/285-0100; fax 061/285-0101).

Another good option is the Wolchulsan Hot Springs Tourist Hotel, 6-10 Haechang-li, Gunsan-myeon, Yeongam-gun (☎ 061/473-6311), with rack rates starting at ₩120,000.

An excellent place to stay in Jeung-do is the El Dorado Resort ★★★, 233-42 Ujeon-li, Jeungdo-myeon, Shinan-gun, Jeollanam-do (☎ 061/260-3300; www.eldoradoresort.co.kr). This upscale set of “villas” is set on a small peninsula, so every one of them has an ocean view. Breakfast and use of their seawater spa and sauna are included in the room rates, which range from ₩206,000 for a double to ₩631,000 for a six-person villa. Sign up on their website and get a discount.

WHERE TO DINE
Being on the South Seas with miles of coastline, the Jeollanam-do region is well known for its fresh and varied seafood. Although outsiders make fun of their provincial ways, everyone agrees that this region’s food is the best. The residents are known to be generous people by the sheer number of banchan laid out for the simplest of meals.
In the Jirisan area, try the local blue crab at Gokseong Saesugung Garden, 937 Hahan-li, Jukgok-myeon, Gokseong-gun (☎ 061/363-4633), on the way to Seomjingahng from Namwon.

Worth a special trip is the chargrilled beef at Gwangyang Hanguk Shikdang, 206-1 Eupnaeri, Gwangyang-eup, Gwangyang-si (☎ 061/762-9292), which serves a recipe handed down through three generations.

In Haenam, try Haenam Jeonju Shikdang, 140-5 Gurim-li, Samsan-myeon, Haenam-gun (☎ 061/532-7696), which serves regional specialties, including sanchae bangjeongbik (mountain vegetable traditional meal), for ₩50,000 for four people. If you’re hankering for haemultang (spicy seafood hot pot), look no further than Haenam Yonggung Haemultang, 18-4 Pyeongdong-li, Haenam-eup, Haenam-gun (☎ 061/535-5161), which specializes in the dish.

For down-home-style food, try the oxtail soup made by the halmuhni at Naju Nampyeong Sikdang, 13 Geumgye-dong, Naju (☎ 061/334-4682). This milky white soup is served with only two side dishes, traditional kimchi and ggakdugi (daikon kimchi). Naju Yeongsan Hong-ga, 270-4 Yeongsan-dong, Naju (☎ 061/332-0309), is well known for their various hong-uh (skate) dishes. Another good restaurant is Yeongsan Hong-uh, 272-2 beonji, Yeongsan-dong, Naju (☎ 061/334-0305), which offers hong-uh kimchi, hong-uh noodles, and all things skate.
Located in the southeastern part of the peninsula, Gyeongsang-do is home to the former capital of the Shilla Dynasty, Gyeongju, as well as the country's largest port, Busan (see chapter 10).

Most of this region is made up of the large basin created by the Nakdong River and is surrounded by the Sobaek and Tae-baek mountain ranges. The topography of the land has created distinct and isolated subcultures, causing the people to have a strong dialect and giving rise to customs unique to the area. Although you'll notice regional accents outside of Seoul, even native South Koreans grouse that Gyeongsang-do dialects are difficult to understand.

Rapid industrialization has laid waste to some of the quiet scenic beauty of the region, but pockets of a slower time still remain. You can experience the largest and best-preserved traditional village in the country in Andong. Of course, you don't want to miss Gyeongju, with its historic temples and small-town charm. For really old relics (as in prehistoric), make a special trip to Goseong to see the former nesting grounds of dinosaurs and the footprints they've left on the rocky coast. While you're in the area, take a detour to Tongyeong, which I think is the most dramatically beautiful coastal town in the country. Other points along the southern coast are also great for seeing oceanside scenery and some of the natural beauty of South Korea.

Summers are hot and humid. Areas inland, isolated by the mountains, are hotter than the rest of the peninsula, so the expansive sandy beaches in the southern and eastern coasts draw thousands of people escaping the heat of the cities. The region is famous for its salty and spicy cooking. Although the dishes are not as refined as those from Jeolla-do or the Seoul area, the ingredients are always fresh and seafood abounds from both the southern and eastern coasts.

1 GYEONGJU

Once the capital of the Shilla Kingdom, today Gyeongju is the historical center of South Korea. The Shilla Kingdom came into power around A.D. 57 and conquered the Baekje and Goguryeo kingdoms in 660 and 668, respectively, ruling as the Unified Shilla Kingdom until 935, when the Goryeo Dynasty took power. A large number of sites from that time remain in the city today.

Located in the southeasternmost corner of the Gyeongsangbuk-do, Gyeongju is a medium-size city by South Korean standards. The city benefits from tourism and the proximity to its industrial neighbor Ulsan to the south. The entire city's historic areas were designated a World Heritage site by UNESCO in 2000. Three major sites make up the Gyeongju Historic Areas: the Namsan belt, which includes the ruins of 122 temples, 53 stone statues, and 64 pagodas; the Wolseong Belt, which includes the palace ruins of Wolseong and the Gyerim woodland; and the Tumuli Park Belt, which includes the three groups of royal tombs. The UNESCO designation also covers nearby Hywangnyeongsan (Hywangnyeong Temple) and Sanseong Fortress.
GETTING THERE  The nearest airport to Gyeongju is Ulsan Airport; Busan’s Gimhae Airport is a bit farther away, but it offers far more flights. Intercity buses from Gimhae leave for Gyeongju Terminal daily every hour, 8:30am to 8:20pm, and cost W9,000. Daily buses from Ulsan Airport run four times a day and cost W4,500—they take about an hour.

Gyeongju lies at the junction of two minor train lines run by the Korean National Railroad (Korail). The Jung-ang line has Mugunghwa trains that start from Seoul and end at Gyeongju twice a day during the week, costing anywhere from W17,900 to W22,700. Saemaeul trains from Seoul run three times a day during the week, take 4½ hours, and cost W33,700 to W38,800. There are more services on weekends and holidays. If you want to take the KTX express train, you have to transfer to a Mugunghwa or Saemaeul train at Dongdaegu, but you’ll cut your travel time by about 80 minutes. The Daegu-Busan section of the KTX line is slated to be completed by 2010. When it does, the train will stop at Singyeongju Station, in Geoncheon-eup south of Gyeongju’s city center.

You can also take an express bus from Seoul, which will take about 4 hours and 20 minutes. Regular express buses run daily from 6:05am to 8:05pm, costing W17,500. Woo-deung express buses (deluxe buses) run daily every 30 to 40 minutes from 6:05am to 8:05pm and cost W26,000. The Gyeongju Express Bus Terminal and Intercity Bus Terminal are right next to each other. Buses from Seoul go to the express terminal, as well as those to and from Busan, Daegu, and Daejeon. Also, buses from Busan, Daegu, Gangneung, Uljin, and Ulsan end up at the intercity terminal.

The bus terminals and train stations are within 20 minutes’ walking distance from each other.

GETTING AROUND  There are local buses available that can get you to all of the sites listed below, but if you have limited time, you may want to hire a taxi for a day. Taxis can always be found outside the bus and train terminals. Negotiate with your driver, but rates are usually around W80,000 to W100,000 for 6 to 8 hours. The driver likely won’t speak much English, but he will know exactly where to take you, and you’ll be able to hit the historic sites quickly and easily. Regular taxi fares start at W1,500.

If you have time to spare and want to be environmentally savvy, you can rent a bicycle for a day or two. There are some biking trails and biking on the regular roads is pretty safe (which is definitely not the case in major cities like Busan or Seoul). Some trails around Namsan are rather hilly, but there are new bike paths in the flood plains, which are fairly flat. Be aware that the bike paths are side by side with walking paths and are marked in red, while the pedestrian paths are marked in green. One such trail connects the central business district with the university area (a shortcut compared to the regular road). Another links the city to the Bomun Lake Resort area. As you go farther toward Bulguksa, the road gets hillier and more degraded thanks to increased traffic from visitors. Bicycle rentals are widely available (there are almost a dozen in the downtown area alone, including a few each near the train station, the bus terminal, and Bomun Lake), and rates are pretty much the same wherever you go. Rentals cost W5,000 per hour or W10,000 to W12,000 per day.

Gyeongju is also not a bad city for walking. Most locations of interest are located close to one another, making it relatively easy to explore on foot. For those sites outside of town, it’s best to take a local bus or a taxi.
VISITOR INFORMATION  Gyeongju’s tourist information offices (☎ 054/779-6087; daily 8:30am–6pm) are located in key places throughout town. They provide both brochures and maps in English and have friendly staff who speak English well. The booths are located in front of Gyeongju Train Station (☎ 054/772-3843), in front of the bus terminal (☎ 054/772-9289), at the entrance to the Bulguksa parking lot (☎ 054/746-4747), and next to the Chosun Hotel in Bomun Lake Resort (☎ 054/745-0753). The city’s official website is http://eguide.gj.go.kr.

Cheonna Tours (☎ 054/743-6001) offers two different daily tours of the city, one from 8:30am to 4pm and another from 10am to 6pm. Tours start at the city’s express bus terminal and go to the Bomun Lake Resort, Bulguksa, the Folk Craft Village, the Bunhwangsaji temple site, the Tomb of General Kim Yu-sin, the Poseokjeong Pavilion, the Gyeongju National Museum, Anapji Pond, the Cheomseongdae Observatory, and the Cheonmachong Tomb, ending at the bus terminal. The tour costs W12,000, or W10,000 for students.

Fast Facts  Gyeongju

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs There are a handful of banks in the downtown area of Gyeongju, including the Daegu Bank at 222-5 Seobu-dong, Gyeongju-si. Most banks are open Monday to Friday 9:30am to 4:30pm. Most major hotels will also exchange foreign currency and traveler’s checks.

Internet Access Most large hotels, and even a couple of the lower-priced motels and youth hostels, offer Internet access. If you don’t have your own computer, your cheapest option is the PC baehngs in town. Just look for the letters pc—you’ll find most of these Internet “rooms” above restaurants, on the second or third floors.

Post Office The post office (open weekdays 9am–5pm) is located on the south side of Hwarang-no, about a block west of the train station.

EXPLORING GYEONGJU

Although it is possible to see most of the major sites in a day, I recommend spending at least a night in Gyeongju so that you have time to properly explore the historic district (the entire city is pretty much one giant national treasure). Sites in the downtown area can be easily explored on foot or by bicycle in 1 day, but should you wish to see sites in Namsan nearby, you’ll want to take a bus or taxi. The famous Bulguk Temple and the Seokguram Grotto are a bit far from the central city area as well, but easily accessible by bus or taxi. Not all of these sites have phones, so if you need additional information, call the Gyeongju Tourism Office at (☎ 054/779-6087).

Anapji Pond ★ This pond was created during the Shilla Dynasty and was within the walls of the royal palace. A 1974 excavation revealed three underwater mounds, indicating that the pond used to have artificial islands within it. At the same time, the pond draining revealed several artifacts, including gold and bronze bowls, gilt ornaments, various jewelry, door knockers, and mirrors, which are now on display in the Gyeongju National Museum. The stately but diminutive Imhae Jeonji, the crown prince’s palace, was historically the most important building on the property and has been restored along with other structures, while the restoration of other building sites should be completed by the end of 2010. Tip: For a romantic view of the site, visit after dark, when the buildings, pond, and surrounding forests are lit up.

26 Inwang-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. ☏ 054/779-6391. Admission W1,000 adults, W500 teens, W400 children. Daily 9am–10pm. Parking W1,000 for small cars, W2,000 for large. From the bus terminal or across the street from the train station, take bus no. 11, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, or 609 to the Gyeongju National Museum stop and walk 3 min. A 10-min. walk from Cheomseongdae.

Bulguksa (Bulguk Temple) ★★★ Perhaps the most famous of South Korea’s many temples (thanks to its location and its UNESCO World Heritage designation), Bulguksa was originally built in 528 during the Shilla Dynasty. King Kim Daeseong had it erected in honor of his parents. Although the original wooden structures have all since been rebuilt (between 1604 and 1805, the temple was renovated no fewer than 40 times), the stone bridges, the stairways, and the pagodas that make up the rest of the complex are original. The most recent rebuilding and repairs were done in 1973 and the buildings do show signs of wear and tear. Still, the complex and its structures are impressive in design and are a striking testament to the skill of the architects. Try to visit the site in the early morning or late afternoon to avoid the hordes of schoolchildren who get bused in for field trips.

15 Jinhyeon-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. ☏ 054/746-4747. www.bulguksa.or.kr. Admission W4,000 adults, W3,000 teens, W2,000 children, free for kids 6 and under. Nov–Feb daily 7am–5pm; Mar–Oct daily 7am–6pm. Take bus no. 10 or 11 from either the bus terminals or the train station. It’s a 40-min. ride. A taxi will take 20–25 min. from the downtown area.

Bunhwangsa (Bunhwang Temple) One of the most important temples during the Shilla Dynasty, it was established by Queen Seon-deok during her reign (A.D. 632–637). A haven for artists and monks, many Buddhist paintings and sculptures were created here. Unfortunately, most of them were destroyed during the Imjin Waeran (1592–98). Although Bunhwangsa is only a shadow of its former self, it is still famous for its Mojeon Stone Pagoda, which has only three of its original nine stories still intact.

313 Guhwang-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. ☏ 054/742-9922. Admission W4,000 adults, W3,000 teens, W2,000 children, free for kids 6 and under. Nov–Feb daily 8:30am–6pm; Mar–Oct daily 8am–6:30pm. Across the street from the bus terminal, take bus no. 10, 11, 15, 17, 18, or 277 (takes 15 min.). A taxi will take 20–25 min. from the downtown area.

Cheomseongdae Observatory You may be surprised to see that this, the oldest existing astronomical observatory in all of Asia, is not on the top of a mountain—it’s actually on flat land. The 362 stones that make up the 27-level structure represent each day of the lunar year. Built during the reign of Shilla Queen Seon-deok (A.D. 632–647), it was used for observing the stars in order to forecast the weather.

Daereung-won Tumuli Park (Royal Burial Grounds) ★★★ If you see only one tomb park in South Korea, this should be it. Tumuli Park contains 23 of the over 200 royal tombs found in Gyeongju. At times, the sense of history, and of secrets buried along with the royals, is almost palpable in the quiet between the large grass-covered mounds. Of the various round burial mounds only the 13m-high (43-ft.) Cheonma-chong (Heavenly Horse) Tomb has been excavated (in 1974). The excavation of this tomb, presumed to be from the 5th century, revealed over 10,000 treasures inside, including a well-preserved ceremonial saddle piece made of painted bark stitched with leather. The tomb is named after a painting of a galloping horse—the first pre–Shilla Dynasty painting found in Korea—and is open for you to see how it was constructed and how the artifacts were arranged. Another tomb, the Hwangnamdaechong, is the largest in the area (23m/75 ft. high and 123m/403 ft. long) and was the tomb of a king and queen, likely King Soji and his wife, who were buried around A.D. 500. With over 30,000 relics, like earrings, glass beads, and a magnificent crown of gold, archaeologists are able to get a sense of the extravagant lifestyles of the Shilla royalty. Of interesting note is that the queen's tomb is more elaborately decorated than the king's.

6-1 Hwangnam-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. No phone. Admission W1,500 adults, W700 teens, W600 children, free for kids 6 and under. Summer daily 9am–6pm; winter daily 9am–5pm. Bus no. 10, 11, or 70 from the bus terminal brings you to the front of Daereung-won Tumuli Park. Bus no. 42 goes to the back entrance.

Gyeongju National Museum ★ Outside of Seoul, this museum has the largest collection of Shilla Dynasty relics in South Korea (and the world, for that matter). Of over 100,000 pieces in its possession, only about 3,000 artifacts are on view, but the displays are well lit and presented in four exhibit halls. Still, the explanatory text could use some punching up. Highlights include the gold crowns and other treasures excavated from nearby tombs and King Seong-deok's famous bell. Buddhist sculptures make up a majority of the stone pieces in the collection.

76 Inwang-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. (054/740-7500. http://gyeongju.museum.go.kr. Admission W400 ages 25 and over, W200 ages 24 and under. Mar Tues–Wed 9am–6pm, Thurs–Sun 9am–9pm; Apr–June Tues–Wed 9am–6pm, Thurs–Fri 9am–9pm, Sat–Sun 9am–7pm; July–Feb Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. Closed Jan 1. From the bus terminal or across the street from the train station, take bus no. 11, 601, 602, 603, 605, 606, 607, 608, or 609 to museum.

Poseokjeong Pavilion Poseokjeong, which loosely translated means “where rocks are placed in the shape of an abalone,” was given its name because the shape of the rock grooves here look like an abalone shell. Originally the site of a royal Shilla villa, all that remains today is a stone waterway. It was said that the Shilla kings came here with their nobles and officials. They would place their wine glasses in the water and recite a poem before their glasses floated to the top. This is also the site where Shilla King Gyeong-ae was attacked by Gyeonhwon of the Later Baekje (HuBaekje) Kingdom. It is said that Gyeong-ae killed himself rather than surrender, and thus the pavilion is the symbol of the fall of the Shilla Dynasty.

454-3 Bae-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. (054/772-3632 (Korean). Admission W500 adults, W300 teens, W200 kids, free for children 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. Parking W1,000 for small cars, W2,000 for large. Buses run to Poseokjeong from either the train or bus station, about every 20 min. It’s a 5-min. walk from the stop.

Seokbinggo Ice Storage House This humble stone structure was a way for ancient Koreans to store ice before the invention of refrigeration. The floor, walls, and ceiling are made of granite, with half of the structure underground. When you walk inside on a warm day, you’ll feel the significant temperature drop. It is assumed that the Seokbinggo was created almost 1,500 years ago to provide ice for the upper class.

449-1 Inwang-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. (054/779-6396 (Korean). Free admission. Daily 24 hr. Take bus no. 10, 11, 600, or 608 across from the train station or in front of the bus terminals.

Seokguram Seokgul (Seokguram Grotto) ★★★ At the same time that Bulguksa was being constructed in honor of his parents, King Kim Daeseong had Seokguram built in honor of his parents from a former life (Buddhists believe in reincarnation). The grotto is an artificial stone structure made of granite, located on the eastern peak of Mt. Toham. Inside the domed main hall is one of the world's finest shrines to the Buddha, surrounded by bodhisattvas and his guardians. Unfortunately, there is now a recently added wooden entrance to the grotto, covering its original, unassuming stone facade. Still, it can't detract entirely from the place's beauty. Seokguram joined Bulguksa on UNESCO's World Heritage list in 1995.

Tohamsan, Jinhyeon-dong 999, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. Tel. 054/746-9933. www.sukgulam.org. Admission 4,000 adults, 3,000 teens, 2,000 children, free for kids 6 and under. Nov–Feb 7am–5pm; Mar–Oct 7am–6pm. Take bus no. 11, 12, 101, or 102 from either the bus terminals or the train station (takes 35 min.). A taxi will take 10 min. from the downtown area. Driving from Gyeongju-si, follow the directions to Bulguksa, above, and continue up the hilly road following the signs to Seokguram.

AROUND GYEONGJU

Bomun Lake Resort If you're tired of all the ancient sites, head over to this tourist complex, located about 6km (3 3⁄4 miles) east of the downtown area, for a little mindless fun. There are five super-deluxe hotels, a casino, a ferry port, Yukbu Village (a recreation of a traditional village), the contemporary Seonjae Art Gallery, a drive-in theater, a golf course, a shopping mall, restaurants, and the amusement park Gyeongju World. From April to January, there are free traditional Korean music performances at the outdoor performance hall. You can also enjoy the hot springs or the cherry blossoms in the spring. 375 Sinpyeong-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. From the intercity bus terminal, cross the street and take bus no. 10 or 18. The ride takes 20 min.

Gameunsa Temple Site King Munmu, the Shilla king who unified the Baekje and Goguryeo in the late 7th century, had this temple built in an attempt to drive away Japanese pirates with the power of the Buddha. Unfortunately, he died before the temple was completed, but his son finished it and had his father buried nearby in the East Sea. Only two stone pagodas remain at the site today, since the temple was not rebuilt after all its wooden structures burned down years ago. 55-1 Yongdang-li, Yangbuk-myeon, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the bus terminal, take bus no. 150 and get off at Gameunsa. The buses run about every 40 min., and take about 60 min.

Underwater Tomb of King Munmu When you walk on the beach in Bonggil-li, you will see a small islet just off the shore. This is the underwater tomb of King Munmu (A.D. 661–681), who unified the three kingdoms (see box above) and became the 30th ruler of Shilla. Before his death, the king asked to be buried in the East Sea so that he could become a dragon and protect the peninsula from Japanese invaders. There is a piece of granite at the center of the islet, where a pool of water forms. Historians still debate whether King Munmu's cremated remains are buried beneath it or if his ashes were scattered into the sea. You can't actually set foot on the islet, since it's so small and rocky, but you can see it from the beach. Bonggil-li, Yangbuk-myeon, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the bus terminal, take bus no. 150 and get off at the underwater tomb or walk 10–15 min. from the Gameunsa site.

Namsan (Mt. Nam) Located south of Gyeongju city, Namsan (which means “south mountain”) is often called a “museum without walls.” The mountain ranges house over 100 temple sites, 80 stone Buddhist statues, and 60 pagodas. It has 40 valleys and is divided into the southwestern region, which was worshiped by the people of the Shilla kingdom, and the southeastern section, which includes the valleys of Mireukgol, Tapgol, and Bucheogol.

The best way to see Namsan is to take one of the many hiking trails, but be prepared with snacks and drinks, since it takes about 4 to 5 hours to do the entire course. The most popular trail starts in Samneung Valley, goes to Sangseonam, and past Sangsa Rock to the top of Geumobong. From there, you can stop in at Buheungsa, see the Poseokjeong Watercourse, and then return to Samneung Valley.

WHERE TO STAY

All of Gyeongju’s high-end hotels are located in the Bomun Lake Tourist complex. One of the best upscale accommodations is the Hotel Hyundai ★★, 477-2, Shinpyeong-dong, Gyeongju-si (☎ 054/748-2233; fax 054/748-8234), which has standard rooms starting at ₩220,000 plus 10% VAT and a service charge. For an extra ₩20,000 you’ll get a lakeview room. Also nice is the nearby Gyeongju Hilton ★★, 370, Shinpyeong-dong, Gyeongju-si (☎ 054/740-1234; fax 054/744-7799; www.hilton.com), with rates starting at ₩150,000 for a standard room.

On the opposite end of the spectrum, the city has some youth hostels, which are located on the street on the way up from the Bulguksa parking lot to the temple itself. One of the larger ones is the Bulguksa Youth Hostel, 530-3 Jinhyeon-dong, Gyeongju-si (☎ 054/746-0826). In the Bomun Lake area, there is also the Gyeongju Bomun Youth Hostel, San 87, Songok-dong, Bomun, Gyeongju-si (☎ 054/749-5000), about a 15-minute walk from the Chosun Hostel. Most youth hostels have adult rates at ₩22,000 per person, lower for junior-high and high-school students.

For a more personal touch and family atmosphere, the minbak Sarangchae ★★★, 238-1 Hwangnam-dong, Gyeongju-si (☎ 054/773-4868; shilla7@chol.com), is conveniently located within walking distance of the bus stop and Tumuli Park. Rates are ₩25,000 for a single with bathroom or ₩30,000 for a double, which includes a simple breakfast of toast, eggs, and coffee or green tea.

Most midrange and budget accommodations are scattered throughout the city. Some of them can be found in the western area of downtown, with similar prices and facilities. One of the better ones in the downtown area is the Gyeongju Park Tourist Hotel, San 87, Songok-dong, Bomun, Gyeongju-si (☎ 054/742-8804), with twin rooms starting at W55,000 on weekdays. Prices go up slightly on weekends and a bit more during high season in the summer.

If you’re on a really tight budget, you can stay in group sleeping quarters in a jjimjil-bang (bathhouse) for about W8,000, which isn’t recommended for light sleepers. One to check out is Cheomseongdae Bulhanjeonmak (191 Hadong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do; ☎️ 054/777-7602), which is open 24 hours and costs W8,000 adults, W5,000 children.

WHERE TO DINE
Unlike most towns in South Korea, Gyeongju isn’t really known for any particular regional dish. The one thing invented in the city is its bread filled with sweet red beans, Hwangnam-bbang, named after the Hwangnam-dong area of Gyeongju where it originated. First made in 1939, the bread is available in many places in the downtown area. The Hwangnam Bbang bakery near Daereung-won does a brisk business. At night they have a huge staff making the hwangnam-bbang as fast as the people snatch them up, a bargain at only W500 each. Ready-made gift boxes of boli bbang (a chewier, less sweet bread made from rice flour and barley) can be purchased from Bonga Gyeongju Bbang (☎️ 054/749-0456), which is open 8am to 10pm daily, and located on the corner down the street from Anapji Pond and Tumuli Park.

A traditional meal in Gyeongju is the ssambap (wrapped rice), where you’ll get a table full of various banchan (side dishes) and greens (lettuce, perilla leaves, and steamed cabbage, among others) to wrap your rice in. You take a leaf in your hand, put a bit of rice in it, add a side dish and some dwenjang (fermented soybean paste), fold it up, and stuff the whole thing in your mouth. Most of the ssambap restaurants in town are clustered between the southeast corner of Tumuli Park and Wolseong Park, sometimes called “Ssambap Maeul” or “Ssambap Alley.”

Kuro Ssambap Shikdang ★★ KOREAN There is only one thing on the menu here (ssambap, obviously) and it’s done exceptionally well. All of the banchan are handmade on the premises and you can taste the difference. On weekends the place is crawling with customers who’ve come for their ssambap with a ridiculous number of banchan laid out before them.

106-3, Hwangnam-dong, Gyeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. ☎️ 054/749-0600 (Korean only). Ssambap W8,000 per person with a 2-person minimum. No credit cards. Daily 11am–9pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok.

Usujeong Ssambap Hanjeongshik ★★ KOREAN There is a limited menu of a few traditional dishes at this casual spot with plastic patio chairs for alfresco dining, but no matter. The food is terrific, and the locals rave about the ssambap and the homemade dongdongju (rice wine). And make sure to try the haemul pajeon (seafood green-onion pancake)—it’s fantastic.

SHOPPING
The best place to find traditional Korean crafts is at the Gyeongju Folk Craft Village (☎️ 054/746-7270), which is located on the way to the Bomun Lake Resort from the downtown area. Within this cluster of about 45 traditional houses, artisans make pottery, woodcrafts, jewelry, embroidery, earthen burial figures, and other replicas of handicrafts from the Shilla Kingdom using traditional methods. Although some artisans keep their doors closed, many of them have open studios where you can see them work. The traditional pottery can be a bit pricey, but remember, you’re getting a work of art straight from the hands of the artisan. The village is surrounded by several souvenir shops. Be sure to shop around for the best prices before opening your wallet.

For more modern shopping options, head over to the Bomun Tourist Shopping Center, which features souvenir shops galore, in the Bomun Lake Resort complex.

2 DAEGU

Daegu (formerly spelled “Taegu”) is the fourth-largest city in South Korea and the capital of the Gyeongsangbuk Province. Lying at the junction of the Geumho and Nakdong rivers, the city has always served as a transportation hub for the region. During the Joseon Dynasty, it was the capital of Gyeongsang-do. Located in a basin surrounded by low mountains, the climate in the city is generally hotter in the summer than the rest of the peninsula. In the winter, the basin is also colder.

In recent years, the South Korean government has made an attempt to develop Daegu’s textile and fashion industry, modeling it loosely on the city of Milan. Although Daegu hasn’t really caught on as a “fashion city” as hoped, textiles are one of the major contributors to the economy. The city is also well known for the apples grown on its outskirts. The extremes in temperatures and the geographic peculiarity of the area may make the city uncomfortable at times for the residents, but it is apparently very comfortable for apples. Christian missionaries in the early part of the 20th century grafted their imported apples to the local crab apple trees, resulting in a delicious hybrid fruit.

Daegu’s economy is driven by the metal and machine industries centered here. Of more interest to visitors is the city’s reputation for its Oriental medicine herb market in the central area. Although it is a major city, Daegu still retains some of its small-town charms. It is also a good place to base your exploration of surrounding attractions, such as Haeinsa and Gayasan National Park.

GETTING THERE  The Daegu International Airport (✆ 053/980-5290; http://daegu.airport.co.kr), located just 2km (1⅓ miles) outside of the city, serves as the central air hub for the area. International flights arrive at the Daegu airport from major Asian cities, including Beijing, Bangkok, Shanghai, Shenyang, Qingdao, Manila, and Hong Kong. There are a couple of domestic flights a day from Seoul’s Gimpo Airport and Incheon Airport, offered by Korean Airlines (KAL) and Asiana Airlines. Regular buses (nos. 401 and 718), costing ₩1,100, run daily every 6 to 12 minutes from the airport and go to most parts of the city. More upscale buses (nos. 104, 105, and 719) with guaranteed seating cost ₩1,500. If you want to take the subway, take bus no. 104 or 401 to the Hyanggyo Station to catch the subway from there. Taxis to Daegu city hall cost about ₩5,000.

There are two train stations in Daegu: the old station in the middle of the city, Daegu Station, and the newer and larger Dongdaegu Station to the east. The eastern train station, renovated in 2004, is served by the KTX high-speed train. Both train stations have subway stops off of line 1. Daegu is located on the Dongbu (Seoul-Busan) line. KTX trains from Seoul run daily every 20 minutes from 5:30am to 10:10pm and take about 1 hour and 40 minutes. Standard fares are ₩34,900 and first-class seats are ₩48,900. Trains from Busan run daily every 20 to 30 minutes from 7:15am to 9:45pm to the Dongdaegu Station. The 1-hour train ride costs ₩10,900. Daegu is also served by the Daegu line, which runs east-west between Daegu and Gyeongju and connects to the Jung-ang line, which goes north from Yeongcheon.

Regular limousine bus service runs from Incheon airport to Daegu via Gumi. Buses run daily about every 50 minutes from 6:40am to 10:30pm. The 5-hour ride costs ₩30,000, with an increase to ₩33,000 at night.

You can also take a nonstop bus from Seoul's Express Bus Terminal or the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal to the Daegu Express Bus Terminal. Buses run more frequently from the Seoul's Express Bus Terminal, but they both have buses daily from 6am to 10pm, with a ride that lasts just about 4 hours with regular fares at ₩14,800, ₩21,800 for deluxe buses, and ₩24,000 for the midnight fare (a bit misleading since it applies to buses that run 10pm–5am). The ride lasts about 3 hours and 40 minutes.

Somewhat confusingly, Daegu has three different express bus terminals located right next to each other just south of the Dongdaegu Train Station, and another one, the SeoDaegu Express Bus Terminal, in the northwestern part of the city. Pretty much any bus going north or west of Daegu will stop at the SeoDaegu terminal, which includes buses to Seoul, GWangju, Daejeon, Masan, Jeonju, Cheonju, Suncheon, Chuncheon, and Uijeongbu. The SeoDaegu terminal is right down the street from the Bukbu Bus Terminal and Daegu city buses.

The main Daegu Express Bus Terminal complex is more complicated. If one of the bus terminals doesn’t service your destination, try the other two. The one closest to the train station runs mostly south to cities like Busan, Jinju, and Ulsan. The one across the street serves Seoul, Incheon, and areas northeast. The one next door to the east has buses to Daejeon, Gyeongju, Jeonju, Jinju, and Busan. Unfortunately, the buses are run by different companies and you’ll have to know which companies go where to find out the schedules by phone. The companies are Hanjin Express (☏ 054/755-6314), Hanil Express (☏ 054/743-2956), Kumho Express (☏ 054/743-1101), Dongyang Express (☏ 054/743-3950), Jung-ang Express (☏ 054/743-2662), Cheonil Express (☏ 054/626-8001), and Samhwa Express (☏ 054/754-3606).

GETTING AROUND Daegu has a small subway system (www.daegusubway.co.kr) with two lines that intersect each other at Banwoldang Station. The regular fare is ₩1,100. The subway doesn’t go everywhere, but the stations are announced and clearly marked in English. If you plan on being in Daegu for more than a day, I suggest getting a transportation card, available at any subway station or newsstands near bus stops. The card’s base cost is ₩2,000, but you can add any amount. It gives you a discount for both the subway and local buses, plus free transfers within an hour of your last trip.

Buses in Daegu go pretty much anywhere you want to go. There are two types of buses—local (₩1,100) and limited (₩1,500), which usually have more seats. The first buses of the day depart daily at 5:30am and stop running by 11pm. The great thing about city buses is that they are numbered by their routes. Bus numbers have three digits, each number indicating the zone that the bus serves. For instance, bus no. 704 runs from zone 7 to zone 0, and then to zone 4. Other routes that are circular are named for the districts they serve and are numbered 1 through 3. For instance, bus no. 242 has a circular route starting at zone 2, going though zone 4, and ending back in zone 2. Bus no.
242-1 has a circular route going the opposite direction.

There are two types of taxis in the city: regular and deluxe. Regular taxis are usually silver or sometimes black with a blue or green sign on top. Deluxe taxis are black with a yellow sign on top and offer a free interpretation service (using the phone in the taxi).
Although most taxi drivers won’t know how to speak English, many taxis have a destination guide, including the names of most hotels and shopping centers in English. You can flag down a taxi anywhere on the street. Regular taxi fare starts at ₩1,500 for the first 2km (1¼ miles), while deluxe taxi fares start at ₩2,500 for the first 3km (1¼ miles).

VISITOR INFORMATION The main Daegu Tourist Information Center (DTIC; ☏ 053/627-8900; Apr–Oct 9am–8pm, Nov–Mar 9am–6pm) is located right next to the outdoor concert hall in Duryu Park. Their English-speaking staff provides reservations for train or plane tickets and offers brochures and maps in English. There are also information booths, open daily, at the Daegu Airport (☏ 053/984-1994; 7am–8pm) on the first floor, at Daegu Station (☏ 053/660-1432; Mar–Oct 9am–7pm, Nov–Feb 9am–

6pm), at Dongdaegu Station (☏ 053/939-0080; Mar–Oct 8:30am–7:30pm, Nov–Feb
8:30am–7pm), in Seomun Market (☏ 053/661-3266; Mar–Oct 9am–6pm, Nov–Feb 9am–5pm), at Dongseogno Street (☏ 053/252-2696; 10am–7pm), at the herbal market’s Yangnyeongsí Exhibit Hall (☏ 053/631-3324; 9am–6pm), and at the entrance to Palgongsan (☏ 053/985-0980; Mar–Oct 9am–6pm, Nov–Feb 9am–5pm). The city’s official site is http://english.daegu.go.kr.

The city of Daegu offers inexpensive (only ₩3,000) bus tours. There are eight tours that leave from the DTIC in Duryu Park and seven that start at the airport. Tours begin at 10am and are determined by demand, so call (☏ 053/627-8900 or -8986) or check ahead to make reservations (www.daegutour.or.kr).

EXPLORING IN & AROUND DAEGU

Daegu covers a larger land area than the city of Seoul, but parts of it still retain its small-town history. Because of its location, it has some relics from the Shilla Dynasty, and it is a great jumping-off point to nearby national parks and the famed temple Haeinsa. The city’s most fascinating attraction is the traditional herb market at Yakjeon-golmok.

Fast Facts Daegu

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs At the airport, Daegu Bank has two English-language ATMs—one on the first floor next to the money-exchange booth and another on the second floor. There is also a money-exchange booth on the second floor next to the international departures, which opens whenever the first international departures occur (usually fairly early in the morning). Although most banks have ATMs outside their branches, most of the machines close at midnight.
Some ATMs with the Cirrus or Star logos are open 24 hours and can be found in most popular public areas.

Internet Access Most large hotels and even a couple of the lower-priced motels and youth hostels offer Internet access. If you don’t have your own computer, your cheapest option is the PC bahngs in town. Just look for the letters PC; most of them are found on the second or third floors above restaurants. You can also use the free computers with Internet access at the main DTIC at 588 Duryu-dong, Dalseo-gu, inside Duryu Park.

Post Office Post offices in Daegu are open weekdays March through October 9am to 6pm, November to February 8am to 5pm. On Saturdays they’re open 9am to 1pm. They are closed holidays.
Biseulsan (Mt. Biseul) Although not one of the higher mountains on the peninsula, Biseulsan is nonetheless known for its scenic beauty, especially in the spring when the red azaleas are in bloom. Legend has it that 1,000 Buddhist saints have come from the surrounding area, and this is known for being a holy place. Its twin peaks, Johwabong and Gwangibong, attract thousands of climbers annually.

One of the most famous temples at Biseulsan, Yugasa (144 Yang-li, Okpo-myeon, Dalseong-gun; ☏ 053/614-5115), is hidden in the valley between the mountain ranges. Founded by the Buddhist teacher Doseonguksa in a.d. 827, this temple is known as a good place for meditation because of its quiet and serenity.

Farther up from the temple are the hermitages Sodu-am and Doseong-am. Behind the Doseong Hermitage is the Dotong Bawi (rock), on which Doseonguksa is said to have achieved nirvana.

Yuga-myeon, Dalseong-gun, Daegu. ☏ 053/614-5481 (Korean). Admission W1,000 adults, W700 ages 13–18, W500 ages 7–12, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Daily 24 hr. From the Seongdangmok Station (take exit 3), cross the street and take bus no. 601 toward Wolbae; get off at the SodaeSa bus stop. Buses run irregularly, about every 1 1/2 hr. Yugasa can also be reached by taking bus no. 66-2 (a 50-min. ride).

Daegu National Museum Opened in 1994, the museum has over 30,000 objects in its collection. There are three permanent exhibition halls, focusing on archaeological finds from the region, fine arts, and traditional folk life, with displays ranging from Neolithic tools to pottery and other items from the Three Kingdoms Period. You’ll see a variety of Buddhist statues and sculptures as well as Goryeo and Bucheon celadon porcelain. Artifacts in the museum date far back into the area’s prehistory and culture. The museum also organizes activities for children, has an auditorium for special lectures and presentations, and keeps a nice outdoor garden area with flowers and herbs, where you can learn a bit about traditional herbal medicine, local plants, and edible grains.

Namseong-no, Jung-gu, Daegu. ☏ 053/768-6051 or 2. http://daegu.museum.go.kr. Admission W1,000, W500 ages 18 and under, free to seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Sun–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat and holidays 9am–7pm. Free parking. Bus no. 100, 349, 414, 414-1, 427, or 449.

Yakjeon-golmok Market ★★★ The biggest draw of Daegu is this 350-year-old market. With its origins during the Joseon Dynasty, the entire alley is lined with herbal medicine shops, acupuncturists, and all manner of traditional Oriental medicine. Even if you’re not looking for a cure, it’s great fun to smell the earthy scents of dried roots and peer into glass jars filled with ginseng roots and other bizarrely beautiful cures. The Wholesale Herbal Medicine Fair is held on the first floor of the nearby Yangnyeongsi Exhibition Hall every first and sixth day of the month. The Yangnyeongsi Festival ★★ is held here usually the second week in May.

Namseong-no, Jung-gu, Daegu. Free admission. Exhibition hall Mon–Sat 10am–5pm. Bus no. 104, 106, 306, 349, 401, 402, 439, 524, 535, 613, 650, 704, 730, or 909. Located across Jung-ang-no Rd. from the police stand (a 5-min. walk from the Jung-ang-no subway station). You can also walk here from the Banwoldang subway station.

Palgongsan Provincial Park Located just 20km (12 miles) north of Daegu, Mt. Palgong is considered one of the most spiritually important mountains in the country, primarily because of the many famous temples and associated hermitages that are located on its ridges. Koreans believe that the spiritual energy that lives in the mountain will eventually bring about the reunification of the two Koreas.
This is the nation's largest provincial park and features a ridgeline that runs in an east-west direction and forms Daegu's northern boundary. If you hike the ridgeline, you'll be treated to beautiful views of the surrounding valleys on both sides of the mountains.

Offering challenging (though not at all dangerous) climbs, the mountain's numerous and varied trails are popular with hikers year-round, but they're positively packed in the fall when the maple trees are in full flaming colors. Give yourself a day to explore the temples, the hermitages, and the various stone statues around the mountain. The shortest hike in Palgongsan starts at Donghwasa (Donghwa Temple; see below), which is the most popular attraction in the park. Follow the trail to Budo-am, then Yeombur-am up to Dongbong Peak, and then you can make your way back down to the ticket booth. The path takes about 3 1/2 to 4 hours.

A longer route takes you from Pagyesa (one of Donghwasa's auxiliary temples) through the Pagyejeae pass up to Dongbong Peak. Then you can take a trail up to Inbong down to Baekhong-am down to Eunhaesa. This path would take you 8 to 10 hours, so I suggest starting early in the morning.

A less stringent route starts from Eunhaesa. From there, you can go up to Baekhong-am, up to Inbong peak, to the Gatbawi, and down to the parking lot. This route would take about 5% to 6 hours.

There are a variety of ways to get to Palgongsan from Daegu proper. To get to the main entrance and Donghwasa, take express bus no. 1 from either the Dongdaegu Station or across the street from the Migliore department store (it’s about a 40-min. ride). To get to Pagyesa, take bus no. 401 from Hyanggyo Station. To get to Gatbawi, take bus no. 131 from the same station. Although there are plenty of restaurants and shops around, it's always best to carry at least some water with you (especially during the dog days of Daegu's summer).

Due to the influx of hikers, restaurants and sleeping quarters have sprung up in the area. The best restaurants in the area are in the popular southern side of the mountain as well as the west side near Pagyesa. There is also a good (and moderately priced) restaurant on top if you take the cable car. As for accommodations, it's probably best to spend the night in Daegu and just spend the day exploring Palgongsan.

Donghwasa (Donghwa Temple) ★★ Situated on the southern side of Palgongsan, this temple was built by Monk Geuk-Dal in A.D. 493, the 15th year of the reign of Shilla king Soji. Originally called Yugasa, the temple was given its current name when it was rebuilt in 771 by Simjiwongsa during King Heung-deok's reign. The current temple structure was built in 1732, but it's had serious renovations, additions, and landscaping in the past few decades.

During the Joseon Dynasty (1392–1910), Buddhism was heavily persecuted in Korea. Monks hid in remote mountain temples and Donghwasa is a good example of the hidden sanctuaries of the time.

The eastern section of the temple site is the Geumdang-am hermitage hall, built next to twin stone pagodas dating back to the Unified Shilla Era. The road in front of the hermitage was the original entrance to Donghwasa and the original gate pillars and stone relief still remain. There are a number of other hermitage sites and many Buddhist images engraved on rocks scattered throughout the forest nearby. You will see them as you climb the hill to the newer section, the National Reunification (Tongil) Temple, which was built in the 1980s by the South Korean president, who was a Buddhist. The temple is dedicated to the peaceful reunification of the two Koreas. Above the complex is a giant white marble Buddha of Reunification in the ample courtyard.
Eunhaesa (Temple of the Silver Sea) On the east side of Palgongsan is this temple, founded by Monk Hyecheol, who was known as the Great Meditation Master, in A.D. 809. The original temple, Haeinsa (Temple of the Tranquil Sea), was burned during the Imjin Waeran in the 1590s. It was subsequently transferred to its current location, rebuilt, and given its present name. A stately temple complex, the main hall, which dates from the 16th century, has been designated a national treasure.

Gatbawi Seokjoyeoraewasang (Stone Buddha) Considered one of the masterpieces of Buddhist sculpture, this 4m-tall (13-ft) stone Buddha was carved in the 9th century. Since he is the Buddha of Medicine, he holds a medicine pot in his left hand. His stone headpiece represents his supreme wisdom, and the position of his hands symbolizes the expelling of evil and is typical of Buddha statues carved during that period.

Legend has it that if you pray to this Buddha, he will grant at least one of your requests. Despite the fact that seeing this statue involves a hike of several hours, you’ll see a long line of people waiting to make their prayers, usually on the first of the month or when it’s time for entrance exams to universities. This is also a popular place for people to come watch the sunrise and pray for good luck on New Year’s morning.

Gunwi Samjeonseokbul (Grotto Statues) Said to have been carved in A.D. 700, these three sculptures are set within a natural grotto on the mountainside. These statues are of historic significance, since they illustrate the artistic style between the Three Kingdoms and the Unified Shilla periods. Similar to (but less refined than) the Seokguram Grotto in Gyeongju, the Buddha carved here (he’s the one in the middle, flanked by two bodhisattvas) is said by many to have been the inspiration for and precursor to the one in Gyeongju, so it’s often referred to as Seokguram II. The statues were rediscovered after Korea’s liberation from Japan in the early part of the 20th century.

Associated with this unusual grotto is a small temple, said to have been originally built by Ado Hwasang in the mid–400s, but the current buildings were constructed in the 1980s. The grotto is about 2km (1 1/4 miles) up from Daeyul village. You can get buses to Daeyul from Daegu’s Bukbu Bus Terminal and then walk—admission is free and the grotto is open as long as the park is.

Yeombul-am (Chanting Rock Hermitage) The Chanting Rock Hermitage got its name from a legend that a monk from the area heard the sounds of a chanting Buddha coming from a large boulder in the hillside. So in 928, Yeombul-am was built next to that giant rock and Buddha images were carved in relief on its two flat sides. Along the trail toward this hermitage is a smaller one, Budo-am, which serves as a retreat for meditating female monks.
Above Yeombul-am are two additional Buddha carvings—the beautiful, seated Buddha of Medicine at Biro-bong (the highest peak in the mountains) and a larger, cruder Buddha at Dong-bong.

There is no additional fee, and the hermitage is open as long as the park is, but plan to spend about 90 minutes hiking uphill to get here. You can start your walk at Budo-am (see above). Take express bus no. 1 from either the Dongdaegu Station or across the street from the Migliore department store. You can also take bus no. 105 from the stop in front of the former Hanil Theatre.

WHERE TO STAY

Daegu has several Western-style hotels throughout the city. Some of them are concentrated in the downtown area, though others are scattered around other outlying areas. Low-budget yeogwan (small inns) are concentrated near the train and bus terminals and in the downtown area. All of them are in the ￦25,000 to ￦30,000 range. I’ve listed my recommendations below.

Expensive

Daegu Prince Hotel ★ Centrally located, the hotel is across the street from the Daegu tower. With both Western-style and Korean-style ondol options, the rooms are quite yellow, but tastefully decorated. Staff are friendly and accommodating, though not all of them speak great English.

War with Japan, Round One

From 1592 to 1598, Korea was attacked by Japanese invaders. This war is called the Imjin Waeran (translates roughly to “the war started by the Japanese in the year of imjin”), the Seven-Year War, or the Hideyoshi Invasions. There were two major invasions during that time—the first led by the legendary Japanese warrior Toyotomi Hideyoshi (1592–93) and the second from 1597 to 1598. Originally, the Japanese saw success on land and failure at sea, mostly thanks to the naval defenses led by Admiral Yi Su-shin and his turtle ships (see the “Floating Turtles” box in chapter 8). The Korean navy was able to intercept communication and supplies to the Japanese forces. Ming China intervened, trying to bring a peaceful end to the war (through both diplomatic and military means), stalling the war for 5 years, until Japan invaded for a second time in 1597. The war ended with the naval battle at Noryang in 1598, when the Korean navy forced the retreat of the Japanese forces.

Unfortunately for Korea, this was just the first of many subsequent attacks by the Japanese, and in 1910, Japan officially annexed Korea. The indignities suffered under Japanese rule—for example, many Korean women were forced to serve as prostitutes, or “comfort women,” for occupying Japanese troops—still resonate today. In 2007, Japanese premier Shinzo Abe made a statement implying that the Japanese had not forced women into sexual slavery. The resulting outcry both in Korea and around the world led to a formal apology, but tensions between Japan and Korea still run high.
Eldis Regent Hotel  Conveniently located downtown, this first-class hotel has quiet Western-style rooms with either mountain or garden views. All rooms have soundproof windows and decent beds that are a bit on the hard side. The bathrooms, though quite small, are clean and have good water pressure.

Hotel Inter-Burgo ★★  Opened in 2001, this hotel has modern facilities and friendly, English-speaking staff. Its Spanish theme is a bit odd, but it doesn’t take away from the comfort of the place. The rooms, and especially the bathrooms, are a bit on the small side, but the location, on the Geumho River in Mangu Park, more than makes up for it. Its lower-priced annex has been renovated and is much nicer than it used to be when it was the Park Hotel.

Moderate Apsan Tourist Hotel ★★  Convenient to Apsan Park, the hotel is in the downtown area. You’ll get better service from the 24-hour front desk than you will at most other hotels in this price range. The rooms are clean and spacious for the price, with comfortable beds and the usual Korean-style (in other words, tiny) bathroom.

Crown Hotel ★  This first-class hotel has quiet Western-style rooms with either mountain or garden views in the downtown area. All rooms have soundproof windows and decent beds. The bathrooms, though a bit small, are clean and efficient with good water pressure.

Inexpensive  For budget digs, try the Sanjang Yeogwan (☏ 053/622-7782), 477-19 Duryu 3-dong, Dalseo-gu, Daegu, or the Greenjang Yeogwan (☏ 053/621-3553), 542-2 Daemyeong 5-dong, Namgu, Daegu. Both are no-frills joints with reasonably priced rooms starting at ₩30,000 for one or two people. There are dozens of yeogwan and love motels throughout the city, which are similar in price and quality.

WHERE TO DINE  The specialty in Daegu is not for the faint of heart, or of stomach, for that matter. Makchang is pork large intestine that is cooked on a tabletop grill, just as you would cook galbi (beef ribs). The small intestines are called gobchang. Both are served with a light yangnyeom dwenjang (seasoned, fermented soybean paste) and green onions.

Regional specialties aside, as in any large city there is no shortage of places to eat. Just north of the Suseong reservoir in Suseong-gu is Deurangil, an area famous for its restaurants. With over 300 places in this area alone, you can choose from traditional Korean to Western fast food, or just stop in at a pub for a drink. Although it doesn’t have the older charm of places in Yasi-golmok, which translates to the alley of cute foxes, for the young ladies who shop there, you can’t beat it for the variety of choices.

Expensive
Dijon ★★★ FRENCH/MEDITERRANEAN  A romantic restaurant in the downtown area, Dijon may be a little bit difficult to find, but it’s worth the effort. The authentic French and Mediterranean food is outstanding, and the menu is varied with gourmet touches you won’t find anywhere else outside of Seoul. The roast stuffed chicken breast is surprisingly tender but you can’t go wrong with any of the pastas either. Don’t forget to save room for dessert. The same owner owns the cozy Italian restaurant next door, Into, whose prices are a bit more affordable, but it’s hard to secure one of the only four tables.

21-9 Samduk 1-ga, Jung-gu, Daegu. ☎️ 053/422-2426. Entrees W20,000–W30,000. MC, V. Daily 11:30am–10:30pm, last order taken an hour before closing. In a small alley behind the Samdeok Catholic Church.

Moderate
Haegeumgang KOREAN SEAFOOD  Specializing in hwae (raw fish) and other cooked delicacies from the ocean, this city favorite has been serving up dishes for over 30 years. They have a huge menu so the hardest part may be just deciding what to eat, but my recommendation is the simple but delicious hwaedupbap (raw fish rice bowl). Sit yourself down on one of the floor cushions, pull yourself up to a shiny wood table, and indulge in a veritable seafood frenzy.

Shinam 4-dong, Dong-gu, Daegu. ☎️ 053/954-2323. Entrees W7,000–W20,000 per person. MC, V. Daily 10am–11pm. Closed holidays. Take subway to Keungogae Station (exit 2).

Wild Sushi ★ JAPANESE  You can enjoy any one of the funky sushi rolls in this sleek, modern Korean sushi joint. But one of the best items on the menu is the chicken salad, which comes with a pineapple ring on top, and the udon noodles are good, too. There are plenty of pictures available so you know what you’re ordering.

Samduk-dong 1-ga, Jung-gu, Daegu. ☎️ 053/426-0044. Dishes W4,000–W8,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Closed holidays. In the downtown area, just to the right of the department store Gallery Zone.

Inexpensive
Indobang Rangi ★★ INDIAN  Perhaps the only good Indian restaurant in town, this small restaurant (on the third floor) has excellent curries and vegetarian options on the menu. The friendly manager speaks English well.

Across the street from the Kyungpook University’s north gate. ☎️ 053/956-9940. Entrees W7,000–W15,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–10pm. Closed holidays.

SHOPPING
Because Daegu is the region’s transportation hub, it’s a shopper’s dream. With its textile industry and herbal markets, it’s also a great place to browse without spending a single Won.
Fashion & Textiles

For textiles, clothing, and other related items, head over to the DDC Textile Product Complex ★★, 1667, Sangeok 2-dong, Buk-gu, Daegu (☏ 053/381-3690). DDC, which stands for Daegu Distribution Complex, is a wholesale market, which also does regular retail business. The over 600 stores each specialize in things like fabric, yarn, blankets, clothing, and other textiles, all at great prices. Open daily from 9am to 8pm, the complex is closed on the first and third Saturdays of each month, as well as holidays. Take bus no. 305, 306, 535, 613, or 929 to get here.

For hipper, younger styles the Yasi-golmok, in the Samdeok-dong area downtown, has several streets of boutique shops that sell the latest fashions. The name of the street, yasi, means “cute foxes,” referring to those who shop there. Prices are reasonable, but the wares are pretty much limited to mostly women’s clothes. Take bus no. 306, 404, or 613.

If money is not an object, you’ll enjoy Migliore Daegu, 1667, Sangeok 2-dong, Buk-gu, Daegu (☏ 053/600-6666). It’s a huge department store complex with over 2,000 stores, most of them specializing in fashion and accessories. Open daily 11am to midnight, the complex is open an hour later for those who can’t stop shopping on Saturdays, and it’s closed the first and third Monday of the month. Take bus no. 104, 105, 106, 156, 242, 309, 401, 402, 404, 404-1, 407, 425, 427, 504, 508, 518, 601, 608, 724, 903, 909, 910, 939, or 980, or take the subway to Jung-ang-no Station.

Megastores

As with most cities in South Korea, large discount stores have cropped up all over Daegu. Most of them are open 10am to 11pm daily with a couple of popular locations open until midnight on Saturdays. All of them have parking available and sell everything from groceries to toothpaste.

The familiar yellow-and-black cube of E-Mart (☏ 053/605-1234) has four locations in the city—in Seongso at 1254, Igok-dong, Dalseo-gu; Manchon at 1356-5, Manchon-dong, Suseong-gu; Wolbae at 555, Daecheon-dong, Dalseo-gu; and Chilseong at 20, Chilseong-dong 2-ga, Buk-gu.

There are also a couple of Home Plus stores in town, one in Chilseong-dong, 378-23, Chilseong-dong 2-ga, Buk-gu (☏ 053/350-8000), and the other in Chilgok, 968, Dongcheon-dong, Buk-gu. They’re closed for New Year’s, Lunar New Year, and Chuseok.

Traditional Markets

Other than the Yakjeon Golmok medicine market, there are large markets for all manner of agricultural and local goods throughout the city. The historic Seomun Shijang ★★★, 115-378, Daesin-dong, Jung-gu (☏ 053/256-6341), is a great place to start. One of the country’s main markets since 1669, the Seomun market’s current location doesn’t reveal the character of its historical past, but with over 4,000 little shops, you’re sure to find something of interest. Other than seafood and agricultural goods, this is one of the best places in the country to buy fabric and clothes (though remember that South Korean sizes run very small). Open daily 8am to 8pm, the market is closed on the second and fourth Sundays each month. Bus nos. 404, 504, 514, 603, 836, and 910 all stop here.

The Nammun (South Gate) Shijang is a similar but smaller market. The Chilseong Shijang, located on the east edge of downtown near the stream, has great housewares and furniture. Even smaller is the Gyodong Shijang south of Daegu Station and east of Dongseong-no.
DAEGU AFTER DARK
Your best bet for happening nightlife in the city is in the Yasi-golmok area, where dozens of bars, cafes, and nightclubs are concentrated. The central shopping district also has a bunch of cafes, noraebang, hofs (beer halls), and bars. Most of the places I’ve listed below are casual, are foreigner-friendly, and have no set dress code, but Koreans usually dress up to go out after dark. The city’s gay district is near the express bus terminal.

The area around Samdeok Fire Station downtown is where most expats and foreigners living in Daegu hang out. I would mention bars and clubs there, but the turnover rate is so high that by the time you read this, the place will probably be closed. The largest concentration of foreigner-friendly bars and clubs is on Rodeo Street, which runs north-south from the fire station. Also in the area is “Hof Alley,” which is lined with German-influenced beer bars.

The Kyungdae area around Kyungpook University is also a happening spot for nightlife. There are plenty of bars, nightclubs, noraebang, and DVD-bahng that cater to the college-age crowd. The area starts across the street from the university’s main North gate, the bukmun. It’s a 5-minute taxi ride from either the Dongdaegu or Keungogae stations off the subway.

In Dong (East) Daegu, there is also a handful of foreigner-friendly bars in Siji-dong. The streets just east of the Yeonho subway station (off of line 2) are home to a small concentration of bars catering to the foreigners who’ve come here to teach English in the many hagwon (privately run after-school learning academies) in the area. A couple of the bars even have weekly trivia nights and open mics.

3 ANDONG
Andong is the largest city in the northern part of Gyeongsangbuk-do. Although it had been growing rapidly since the 1970s, like the rest of the country, it has recently seen a decline in population as thousands of people moved to Seoul and other cities in search of higher education and better jobs. Still, Andong has been known as the cultural and folk center of the region since the Shilla Dynasty. During the Joseon Dynasty, the town attracted many Confucian scholars since it had the largest number of Confucian schools in the country. Even today, there are dozens of private Confucian schools that were established during those years.

The city gained international fame when Queen Elizabeth II celebrated her 73rd birthday here in 1999. In preparation for her visit, the city government improved the roads and even expanded the highway that runs through it (road 34) to two lanes in both directions. East of the city center, the 600-year-old Folk Village (Hahoe Maeul) is Andong’s biggest draw. Although the residents now have modern amenities (like electricity and phones), it is still a wonderful trip back in time to South Korea’s not-so-distant rural past. Unlike other villages that date back to the Goryeo period, both common folk and the yangban (upper class) lived in the same village.

Every October, the Andong Folk Festival draws thousands of visitors to see performances, including the Andong Mask Dance Festival in the traditional Hahoe Maeul.

ESSENTIALS
GETTING THERE The Jung-ang rail line that connects Seoul to Busan runs through Andong. There is only one train daily from Seoul Station to Andong. The ride takes about 4 hours and costs about ₩22,000. The Cheongnyangni Station has more trains (seven or eight daily), with trains running daily from 9am to 9pm, but the trip lasts about 5 hours. There are also trains from Busan several times a day.

You can also take an express bus from the DongSeoul Bus Terminal, which will take about 4 hours. Buses run daily from 6:20am to 6:30pm about every half-hour. Daily buses also run frequently from Daegu (about every 7–20 min.). You can also take a bus from Busan, Cheongsong, Daejeon, and Pohang. The Andong Intercity Bus Terminal, 247-32 Unheung-dong, Andong (☎ 054/857-8296), has both express and regular buses.

The bus terminals and train stations are on the same street within walking distance of each other in downtown Andong.

If you're driving from Daegu, take highway 14 north to the Seo-Andong (West Andong) exit. Then, take highway 34 into the city.

GETTING AROUND There are local buses available that can take you to most places in town. For sites farther out, they run infrequently and the times are erratic.

If you have limited time, you can hire a taxi for a day. Taxis are always waiting outside the bus and train terminals. Negotiate with your driver, but rates are usually around ₩120,000 per day. The base fare starts at ₩1,500.

Andong is not an easy place to explore on foot. Although some sites of interest are clustered together (the Hahoe Village and the Folk Museum are within walking distance), many other attractions are difficult to reach even by bus.

Andong does offer a city tour bus (☎ 054/855-7179; http://andongtour.kr), which you have to reserve at least a day beforehand. There are two courses that start from the bus terminal, each costing ₩18,000 per person. The first one, which includes the Hahoe Maeul, runs Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday. The other course runs on Tuesday and Friday and includes the Dosan Seowon. Both tours run 10:30am to 6pm.

Fast Facts

The central city post office is located just up the street from the train and bus stations. You will find banks and other businesses in the same area. The larger, central post office is on the west side of town on the same street as the police station. You can access the Internet from a handful of PC bahngs in town, or use the free computers at the tourist information office.

EXPLORING ANDONG

Andong Folk Museum ★ When the Andong Dam was created in 1976, the resulting lake would have submerged many cultural relics. Instead of leaving them to an underwater grave, the buildings and historical relics were moved to the museum’s outdoor space to create a park and the Andong Folk Village. The indoor exhibits illustrate traditional Confucian culture and traditions, as well as highlighting dozens of pieces of pottery, utensils, and other objects.
Andong Soju Museum  The traditional rice liquor from Andong is so famous that it was designated a cultural asset of the province in 1987. Located on the grounds of the still-operational Andong Soju Brewery, this museum shows how the alcohol is made. The alcohol content is 45%, but they claim that you won’t have a hangover the next morning. Good luck!

Bongjeongsa (Bongjeong Temple) ★ South Korea’s oldest wooden structure, parts of this temple miraculously survived destruction during the Imjin Waeran (p. 268). The temple was originally built by Monk Uisang in a.d. 673, during the reign of King Munmu of the Shilla Dynasty. The 850-year-old structure sits in the left courtyard of the compound. The temple itself is the largest in Andong. Surrounded by ancient pine trees gnarled with age, you can compare architecture from both the Goryeo and the Joseon dynasties.

About 20 minutes on foot east of Bongjeongsa is a peaceful little hermitage, the Yeongsang-am, with undecorated wooden walls and humble buildings. A 20-minute walk to the west of Bongjeongsa is another hermitage, Jijo-am, which is dedicated to the goddess of mercy, Gwaneum. Even farther north (about a 30-min. walk) are the remains of a small temple, Gaemoksa, also built by Monk Uisang.

Dosan Seowon (Dosan Confucian School) Established in 1574, during the seventh year of King Seonjo’s reign, this school was built in memory of Confucian scholar Yi Hwang by some of his disciples. Like other schools of this type, it was built both as a place for education and in honor of past Confucian scholars. Although its scholarly functions ceased long ago, it still serves as a ceremonial center, with commemorations held here twice a year. It has been featured on the back of the 1,000 bill since 1975.

Hahoe Maeul (Folk Village) ★★★ The residents of this 600-year-old village have maintained many aspects of their traditional lifestyle. Although most homes now have telephones, electricity, and even satellite televisions, the old-fashioned homes and the dirt roads between them is like an open museum to a time long past. Unlike many other villages, both upper and lower classes lived together, with the higher classes living in the center of the village, and the lower-class homes farther out. While most other traditional villages in Korea have homes that face south for better sun exposure, this village’s homes face toward the S-shaped river (the Nakdong-gang) that flows through it. Near the entrance is a fun collection of changseung, wooden statues that stood in front of traditional villages to guard them from evil spirits. The place loses its quiet charm when the streets get overrun by visitors on the weekends and holidays, so it’s best to come on weekdays, especially in the morning. You’ll have to brave the crowds if you want to see the Exorcism Mask Dance, a shamanistic ritual meant to drive away evil spirits, which is performed every weekend May through October, and only on Sundays March and April.

To get a bird’s-eye view, cross the Nakdong River on the northwestern end of the village and there’s a trail next to the pine forest that leads up to the Buyongdae, a 64m-high (210-ft.) cliff that affords a great view of the Hahoe Maeul, the river, and the surrounding scenery.

690 Hahoe-li, Pungcheon-myeon, Andong-si. ☏ 054/841-2896. Admission ₩2,000 adults, ₩1,000 teens, ₩700 children; free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Nov–Feb daily 9am–6pm; Mar–Oct daily 9am–7pm. From the bus terminal, cross the street and take bus no. 46 to Hahoe Maeul. Buses run 8 times a day and the ride takes 40 min. Parking ₩2,000 for small cars, ₩4,000 for large.

Hahoe Mask Museum ★ (Kids) Located near the entrance to the Hahoe Folk Village, this museum displays masks from Korea and around the world. A variety of Hahoe tal (masks), a special type of mask used in performances in the region, are shown here along with other traditional Korean masks and 500 masks from other countries. Visitors can make their own masks from hanji (rice paper).

287 Hahoe-li, Pungcheon-myeon, Andong-si.  ❖  054/853-2288. www.maskmuseum.com. Admission ₩1,500 adults, ₩1,000 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Daily 9:30am–6pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. From the bus terminal, cross the street and take bus no. 46 to Hahoe Maeul; ask the driver to drop you off at the tal bahng mulgwan (mask museum) before you get to the village. Buses run 8 times a day and the ride takes 40 min.

Icheondong Seokbulsang/Jebiwon Buddha ★ Almost an unofficial symbol for Andong, this beautiful Buddha statue stands on an ancient path looking over the mountains at Jebiwon, which used to be a resting place for travelers crossing to and from the Sobaek Mountains. It’s a Mireuk Buddha, which is usually a standing statue, sometimes called the “Buddha of the Future,” from the Goryeo Dynasty, and it is carved into a piece of granite that is 12m (39 ft.) high. (During the Goryeo Dynasty, many such Buddhas were created at the entrances to mountains and villages.)

There are many legends associated with this location, one of which gave it its name, Jebiwon (jebi means “swallow” in Korean). Legend has it that on the last day of construction on a nearby temple, one of the workers fell off the roof and died. They say that the worker’s soul turned into a swallow and flew away. Another story dates from the Imjin Waeran and tells how the Buddha statue was beheaded by a general.

San 2, Icheon-dong, Andong-si. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the Andong Intercity Bus Terminal, take bus no. 54 (which runs every 40 min.); you must tell your driver to stop at the jebiwon seokbul (stone Buddha). For the return trip, hail the driver when the bus approaches. It’s a 10-min. ride from the bus terminal.

Jirye Art Village (Artists’ Colony) ★★ This artists’ colony houses some cultural assets, like traditional houses and stone monuments, that were moved here due to the damming of the Imha area to create an artificial lake. This 350-year-old village has homes that have preserved traditions, including those still heated with wood. It’s a bit out of the way, but a wonderful place to see traditional culture preserved in time. If you wish to spend the night in an old-fashioned Korean home, you can reserve a spot in advance and someone will pick you up from the bus or train station.

Pungsan Hanji Factory ★★ Hanji, paper made from mulberry bark, is one of South Korea’s most beautiful traditional products. You can see how the paper is made—a painstaking process which hasn’t changed much from ancient times. Even without the... hands-on demonstrations, the warehouse and gift shop with all the various colors and grades of hanji for sale are worth the trip to this tiny factory.

36-1 Sosan-li, Pungsan-eup, Andong-si; 📞 054/858-7007 (Korean only). Free admission. Most days 10am–6pm, but call ahead. On road 916 off of road 924, not too far from the Pungsan Elementary School. Best to take a taxi from the train or bus station.

WHERE TO STAY

Andong doesn’t have any high-end hotels or many midrange accommodations, but there are several inexpensive yeogwan around the train and bus stations. There are also several guesthouses in the traditional village (called hanok), where you can experience how the nobles and commoners lived in centuries past.

The Jirye Art Village, overlooking Imha Lake, is probably one of the best places to experience the way Korean nobles used to live. Rooms range from ₩50,000 to ₩120,000 with shared bathroom facilities. Ask for a lakeview room, if so desired. Meals are ₩6,000 and you should reserve them in advance when making your sleeping reservations (San 769 Bakgong-ni, Imdong-myeon, Andong; 📞 054/822-2590; www.jirye.com). You can look around Andong during the day and the village chief will pick you up at 5pm in front of the bus or train station.

Also in the Imha Lake area is Suaedang, 470-44 Sugok-dong, Imdong-myeon (054/822-6661), with buildings from the Joseon Dynasty, which were also relocated because of the Imha Dam. It’s a peaceful retreat. Rooms sleep two and range from ₩40,000 to ₩70,000, depending on size and location. Suaedang has traditional Korean rooms with shared bathroom and shower facilities.

Less remote but still with traditional flair is the Imcheonggak, 20 Beopheungdong (054/853-3455 Korean only, or call the Korea Travel Phone at 1330 and they’ll make a reservation for you), the birth home of Lee Sang-ryong. During the Joseon Dynasty, a law prevented civilians from building houses with more than 100 rooms. So Mr. Lee’s hanok complex had 100 rooms (only 50 of which remain today). Although the railroad ruined the view it once had, the complex maintains its traditional atmosphere.

There are also plenty of minbak available in the Hahoe Village, but very few of the owners speak English. If you want to do a homestay in the traditional village, call the Korea Travel Phone (1330) and have them make a reservation for you or see if rooms are available on a walk-in basis (on weekdays, outside of summer and holidays, there should be no problem).

For more Western-style accommodations, try the Park Tourist Hotel (054/859-1500; fax 054/857-5445). It has bland but comfortable rooms from ₩60,000 to ₩87,000. Of course, there are plenty of love motels in town as well, with doubles going for about half the price of the Park Hotel.

Andong is known for several traditional dishes. One of the local dishes is heotjesatbap, a “fake” version of the rice dish eaten during jesa (ancestor honoring) ceremonies; it is a mixed rice bowl similar to bibimbap, but was traditionally eaten in ancestral rite ceremonies. You can find restaurants that specialize in this dish and other traditional cuisine near the Hahoe Village, Andong Dam, and near the downtown area. A well-known place that has been making heotjesatbap for 50 years is Andong Minseok Eumshikjjeom (054/843-2100) in front of the Hahoe Maeul, where you can get the famed dish for ₩5,000. Another good place is the Ggachi Gumeong Jib (054/821-1056) in front of the Andong Folk Village near the Andong Dam.
Also downtown is an area, Jjimdak Golmok (Steamed Chicken Alley), that specializes in another regional specialty—jjimdak, a spicy steamed chicken dish, usually with onions, rice cakes, sweet potatoes, and a sweet ggochujang (chile paste) sauce. The Maeil Tongdak (☎ 054/854-4128) is one of the better places on the street, but most of them are quite good. Pretty much all the restaurants in town price jjimdak from ₩10,000 to ₩15,000. One order usually can feed two to four people.

Andong is famous for its beef, which they claim is the best in the country, so don’t miss out on having a galbi meal here. One of the best galbi places in town is Andong Munhwa Galbi (☎ 054/857-6608 or 857-6565), a tiny unassuming spot located just up the way from Andong Station (walk up the main road away from the station, and turn into the alley where the Muhwha Motel is located—it’s a few minutes’ walk down the alley). Galbi for one will set you back ₩17,000, but it comes with rice, soup, kimchi, lettuce, and other stuff you can snack on as you cook your meat on the tabletop charcoal grill in front of you. Another tasty place is Seoul Galbi Shikdang (☎ 054/859-6264, 136 Dongbu-dong, Andong-si), located within walking distance from Andong Station, where they’ve been serving Andong beef since 1969. Open 11am to 10pm, they’re closed major holidays and the second Sunday of each month. Galbi dishes range from ₩4,000 to ₩14,000.

The city is also known for its salted mackerel, shikhae, a delicious sweet rice dessert drink, and its local soju, which tastes a little smoother and more sour than regular soju, that natives claim is the best in the country.

Although there are very few non-Korean options in Andong, some American fast-food joints are available downtown as well.

SHOPPING

Andong has several small traditional markets, since it serves as the trading hub for other smaller towns in the region. The Andong Shijang is a great place to get the regional hemp cloths and traditional wooden masks. It’s open on days ending in 2 or 7.

You can also find mask reproductions and other souvenirs at the Hahoe Mask Museum at the entrance to the Hahoe Folk Village. Other than its masks and soju, Andong is also famous for its rice paper, its apples, and its red peppers, whose thick skin makes for really great powder and chile paste.

4 THE REST OF GYEONGSANGBUK-DO

Mostly surrounded by the Taebaek Mountains in the east and the Sobaek Mountains in the west, Gyeongsangbuk-do is South Korea’s hottest province in the summer with average temperatures hovering around 95°F (35°C). It became its own province in 1896 when Gyeongsang-do was split, making it the largest province in South Korea.

Gyeongsangbuk-do (sometimes shortened as Gyeongbuk) was once home to the ancient Gaya culture. The province is known as the birthplace of Confucian culture and home to many Confucian academies. Indeed, Gyeongsangbuk-do is known throughout the country for its steadfast loyalty to Korea’s traditional culture. Small localities have festivals based on regional agricultural crops (such as mushrooms and ginseng), and the mountains in the area, especially Juwangsan, are great for enjoying the country’s scenic beauty (without running into the hordes of tourists that frequent the more popular mountains, such as Seoraksan).
The province includes two national parks—Juwangsan and Gyeongju, which includes the major Shilla historical sites around Gyeongju city. It also has several other national and provincial parks within its borders.

Most of its eastern coast remains largely indented, except for Yeonghil Bay in Pohang, which has the region’s best harbor. The coastal drive has unexpected scenery that varies with sandy stretches, craggy rocks, lowlands, and isolated fishing villages. It would be one of the most scenic areas of the peninsula, except for some of the barbed wire installed between marine lookouts perched on coastal viewpoints.

Despite its eastern coastline, Gyeongbuk is oriented inland, focusing mainly on the agriculture and land of the region. The only sizable island in the province is Ulleung-do, about a 3-hour boat ride away from the mainland.

GETTING THERE

The province has only two airports, one in Daegu and the other at Pohang (KPO; 054/289-7399; http://pohang.airport.co.kr), which has four flights a day from Seoul, two each from Asiana Airlines and Korean Airlines. The airport offers buses only to Pohang city, so it’s more convenient to fly into Daegu.

The Gyeongbu Rail Line with both high-speed KTX and regular trains runs through the province. The Jung-ang Rail Line also goes through the area, ending at Gyeongju. Connecting lines go from Gimcheon to Yeongju and Daegu to Pohang.

If you’re driving, the Gyeongbu Expressway (road 1) goes through the southern part of the province, passing through Daegu and Gyeongju. The Olympic Expressway (road 12) runs southwest from Daegu. The Jung-ang Expressway (road 55) cuts through the middle of the province going through Daegu, Andong, and Yeongju.

You can also take an express bus from Seoul to Andong, Sangju, Gimcheon, Gumi, Daegu, Gyeongju, Pohang, Yeongju, and Yeoncheon. Intercity buses travel all over the province.

The only boats from the province leave from Pohang Ferry Terminal (054/1600-1877) and go to Ulleung-do.

GETTING AROUND

Local buses from smaller cities and towns take you to outlying areas, but some of them run infrequently to remote or less popular places, so check your return bus schedule and plan accordingly.

VISITOR INFORMATION

At the Pohang Airport, there is a tourist information booth (9am–7pm weekends and holidays only) on the first floor of the terminal. The Gyeongsangbuk-do website is www.gb.go.kr.

JUWANGSAN NATIONAL PARK

One of South Korea’s most isolated and least visited national parks, Juwangesan National Park ★★★, Sangeui-li, Budong-myeon, Cheongsong-gun, Gyeongsangbuk-do (054/873-0015), is part of the Taebaek mountain range. Mt. Juwang (sometimes spelled Chuwang) is known by many other names, like Seokbyeongsan, Jubangsan, and Dedunsan.

From a distance Juwangsan doesn’t look like much, but you’ll see its gorgeous scenery once you arrive in the middle of it. It’s best known for its mountain streams, waterfalls, and the limestone peaks that jut out from green valleys. The park is divided into three areas: Jubanggol (Jubang Valley) at the entrance, Jeolgocheon in the east, and Yaksutang (known for its mineral springs) in the west.
Many legends are associated with the mountains, including the story of King Juwon, the Shilla king, who supposedly lived here after handing over the Shilla Kingdom to the Goryeo Dynasty. Another legend, from which the name derived, has it that King Ju-do (the “Juwang” of the name, “wang” meaning king) of China’s Tang Dynasty hid in the mountains when he was fleeing from revolutionaries after an attempted coup.

The curious-shaped peaks and rocks of Juwangsan were created by sudden volcanic activity (apparently about 70 million years ago, when dinosaurs were hanging out on the Korean peninsula) and many years of erosion.

There are six temples and hermitages inside Juwang-an. Located just past the entrance to the park is the largest temple, Daejeonsa, which was built in the 12th year of Shilla King Munmu (A.D. 672) and named after King Ju’s son. The temple was later rebuilt in 1672 after being destroyed by war and fire. Gwangamsa and Yeonhwasa are also nestled in the mountains here, as well as the hermitages of Juwang-am and Baengnyeon-am, a hermitage of nuns dedicated to King Ju’s daughter.

All trails in the park are good for day hikes. The main trail goes around Jubongcheon in a circular route. There are four other trails, all of which can be completed in 4 to 6 hours.

The park started seeing more visitors after Kim Ki-duk used Jusanji Lake as the setting for his movie Spring, Summer, Fall, Winter, and Spring. Although the “island temple” set used in the film had to be dismantled for environmental reasons, you can still enjoy the changing seasons at this location, which is most beautiful both in the spring when the entire valley is ablaze with colorful blooms and in the fall as the autumn leaves create a gorgeous scene. The small, man-made lake (created in 1721) is located in the inner part of Juwangsan, whose trails and roads are not as well developed as the outer section of the park.

The closest town is Cheongsong, which is located about 13km (8 miles) from the park’s entrance. Intercity buses arrive at the Cheongsong Intercity Bus Terminal from Yeongcheon, Andong, Daegu, Busan, and Dong Seoul. Buses from Dong Seoul Bus Terminal run five times daily starting from 8:40am and take about 5 hours. From Cheongsong, city buses go the park entrance daily, every 20 minutes or so, and take about 30 minutes. Admission to the park is $3,200 adults, $1,200 teens, $700 children. Parking is $4,000 to $6,000, depending on the size of the car.

If you’re driving from Seoul, take the Gyeongbu Expressway (road 1) to the Shingal IC and go east on the Yeongdong Expressway (road 50). Take the Manjong IC exit to the Jung-ang highway (road 55) south toward Daegu, take the Seo-Andong (West Andong) exit, and take road 34 east, following it toward Jinan-dong and turning right on road 31, heading south toward Cheongsong. Pass Cheongsong and take road 914 east to Juwangsan.

Most people visit Juwangsan as a day trip, but you can rough it at the Sangui Campground (054/873-0014) near the entrance for only $3,000 to $6,000 per night. You have to make reservations at least 5 days in advance (up to a month in advance during popular seasons). You can also stay at any number of minbak across from the bus terminal or the small inns near the park entrance or the Yaksutang district. The most upscale accommodation in the area is the third-class Juwangsan Tourist Spa Hotel, 69-2, Wolmake-li, Cheongsong-eup, Cheongsong-gun, Gyeongsangbuk-do (054/874-7000), about 2km (1/4 miles) below the park entrance. They have doubles starting at a rack rate of $100,000, and discounts are not uncommon during the off season.

You can sample local mountain cuisine in Cheongsong, which is famous for its samgyetang, a chicken soup made with a whole young chicken, glutinous rice, garlic, ginseng, dried dates, and ginger from the Yaksutang area. You can also have sanchae bibimbap (wild mountain vegetable mixed rice bowl) or other dishes that feature vegetables from the region or songi mushrooms that grow in area pine forests.

You should enjoy the tranquillity of these mountains before the destination becomes more popular with the vacationing hordes.

SOBAEKSAN NATIONAL PARK

Sobaeksan (Mt. Sobaek) is part of the Taebaek Mountains, which are called the “backbone of Korea.” Historically, these mountain ranges have been tall barriers preventing travel or communication over them, but their rugged height proved to be ideal for many Buddhist monks, who found them to be wonderful retreats away from the material world. Many temples still remain hidden in nooks and crannies of the mountains and several national and provincial parks are part of this range.

Sobaeksan is known for its wildflowers, and their springtime blooms attract visitors from near and far.

The easiest way to get to Sobaeksan is to take a bus from downtown Yeongju or Pung- gi. You can also take an intercity bus from Danyang to Yeongju, which stops at the park's entrance. Entrance to the park is ￦1,600 adults, ￦600 teens, ￦300 children. Fees vary depending on where you enter the park. Additional admission fees for temples and historical sites are included in individual listings below.

There are five trails accessible from Gyeongsangbuk-do. Most are long but not too difficult. Among them, the Heuibangsa trail, which passes through the Heuibang Temple and the waterfall, is the most popular and the best one to take with children. Second most frequented is the trail from Samgari to Birobong. The most varied is the trail from Choamsa to Gungmangbong. For more experienced climbers, the roughest course goes from Jungnyeong through Dosolbong to Myojeokbong.

If you want to rough it, you can choose from three campsites, one below Heuibangsa, one below Birosa, and another on the west side between Birobong and the Cheondongdonggul (Cheondong Cave).

Other than the major temples listed below, there are other points of interest in Sobaeksan. The limestone caves Cheondong-donggul, Gosu-donggul, and Nodong-donggul and other points in that area are discussed in chapter 7 on Chungcheong-do in the Danyang section.

Birosa (Biro Temple)  Birosa is a temple which sits to the east, just below Birobong, the highest peak in the mountain range. Very little remains of this former Shilla Dynasty temple—just a stone marker and its flagpole supports—but the area is lovely. A waterfall lies just about 1.5km (1 mile) from the temple site. The trail from Samga-li goes past the temple en route to the top of Birobong and takes about 4 hours.

Buseoksa (Buseok Temple) ★★★  Hidden on the southern slope of Bonghwangsan, one of South Korea’s most famed temples is a bit out of the way, but worth the trip. Constructed during King Munmu’s reign in 676, the temple has been renovated several times since. A large site with gorgeous scenery, it is considered a “masculine” temple. Several national treasures are included in the temple complex, including the second-oldest wooden structure and some of the oldest murals in the country. At the entrance to the temple, you’ll see 108 steps between the Cheonwang and Anyang gates. They represent redemption from agony and evil passions through 108 cycles. The Muryangsujeong (the “Hall of Eternal Life”), which houses a clay Buddha statue made during the Goryeo Dynasty, is one of the oldest wooden structures in the country. The bus will drop you off at the small enclave of shops, restaurants, and accommodations below the temple.

Choamsa (Choam Temple)  North of Birosa in the next valley over is Choamsa, just above the village of Sunheung, which they claim is the birthplace of Goryeo King Chungyeol. The Choamsa trail, which runs from the park entrance through the Jukgye Valley to Gungmangbong and back, takes about 6 hours and is one of the prettiest in the park.

Heuibangsa (Heuibang Temple)  The most popular valley for hiking in Sobaeksan is the Heuibang Valley, where most people start their treks. When you hike along this road, you’ll reach a waterfall, Heibang Pokpo, and the temple just a few minutes farther up the trail. Built during the Shilla Dynasty, it is a smaller version of its former self after its destruction during the Korean War. The trail goes up a series of stone steps and continues to the observatory on Yeonhwabong (about a 2-hr. hike).
Pung-gi-eup, Yeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. www.pusoksa.org. Admission W2,500 adults, W1,100 teens, W600 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. From across the Yeongju Bus Terminal, take the bus to Heuibangsa, which runs about 12 times a day and takes 50 min.

YEONGJU

The gateway to Sobaeksan National Park, Yeongju is a pretty city surrounded by the Sobaek and Taebaek mountains. The Naeseongcheon Stream runs along the length of the town and is a popular gathering place for residents. The tourist information booth, 349-1, Hyucheon 2-dong (☎ 054/639-6788), can be found at Yeongju Station. The city’s website is www.yeongju.go.kr.

The Yeongju intercity bus terminal (☎ 054/1577-5844 or 631-1006) is located on the northwest corner of downtown Yeongju. The local bus terminal is on the same street but on the opposite end of the downtown area.

The city has more public markets than any other of its size. The largest one is located just north of the train station. There are several smaller markets across the north section of town. The eastern market, the Gongseol Shijang, is a nice one to go to in bad weather since it’s covered. The market snakes out toward the west until it connects to the main Jung-ang Shijang. Another popular market is the Yeongju Pung-gi Insam Shijang (☎ 054/636-7948), which specializes in all things ginseng and is one of the largest such markets in the country. It’s located right near Pung-gi Station.

Sosu Seowon ★★ The first private academy established in Korea, it was created by governor of Pung-gi County Ju Sebung in memory of Yuhyeon Anhyang, one of the greatest Confucian scholars of the Goryeo Dynasty. Because of its historic significance, the seowon escaped destruction during the nationwide closure of private academies in 1871. The old buildings are locked (opened only on ceremonial days), but the two buildings housing portraits are open daily.

152-8 Naejuk-li, Sunheung-myeon, Yeongju-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do. 054/634-3310. Admission W3,000 adults, W2,000 teens, W1,000 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Admission includes entrance to Seonbichon Sosu Museum. Summer daily 9am–6pm; winter daily 9am–5pm. From the Yeongju Bus Terminal, take the bus bound for Sunheung and get off at Sosu Seowon, which runs about 8 times a day and takes 30 min. From Pung-gi Station, buses run about 15 times a day and take 15 min.

Where to Stay

Most motels and yeogwan are concentrated just west of the Yeongju Train Station, with other accommodations scattered in the north part of town, and around the Gongseol and Jung-ang shijangs (open markets). The best accommodations in the area are in the first-class Sobaeksan Tourist Hotel, Gahung 2-dong, Yeongju (☎ 054/634-3300), located just north of the city on the way to Sobaeksan. Another good option is the Rich Hotel, Hyucheon 2-dong, Yeongju (☎ 054/638-7070). In the Buseoksa area is the Koreana Hotel, Socheon-li, Puseok-myeon, Yeongju (☎ 054/633-4445).

Where to Dine

There is no shortage of Korean restaurants that serve locally grown vegetables in the area. If you want something other than rice, though, your pickings are pretty slim. There are a handful of American-style fast-food restaurants in downtown Yeongju-si (the likes of Domino’s Pizza and Lotteria hamburgers), but you’ll find more Korean joints.

The places around Buseoksa, such as Pusoeksa Shikdang (☎ 054/633-3317) or Myeongseong Shikdang (☎ 054/633-3262), specialize in sanchae bibimbap.
The restaurants in the Sosu Seowon area specialize in traditional Korean food. A good one to try is the Cheongdari Old House (☏ 054/633-4288), where you can get a meal with vegetables usually prepared for traditional rituals.

CHEONGNYANGSAN PROVINCIAL PARK

The majority of Mt. Cheongnyang Provincial Park (☏ 054/672-4994) lies within Bonghwa County. The most famous temple in the park is Cheongnyangsa ★★★, 247 Bokgok-li, Myeongho-myeon, Bonghwa-gun, Gyeongsangbuk-do, located at the base of Yeonhwa-bong Peak. Built by Buddhist Monk Wonhyoso during the third year of the reign of Shilla King Munmu (A.D. 663), this well-located temple is best viewed in the fall when the leaves show off their color. A few hundred meters below the temple is Cheongnyang Jeongsa, a small retreat used by scholars for study and meditation in solitude. Above that is the Kimsaeng-gul, a shallow cave named after the famous Shilla Dynasty calligrapher who is said to have practiced his writing there a thousand years ago.

Several trails start from the park’s main valley road. Major trails are marked by signs, but many of the tiny trails above the temple are not. Most of the trails up to the temple are steep and difficult, but the easiest and most pleasant one is the Ipseok trail, which heads around the side of the hill near Cheongnyangsa. The trail splits into two directions, the upper trail going up to the cave while the lower trail goes to the temple.

The park is open daily 24 hours year-round. Entrance to the park is ₩1,000 adults, ₩600 teens, ₩300 children, and seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under are free.

The nearest town is Bonghwa, from which you can take a bus bound for Bukgok and get off at the park. The bus runs four times a day and takes about 30 to 40 minutes. From Andong (use the bus stop in front of the Gyobo Building between the train station and the bus terminal), take bus no. 67 (runs six times a day) to Cheongnyangsan, which takes about 50 minutes.

If you have extra time in Bonghwa County, take a visit to the Dakshil Maeul (☏ 061/472-1524, 171-1 Yugeok-li, Shingbuk-myeon, Yeongam-gun), a 500-year-old, traditional village, where the yangban class used to live. Sometimes called Jeongtong Han-gwa Maeul, the homes are a glimpse into how the upper crust of ancient Korea used to live.

MUNGYEONG SAEJAE PROVINCIAL PARK

The Mungyeong Saejae, which overlays Joryeongsan, has always been the highest and most dangerous mountain pass in the country. It was created during the reign of King Taejong of the Joseon Dynasty and was used as the principal way to get past these mountains until a new road was built through the Ihwaryeong Gyegok (valley). The Mungyeong Saejae Provincial Park ★★ (☏ 054/571-0709) has three entrance gates, which were built here with castle walls after the Japanese invasions in 1592 and 1598. They were damaged, like so many other historic relics, but were restored in 1976.

To get to the first gate, Juheul-gwan, go 2km (1¼ miles) west of Sangcho-li and 3.5km (2¼ miles) farther along a deep gorge to the north. The second gate, Jogok-gwan, is located about 3km (1½ miles) from the first gate, at the opening of a small valley. The area between Juheul-gwan and Jogok-gwan is known for its birch trees and the most beautiful path in the park. The Mungyeong Saejae Revolt Monument is on the left side of the road. The third gate, Joryeong-gwan, is 3.5km (2¼ miles) past the second gate. If you take the small trail (following the sound of the stream) instead of taking the large road to Joryeong-gwan, you’ll pass the Yeogung Waterfall, the Hyeguksa (a temple of female monks built over 1,100 years ago), and the Royal Palace before reaching the peak. of Juheulsan, which has a fantastic view. It takes about 4 hours to get to the third gate from the first one. The three entrances collectively are called the Mungyeong Samgwammun (The Three Gates/Doors of Mungyeong).

The KBS TV channel has an open-air studio inside the park, from which they shoot most of their historic dramas. It includes three palaces and many houses styled after those from the Baekje and Goryeo periods. Entrance to the KBS set is W2,000.

To get to the park, take the city bus bound for Mungyeong Gwanmun from the Mungyeong Intercity Bus Terminal and get off at the park’s parking lot (about 10 min.) or take a taxi. The park is open daily from 8am to sunset and admission is W2,000 for adults, W1,000 for teens, W750 for children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Parking costs W2,000 to W4,000 depending on the size of your vehicle.

There are plenty of minbak and eating options all along the road on the entryway to the park. A cheap sleeping option is the Ongdalsaem Hwangto Minbak ★ (☎ 054/572-3555, 345-10 Hacho-li, Mungyeong-eup, Mungyeong-si, Gyeongsangbuk-do; www.come2mk.com), a family-run place that has Korean-style rooms starting at W30,000. Look for the friendly orange building on the right side of the road on the way up to the gates.

GEUMOSAN PROVINCIAL PARK
About 5km (3 miles) west of the small industrial city of Gumi is the Geumosan Provincial Park. Local legend claims that a monk was walking through here and was looking for a place to build a temple. As he was passing the mountain, he saw a crow lit with the golden rays of the setting sun, hence the name “geumo,” which means “golden crow.” The temple he built at the base of the mountain is now gone, but the name stuck.

As you make your way up the mountain, you’ll know you’re halfway to the top when you reach the Myeonggeum Waterfall. It used to be called the Dalsehye Waterfall until 1931, when the Myeonggeum characters were etched on the cliff to the east of the falling water. To the right of the waterfall is Doseon Cave, where legend has it that Monk Doseon achieved enlightenment. Nearby (just below the cave) is the temple Haeunsa, which was originally constructed in the late Shilla period, destroyed in 1592, reconstructed in 1925, and restored in 1980.

Another hour’s climb from the waterfall leads to the standing statue of Buddha carved in relief on a large rock. Not the best Buddha carving in the country, it was made during the Goryeo Dynasty. Nearby is the hermitage Yaksa-am, built to honor Monk Uisang’s attainment of nirvana. Although it was reportedly built during the Shilla Dynasty, no relics have been found to support that claim.

At the entrance to the park is a small tourist village with a cluster of restaurants, a small amusement park for kids, and a few yeogwan. Admission to the park is W600 for adults, W400 for teens, W200 for children, free for seniors 65 and older and kids 6 and under. The park is open daily from March to October, 9am to 6pm, closing an hour earlier November through February.

The best way to get here is to take bus no. 12 or 12-1 from Gumi; both run daily, every 10 to 15 minutes. For those who don’t want to hike up the mountain, a cable car now runs up the incline to the entrance to Haeunsa. The ride costs W4,500 round-trip, W3,000 one-way. It runs daily, every 15 minutes from 9am to 4:30pm.

ULJIN
A traditional farming and fishing region, the county and city of Uljin have seen growth since the 1980s, thanks to its nuclear power plant. Being on the coast, it has some nice sandy beaches with fresh seafood restaurants and natural hot springs. Major attractions are all accessible by bus, which runs along the main street in town.

Uljin’s most famous tourist attraction is the limestone cave, Seongnyu-gul, which got its name (meaning “the cave where the holy Buddha stayed”) because it was the hiding place of an important Buddha statue during the Imjin Waeran. Although it’s not the most spectacular of South Korea’s caves, it may be the most famous due to the fact that it was the first one opened to tourists in 1963. The area surrounding the cave is blanketed with juniper trees, and a riverside walkway leads to the entrance. Inside, they’ve lit up the strange formations and columns with colored lights and given them all amusement park–like names. With a cool, humid interior, be aware that there are a couple of low points, which may be difficult if you’re tall. There are also a couple of narrow passageways, one especially where you’ll have to waddle a bit to squeeze through. Short bus rides are available from Uljin. The cave is open daily from April to October, 8am to 6pm, until 5pm November to March. Entrance costs W2,200 for adults, W1,100 for youth.

The coastal road from the town of Uljin to Bonghwa twists and turns through Bukyeong Valley ★★, which has some spectacular scenery in all four seasons. Be aware that if you visit the area during high tourist season in the summer (July–Aug), you’ll have to pay a small admission fee to the Bukyeong Valley County Park.

Hidden inside the valley at the upper part of the park is Bulyeongsan, the “Buddha Shadow Temple.” Originally built in 651 by Uisang (its original name was Guryongsan, or “Nine Dragons Temple”), the temple casts a shadow on the lake below that resembles the shape of the Buddha (hence its new name). A well-kept temple on the hillside, it takes 30 minutes by bus from Uljin.

If you continue north, you’ll come upon Deokgu Valley, which stretches across Bukmyeon. This valley starts a couple of kilometers from Eunghongsan to Bugul-li and its nuclear power plant. A thick forest, the most beautiful spot in the valley, is home to Deokgu Hot Spring, the country’s only natural open-air spa. The spa was discovered by hunters about 600 years ago while they were out hunting wild pig. Unfortunately, the people who run the hot spring have ruined the view with a shiny insulated pipe that runs down the valley, bringing the hot water down to the bathhouse. It’s popular in the winter as people soak in the 105°F (41°C) water while surrounded by the snowy landscape. Winter is also a great time to enjoy the local snow crabs while they are in season.

The other oncheon (hot spring) in the area is the Baekam Hot Spring in Onjeong. This was found by a monk named Baekam during the Shilla period. Here, at one of the best known oncheon in the country, the water is about 109°F (43°C) and has a high concentration of sulfur.

After you’re done with all this soaking around, be sure to stop by the Wolsong-jeong ★★, built in 1326, during the Joseon period. The pavilion is located a few kilometers north of Pyeonghae, a small farming community, and offers great views of the surrounding mountains.

Also in the county is Mangyang-jeong, a pavilion originally built at the foot of Hyunjongsan in 1858. It was later moved to its current site and expanded in 1958. The name mangyang means “boundless ocean” due to the view that stretches out far into the East Sea.

Uljin’s Tourism Office can be reached at ☎ 054/782-1501. There is also a tourist info office at the Baekam Hot Springs (☎ 054/789-5480).

GETTING THERE Buses from DongSeoul Bus Terminal to the Uljin Intercity Bus Terminal (☎ 054/782-2971) run from 7:10am to 8:05pm. The 4½-hour ride costs
Where to Stay
Although not a major tourist destination yet, Uljin has a range of accommodations to fit any budget. The most upscale is the Deokgu Spa Hotel (☎ 054/782-0671; 575 Deokgu-li, Buk-myeon, Uljin-gun), which has both Western and ondol-style rooms starting at ₩120,000.

Hotel Sung Ryu Park (☎ 054/787-3711; 968-5 Onjeong-li, Onjeong-myeon, Uljin-gun) is a large seven-story building with an oncheon bath. They also have both Western-style and ondol rooms starting at ₩75,000.

For more budget digs, the M Motel (☎ 054/783-6601; 288-3 Eupnae-li, Uljin-eup, Uljin-gun) is a comfortable love motel that has rooms starting at ₩30,000.

Where to Dine
Being on the eastern coast of the peninsula, there is no shortage of good seafood restaurants here, but the regional specialty is daegae (snow crab). Because of their size and popularity, they’re quite expensive—₩70,000 to ₩120,000 for a meal. You’ll start with gaejang (raw crab seasoned with sesame oil, salt, chile powder, and so on) and finish off the meal with daegae tahng (a hot pot of crab and other seafood).

A good place that specializes in crab and other seafood from the area is the Haedong Sanghwaeg Daegae Maeul (☎ 054/781-1585; 32-48 Beonji, Jukbyeon-li, Jukbyeon-myeon, Uljin-gun), located inside the Jukbyeon Seafood Market.

For hwae, try Namdo Hwae Iyagi (☎ 054/782-2090, 125-7 Nagok-li, Buk-myeon), which is located overlooking the beach and is open daily from 8:30am to 10pm. Also, there’s a cropping of seafood restaurants in the alley behind the Uljin Shijang (☎ 054/783-2988), where you can see vendors hawk their catch of the day, as well as fresh songi mushrooms from nearby mountains.

ULLEUNG-DO
Next to Jeju-do, Ulleung-do ★★ is probably the second-most-famous island in South Korea. Like its larger cousin, it was created due to volcanic activity. But unlike Jeju-do, Ulleung-do was a result of a violent volcanic eruption, resulting in extreme cliffs and high rocks. Most places where the land meets the ocean are high cliffs, but there is a village along the coastline on the slope of Seonginbong peak, the highest point on the island.

On the north side, there are a couple of basins created from a collapsed crater, the Nari Basin and the Albong Basin. Mainly a fishing village, the island may possibly be the quietest place in South Korea on a dark, off-season evening.

Sightseeing boats make regular 2- to 3-hour tours around the island, starting at Dodong Harbor. In most months the boat leaves at 9am, with a late-afternoon boat during good weather, and more frequent schedules during high tourist season in July and August. The tour costs ₩18,000 for adults and ₩9,000 for kids.

Boats to the island leave once a day (twice a day from the end of July to Aug) from Pohang Ferry Terminal (☎ 054/242-5111) or Mukho Ferry Terminal (☎ 054/531-5891). Most boats leave at 10am with a return trip from Ulleung Ferry Terminal (☎ 054/791-0831) around 4:30pm, but check weather conditions and confirm times with the Korea Travel Phone (☎ 1330) before setting out. Regular fares range from ₩45,000 to ₩55,000, with lower prices for children and teens and a slightly higher price for a “superior-grade” seat.
There is a tourist information center when you arrive at Dodong Harbor. Not all of the staff are fluent in English, but they will provide you with maps and bus time schedules (super-important since schedules are irregular and change often), and even make sleeping arrangements, should you wish to overnight on the island. Because it’s so far away from the mainland, goods on the island tend to be more expensive. If you didn’t bring enough won with you, you can exchange money at the Nonghyeop Bank in Dodong-li.

Exploring Ulleung-do

Bongnae Waterfall ★ The only source of drinking water on the island, this trilevel fall is about 25m (82 ft.) high. When you pass the entrance, follow the trail up around a reservoir, but stop at the Pungnyeol, a small hole in the hillside that blows a stream of constant cold air from April to September, especially nice during a summer hike up. Next to the Pungnyeol is a pretty cedar forest, which is worth a stop on the way to see the falls. Admission W1,200 adults, W700 teens, W600 children, free for kids 6 and under. From Dodong Harbor, buses run daily 7:30am–8:10pm on an irregular schedule, but usually every 45 min.–1 hr. It takes 20 min. by taxi.

Dodong Yaksu (Mineral Spring) Park Many locals visit the mineral spring here to have a healthful drink early in the morning. There is a path that leads up to the western ridge for a spectacular view, but no one uses it anymore, since they can take the cable car instead (W6,500 round-trip). Also in the park is the Dokdo Museum built to commemorate Korea’s independence and to disprove Japan’s claim to the island (see below). The park is located up the alley to the side of the island’s hospital, a 20- to 30-min. walk from Dodong Harbor. Alternatively, take a bus from Dodong going to Jeodong and get off at the hospital. Park daily 24 hr.; museum daily 9am–6pm daily. Both closed Jan 1, Lunar New Year, and Chuseok.

Dokdo Dokdo is an island on the easternmost end of South Korea, located 87km (54 miles) southeast of Ulleung-do. Dokdo encompasses two islets, Dondo and Seodo, as well as 36 small rock islets. After the Russo-Japanese War of 1905, Japan unilaterally transferred Dokdo to the Shimane Prefecture, renaming it Dakesima. The issue remains unresolved. If you wish to visit the island, you have to apply at least 15 days in advance via fax to the Ulleung-gun Administrative Office (054/790-6420) or arrange a tour with Segye Tour in Seoul (02/6900-9010; www.segyetour.com). It’s much easier to take one of the two daily ferries that circle the island. Ferries run irregularly, depending on the weather, but are scheduled for 7:30am and 2:30pm. 3-to 4-hr. ferry ride W37,500 round-trip for adults; 8-hr. ferry tour W35,000.

There are no fancy accommodations and only four hotels on Ulleung-do. The rooms generally start at W50,000, but go up to W60,000 during high season, which is from late July to August. The fanciest place on the whole island is the third-class Ulleung Marina Tourist Hotel (054/791-0020 or 4; fax 054/791-0025). Rooms start at W86,000, but can be discounted during off season (late fall to spring).

There are dozens of yeogwan and minbak that offer traditional ondol rooms, generally concentrated around Dodong-li, but some in Jeodong-li. Most of them run about W30,000 to W35,000 per room. Only certain rooms in the inns have private bathrooms, so be sure to request one, if you wish. None of them takes credit cards, so be sure to bring enough cash to cover your expenses. Minbak owners will greet you as you get off the ferry and try to get you to stay in their place. They generally charge about...
25,000 per room, but the rates can be negotiated down off season. A variety of minbak can be found in Jeo-dong, Sa-dong, Namyang, Namseo, Taeha, Cheonbu, Hyeongpo, and Nari-dong.

An excellent pension on the island is the Chusan-ilga Pension (Chusanilga Pension; telephone: 054/791-7788; www.chusanilga.com), with a lovely view of the surrounding sea. It may look like an old hanok on the outside, but they’ve added modern amenities on the inside (though they have only Korean-style ondol rooms).

If you want to camp on the beach, you can do so at Naesujeon and Sarong-li, which have bathrooms and showers available in the summer. More primitive are the camping facilities at Namyang-dong and Nari-dong, but camping at Nari is free. During winter, many of the accommodations close, but you’ll still be able to find a place to stay, since there will be many fewer visitors.

Where to Dine

The local foods of Ulleung-do include honghapbap (rice with mussels), ttgaebibap (rice with a variety of small shellfish), yakso bulgogi (marinated beef from cattle raised on medicinal herbs), ojingeuh bulgogi (barbecued sweet-and-spicy squid), and sanchae bibimbap (their version of mixed rice bowl with vegetables unique to the island). Many restaurants close in the winter, but you’ll still be able to find enough seafood and squid to sate your appetite. To remember your trip, you can buy some dried cuttlefish (“squid jerky”) or the famous Ulleung-do hobak yut (pumpkin taffy).

A place known for its local cuisine is 99 Shikdang (99 Shikdang; telephone: 054/791-2287), located on the way up Seonginbong peak. They have ojingeuh bulgogi for W8,000 and ttagaebibap for W13,000.

If you want to eat in Dodong, try the Bobae Shikdang (Bobae Shikdang; telephone: 054/791-2683), where the specialty is mussels. You can get an order of honghapbap for W10,000. A bit more pricey, but fancier, is the honghapbap at Haeun Shikdang (Haeun Shikdang; telephone: 054/791-7789) for W13,000. They also offer other seafood dishes, including the ojingeuh bulgogi for W10,000.

For a taste of the tender “medicinal cows,” look no further than Ulleung Yakso Sutbul Garden (Ulleung Yakso Sutbul Garden; telephone: 054/791-0990), which serves locally grown beef meals from W6,000 to W15,000. The yakso bulgogi is also tasty at Subok Shikdang (Subok Shikdang; telephone: 054/791-4440), which serves an organic version of the dish for W15,000.

In Nari-dong, try the flavors of the regional mountain vegetables at Sanmaeul Shik-dang (Sanmaeul Shik-dang; telephone: 054/791-4643). Their sanchae bibimbap is W6,000, while their sanchae jeongshik goes for W10,000.

5 JINJU

Jinju (meaning “pearl” in Korean; the name was formerly spelled Chinju) has a pretty name and is an equally beautiful spot. An ancient city with a long history, it was founded during the Gaya Period and received its present name during the third year of the reign of Goryeo King Taejo. The city suffered through two battles during the Imjin Waeran of the 1590s—the first time Jinju was able to defend itself against the Japanese, but the second time it fell after a prolonged siege of Jinju Fortress. In 1812, Jinju was the center of an ineffectual but memorable peasant uprising, which foreshadowed a larger rebellion.
Beginning in 1895, it was the capital of Gyeongsangnam-do until Busan outgrew it and took over in 1925.

Despite its volatile history, Jinju has been the cultural and transportation center of the area for centuries. The vibrant arts and culture scene comes alive during the annual Gaecheon Yesulje Festival in early October. The festival began in 1949 to commemorate the Korean victory in the Jinjuseong Battle of 1592, but has grown into the best arts festival in the country. It has been held at the Jinju Fortress every year since, except in 1950, during the Korean War, and during the military coup in 1979. Highlights include historical costume plays, classical Korean musical performances, and fireworks. It coincides with the Jinju Namgang Lantern Festival and the National Bullfighting Contest. If you're in the city in the spring, don't miss the annual Jinju Bibimbap Festival, which highlights the city's traditional food and happens the fourth week of May.

The Nam River snakes through the city's center and determines the orientation of its buildings. The city is a convenient starting point for exploring the eastern section of Jirisan National Park.

GETTING THERE

The airport in Jinju is the Sacheon Airport, 1720-1, Guam-li, Sacheon-eup, Sacheon-si (☏ 055/831-9300; http://sacheon.airport.co.kr), about 20km (12 miles) from Jinju-si. Currently, the airport serves about seven flights daily from Seoul's Gimpo Airport and one from Jeju-do by Asiana and Korean Airlines. Taxis to Jinju and other long distances can be found right in front of the terminals, while short-distance taxis are to the right on the national road. Buses from Sacheon to Jinju (about a 25-min. ride) are cheaper, only W3,000 for adults and W2,000 for children.

The Jinju Train Station (☏ 055/1544-7788) is located on the south side of the river. There are five trains daily to and from Seoul—four first-class Mugunghwa trains (W27,700 for a half-hour) and one special-class Saemaeul train (W41,100 for 5 hr.)—and four to and from Busan. Other trains go once a day to Suncheon, Masan, and Gwangju, with three trains daily to Mokpo.

The Jinju Express Bus Terminal (☏ 055/752-5167 or 8) is right near the train station. Buses from Seoul's Gangnam Express Bus Terminal leave daily every 20 to 30 minutes. The almost 4-hour trip costs about W20,000. Daily buses leave about every 10 minutes from Busan's Seobu Terminal. Rides last about 90 minutes and cost W6,900. There are also frequent daily buses from Masan, which are about an hour long and cost W4,000, as well as daily buses from Gwangju, Daegu, Daejeon, Suwon, and Incheon.

The intercity bus terminal (☏ 055/1688-0841) is located on the north bank of the river and has buses to and from Samcheonpo, Namhae, Hadong, and Tongyeong, as well as other nearby areas.

GETTING AROUND

There are local buses available with frequent service within the city and outlying areas. As in most small South Korean cities, the buses have postings only in Korean and the drivers generally can’t speak English. Still, buses are the least expensive way to get around. Your best bet is to ask for bus information at your hotel or at the tourist information office (see below).

Taxis are available outside the airport and the bus and train terminals, but drivers generally won’t know English. It’s best to have your destination written in Korean or have practiced the proper Korean pronunciation so that the driver knows where you want to go—again, ask at your hotel or the tourist information office. Yellow taxis are less expensive than the deluxe black taxis, which can cost up to 20% more.

DOWNTOWN JINJU
Jinju is small enough to explore on foot, especially since many sites of interest are located in the vicinity of the Jinju Fortress. Be sure to pick up a detailed city map at the tourist information office before putting on your walking shoes.

Fast Facts Jinju

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs There are a handful of banks in the downtown area of Jinju, along the main street; the most convenient is the Foreign Exchange Bank across from the intercity bus terminal (near the fortress). They’re open Monday to Friday 9:30am to 4:30pm.

Internet Access Most large hotels and even a couple of the lower-priced motels and youth hostels offer Internet access. If you don’t have your own computer, your cheapest option is the PC bahngs in town. Just look for the letters PC; most of them are found on the second or third floors above restaurants and other businesses.

EXPLORING JINJU

Gyeongsang National University Museum ★ Finds If old relics are your thing, look no further than this research museum located on the sixth floor of the university’s main library building. With over 8,000 artifacts dating back to Korea’s prehistory, most of the collection, including helmets (for both horses and humans), swords, ornaments, and pottery, are from the Gaya Period. Only about 500 pieces are on display at any given time, but it is an active archaeological museum and an interesting glimpse into eras past.

Gyeongsang University 900, Gajwa-dong, Jinju-si, Gyeongsangnam-do. ☎ 055/751-5120. Free admission. Mon–Sat 10am–6pm. Closed holidays. From the Jinju Intercity Bus Terminal, take bus no. 26 or any local bus that goes to Samcheonpo. From the express bus terminal, take bus no. 33. From the train station, take bus no. 17, 21, 22, 221, or 226.

Jinjuseong (Fortress/Castle) ★★★ Originally built as Geoyeolseong (Geoyeol Castle) during the Three Kingdoms Period, it was later renamed Chokseokseong in the Goryeo Dynasty and finally Jinjuseong during the Joseon Dynasty. Although it’s called a “castle,” it mainly served as a fortress, defending the Honam region from Japanese invaders during the Imjin Waeran. One of the best renovated fortresses in the country, Jinjuseong sits on the north side of the Nam-gahng overlooking the city. Inside the east gate is the famous Chokseong-nu pavilion. Other outlooks and pavilions are along the fortress wall, with the highest one at the southwest corner. Also inside the walls are a memorial to Kim Shi-min, the Uigisa Shrine, Seojangdae, Bukjangdae, the Changyolsa shrine, the temple Hoguksa, and an outdoor stage. The complex is spectacular at night when its lights are reflected in the river below.

The Jinju National Museum (☎ 055/742-5951; http://jinju.museum.go.kr) offers an in-depth history of the Imjin Waeran. Hours are Tuesday to Friday 9am to 6pm, until 7pm on weekends; the museum closes at 5pm November to February. It’s closed January Buses run daily 6am–11pm, every 5 min.; get off at National Agricultural Cooperative Federation, pass Jinju Bridge, and walk 3 min.

Jinju Hyangto Mindokgwan (Local Folk Collection) ★★

If you leave the fortress from the east gate, this folk museum is located just down the street on the second floor of the Cultural Center. Once owned and operated by a local shoemaker, Kim Changmun, the small museum has a collection of over 20,000 pieces of furniture, bowls, ornaments, and other household items. Unfortunately, only a small fraction of the craft items are on display at any given time. If the doors are locked during business hours, ring the bell for someone to let you in.

10-4, Bonseong-dong, Jinju-si, Gyeongsangnam-do. ☎ 055/746-6828. Admission ₩1,000 adults, ₩500 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Tues–Wed and Fri–Sun 9am–6pm. Closed Jan 1, Lunar New Year, and Chuseok. A 10-min. walk from the Jinju Intercity Bus Terminal.

WHERE TO STAY

Most of the city’s love motels and inexpensive yeogwan are concentrated along the riverfront near the bus terminal. There is also a good selection of yeogwan a couple of blocks from the fortress’s east gate. Rooms generally start at ₩30,000 and you shouldn’t have any trouble just walking in and booking a place, except in October, when the city is crawling with festival-goers.

Asia Lakeside Hotel ★★

The only downside to the Asia Lakeside, Jinju’s newest and only boutique hotel, is its location. Although the setting on Jinyang Lake is beautiful, it’s not convenient to downtown. But if you’re okay with that, it’s a great place to stay. Rooms are airy and designed to optimize natural light, and the furnishings are modern and stylish. All rooms have nice views of the man-made reservoir and balconies from which you can enjoy the surroundings. Beds are comfortable with super-soft bedding, and bathrooms are surprisingly well appointed. The hotel bar even has a pretty good wine list.

1077-1, Panmun-dong, Jinju-si, Gyeongsangnam-do. ☎ 055/746-3734. Fax 055/746-4505. www.asiahotel.co.kr. 30 units. ₩120,000 and up standard double or ondol room; ₩350,000 and up suite. AE, MC, V. Amenities: 2 restaurants, bar, karaoke club. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, Internet, minibar.

Dongbang Tourist Hotel ★

Located right on the river, near the intercity bus terminal, the hotel is one of the only tourist-class hotels in the city. The rooms are spacious and comfortable, though not terribly exciting (although the view of the river is lovely). The furnishings are a bit dated, but still clean and well maintained. High-speed Internet access is available in all rooms, or you can pay to use a computer in the business center. Staff speak English and are quite friendly and helpful.

803-4, Okbongnam-dong, Jinju-si, Gyeongsangnam-do. ☎ 055/743-0131. Fax 055/742-6786. 125 units. ₩106,000 standard or ondol room; ₩165,000 and up suite. 10% VAT and 10% service charge not included. AE, MC, V. Amenities: 3 restaurants, bar, cafe, lounge; health club; room service; sauna; smoke-free rooms. In room: A/C, TV, Internet, fridge, hair dryer, minibar.

WHERE TO DINE

Jinju is known throughout the country for its bibimbap (sometimes called ggotbap or “flower rice”), a mixed rice bowl with a variety of vegetables. A couple of restaurants that specialize in bibimbap are Cheonhwang Shikdang (☎ 055/741-2646), located near Jung-ang Shijang, just a block off the main drag, and Jeil Shikdang (☎ 055/741-5591), right next to the fortress and the folk museum.

Other specialties of the area include heotjesatbap, a “fake” rice meal traditionally made for the ancestral memorial table by starving scholars. Another Jinju favorite is jang-uh gui, grilled eel. A concentration of restaurants specializing in the fish dish is located along the waterfront near the fortress. They are all very similar to each other and charge a universal price of about ₩13,000 for an eel meal. Yujeong Jang-uh (☎ 055/746-9235) is one such restaurant that specializes in both freshwater and saltwater eel. The restaurant doesn’t have an English sign, but just look for the ornate, traditional-looking house just west of the bridge. A meal will easily feed two, especially if you pay the extra ₩1,000 for rice. The menu on the wall, thankfully, is in English.

For a totally different meal, you can have Vietnamese cuisine at the chain place Hoa Binh, 768-4 Pyeonggeo-dong, Jinju-si (☎ 055/747-4554), a block from the river. A bowl of pho (Vietnamese rice noodles) will set you back ₩7,900.

JINJU AFTER DARK
Jinju is a conservative little city and doesn’t have an exciting nightlife, but there are plenty of hof-style bars where you can grab beer, or cafes where you can get an overpriced cup of coffee. Most of them are in the downtown area, where the streets are closed off to cars at night, with some isolated action around the universities.

SHOPPING

Since Jinju opened its first silk factory in 1910, it has been the center of silk production in the country. Now the city produces the majority of the country’s silk, as well as being one of the five largest silk producers in the world, exporting the fabric to Europe and the Americas. You can find the best deals on locally produced silk at the small silk center in front of the Jinju Fortress. The city holds an annual Silk Festival in October, at the same time as most of their main festivals.

If you’re looking for antique paintings, crafts, and sculptures, head over to the Insa-dong Antique Street, which is located behind the General Social Welfare Center, near the fortress. There you’ll find more than 20 shops carrying things like stone sculptures, ceramics, silver pieces, lacquer and inlaid boxes, and more.

The city’s central market, the Jung-ang Shijang, is on the east side across the main road, while the principal produce market is closer to the intercity bus terminal. The underground market, located south of Jinju’s central intersection, has everything from traditional medicine to cosmetics on sale.

6 TONGYEONG

Situated on the coast of Gyeongsangnam-do, Tongyeong is a gorgeous seaside city in the middle of Hallyeo National Maritime Park. It covers the southern part of the Goseong peninsula and includes 151 islands (only 43 of which are inhabited). Gwang-do and Dosan are to the north, while the west faces Namhae.

With warm currents from the East Sea, Tongyeong has been an ideal fishing location. In addition to having a warmer weather, the area is one of the rainiest in the country. Because of its seaside location, its picturesque attributes also bring more typhoon dangers. Fishing, oyster farming, and other food processing are the city’s major industries.
When Japan invaded Korea in 1592, the naval fleet, commanded by Admiral Yi Sun-shin (sometimes spelled Lee Sun-shin), defeated the invading navy. The following year, King Sunjo appointed Admiral Yi as chief commander of the naval forces of the three provinces (a position created just for him). Naval forces were moved soon afterward in 1604. In mid-August of every year, there is a Battle of Hansan Festival (Hansandae Festival) ★★★★, in honor of Admiral Yi’s victory. Other than the re-creation of the battle, any other smaller festivals and events happen simultaneously and it’s well worth a visit.

After the Japanese Imperial period, the city was the center of marine traffic to Masan, Busan, Samcheonpo, Yeosu, Mokpo, and trade with Japan and China. Now that the Namhae Expressway has been built, Tongyeong has seen less marine traffic, but still has one of the most beautiful harbors in the country.

In the spring or fall, the city comes alive with the Tongyeong International Music Festival (www.timf.org), a classical music event created in honor of native son and composer Yun Isang. The dates aren’t consistent every year, so check the schedule before making a special trip.

Exploring Tongyeong’s best sites, the outlying islands, requires at least an overnight stay to catch the early-morning ferries out and back.

GETTING THERE
If you wish to travel by air, the nearest airport is Jinju’s Sacheon Airport (see the Jinju section earlier for information). From the airport, catch a limousine bus to Tongyeong.

There are no direct trains to Tongyeong. The closest train stations are at Jinju, Haman, or Masan, and you’ll have to take a bus from there.

The most convenient way to get to Tongyeong is by bus. Buses travel regularly from both Seoul’s Nambu Terminal at Seocho (11 times daily) and the express bus terminal at Gangnam (14 times daily). The ride takes about 4½ hours. There are 8 express buses and 14 regular buses a day from Daejeon and about 18 buses from Daegu’s Seobu Terminal. Buses from Busan’s Seobu Terminal run daily from 6:30am to 10:30pm about every 20 minutes. From Masan’s Nambu Terminal, there are daily buses from 5:10am to 9:15pm every 10 minutes. Buses from Jinju run about 63 times a day from 6am to 9pm.

Driving from Seoul, take the Gyeongbu Expressway to the Tongyeong-Daejeon Expressway, heading toward Tongyeong to the Tongyeong IC. From anywhere in the Gyeongsang-do area, take the Jungbu Expressway to the Namhae Expressway to the Tongyeong-Daejeon Expressway, heading toward Tongyeong. From Jeolla-do, take the Honam Expressway to the Namhae Expressway to the Tongyeong-Daejeon Expressway, heading toward Tongyeong.

GETTING AROUND
There are local buses available to get you where you want to go, but Tongyeong’s major attractions are all within walking distance of each other.

You can catch a ferry to some of Tongyeong’s outlying islands or an excursion tour around the area. The best thing to do is to get one early in the morning so that you’ll have plenty of time to explore. Island destinations from Tongyeong’s Ferry Terminal (☏ 055/644-0364) include Dumi-do, Maemul-do, Mireuk-do, Bijin-do, Yeonndae-do, Yeonhwa-do, Yokji-do, Chu-do, and Chubong-do. Tour boats usually leave from the Excursion Boat Terminal in Donam-dong, while long-distance boats dock at Ganguan Port. Explanations for specific island destinations are below, in the “Outlying Islands” section.
VISITOR INFORMATION There is a tourist information office ( tel 055/650-4584) outside of the bus terminal and it's open Tuesday to Sunday from 9am to 8pm (closed on national holidays and the day after). The staff's English isn't great, but they do have maps in English. There is also a tourist information booth at the excursion boat terminal at Donam-dong ( tel 055/644-7200) and at the Hakseom Resort ( tel 055/640-5245). The city's official site is at http://eng.tongyeong.go.kr.

EXPLORING TONGYEONG

Cheongyeolsa ★ This temple shrine was built during the reign of Joseon King Seonjo in 1606 by General Commander Yi Un-Ryong to memorialize Admiral Yi Sun-shin's distinguished service to the country. Follow that? The temple site currently has 17 buildings, including five gates, an exhibition hall, shrines, and a pavilion. It also has on-site the Eight Gifts from the Ming Dynasty and several other cultural assets. 213 Myeongjeong-dong, Tongyeong-si. ( tel 055/645-3229). Located up the hill from Sebyeong-gwan (see directions below). Alternatively, from the bus terminal, take bus no. 12, 22, or 32 to Cheongyeolsa.

Nammangsan Park ★★ At Mt. Nammang, there is a park from which you can enjoy a view of the city, located right next to Ganguan Port. On top of the hill are Suhyangjeong Pavilion and a bronze statue of Joseon-era naval hero General Yi Sun-shin. Under the pavilion is an outdoor sculpture garden with 15 works by sculptors who participated in the Tongyeong International Sculpture Symposium. 62-1 Dongho-dong, Tongyeong-si. ( tel 055/640-5371) (Korean). Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the bus terminal, take bus no. 10, 15, 18, 20, 26, 30, 35, 38, 38-1, 39, 39-1, 40, 45, or 46 and get off at Jung-ang Shijang (Central Market) and walk 5 min.

Sebyeong-gwan ★ Sebyeong-gwan served as the naval command center for the southern provinces from 1597 to 1896. One of the oldest and largest wooden structures left in the country, it was built in 1604 by General Yi Gyeong-jun, commander of the naval forces during the Joseon period. It was last renovated in 1973, but there are plans to restore it to its former glory. 62-1 Manhwa-dong, Tongyeong-si. ( tel 055/650-5365) (Korean only). Free admission. Mar–Oct Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; Nov–Feb Tues–Sun 10am–5pm. Closed holidays. From bus terminal, take bus no. 10, 15, 18, 20, 26, 30, 35, 38, 38-1, 39, 39-1, 40, 45, or 46 and get off at Jung-ang Shijang (Central Market). It’s a 5-min. walk from there.

Mireuk-do Mireuk-do, an island just off the coast of Tongyeong, creates a natural barrier of protection for Tongyeong. A small mountain on the island, Mireuksan, shields the mainland from the ocean winds. Mireuksan is known as the home base of the Mireuk Buddhists. It is connected to the mainland via an undersea tunnel (Pandalegul), and by the Chun-gmu and Tongyeong bridges.

On the north side of the island is the temple Yonghwasan, which was built in 632 (its original name was Cheongsusa). When the temple was rebuilt after a fire in 1628, its name was changed. The current buildings are reconstructions done in the 19th century. Instead of the usual deva gate guards, this temple is guarded by four figures from Emperor Jing's tomb in Xian China.

From Yonghwasan, a trail goes up to the top of the mountain, and along the way you’ll pass the hermitage Gwaneum-am. This meditation center is dedicated to the goddess of mercy, Gwaneum. Just beyond and above it is the older Doseol-am, from where you can get a wonderful view of the island and Geoje-do. A hike past the temple and hermitages to the top should take about 2 hours round-trip.

Those not wanting to make the trek up on foot can take the cable car at San 63-26, Donam-dong (тел. 055/649-3804 or -3805) for just ₩5,500 round-trip (₩3,000 for youth). The cable car runs 9:30am to 5pm October to February, until 6pm March and September, and until 7pm April to August. The last ride up is an hour before closing.

Outlying Islands
To get to any of the nearby islands, you’ll have to take a boat. I’ve tried to make it easier for you by listing which terminal you should head for to catch a boat to each island. To get to the Tongyeong Ferry Terminal, take a Donam-dong–bound bus from the bus terminal and get off at the Beach Hotel in Seoho-dong, Walk 5 minutes to the ferry terminal, located across the street from the Seoho Shijang (Seoho Market). To get to the Excursion Boat Terminal, take a Donam-dong–bound bus from the bus terminal and get off at the ferry terminal.

Hansan-do ★ Located in the middle of Hallyeo Haesang National Park, Hansan-do is a historically important site. This is where General Yi Sun-shin fought off the Japanese with his turtle ships (p. 232) during the Imjin Waeran Japanese invasion (1592–98). In spite of its history, modern tourists are more attracted to the oysters, pearls, and seaweed grown here. The only place that belies its past history is the Jeseung-dang, a re-creation of Admiral Yi’s command headquarters, which were moved from Yeosu and housed here for 4 years, before being moved again to Sebyeong-gwan in Tongyeong. The island’s other tribute to the naval war hero is an unfortunate lighthouse at the harbor in the shape of a turtle ship.

Admission ₩1,000 adults, ₩500 teens, ₩300 children, free for kids 6 and under. Daily 9am–6pm. From the ferry terminal at Seoho-dong, ships run every 90 min. and the ride lasts 25 min. Car ferries are also available from here. From the excursion boat terminal at Donam-dong, boats travel frequently and the ride lasts 15 min.

Somaemul-do ★★★ This tiny island is on the outer edge of Hallyeo Haesang National Park, but the view is worth the ride. To get to the peak of the island, Mangtae-bong, you’ll take a 30-minute stroll through woods filled with 600-year-old camellias (flowering plants). From Somaemul-do you can get to its tiny neighbor Deungdace-sum (sometimes called “Haegum-do”). This even-tinier island takes only 20 minutes or so to explore, but the scenery is beautiful. The only facility is a small lighthouse built by the Japanese during their colonization of Korea (1910–45). Twice a day, when the tide ebbs, the receding water reveals a gravel road between the two islands—just be careful not to get stuck when the tide comes back in. Somaemul-do is a wonderful place to enjoy the sunrise or sunset, or to visit when the camellias are in bloom late October through early November. But be forewarned that there are no restaurants on the island, so you may want to pack a lunch.

From the ferry terminal at Seoho-dong, there are 2 boats on weekdays at 7am and 2pm. On weekends, there is also an 11am boat. The ride takes 80 min. and costs ₩13,200 for adults, ₩12,000 for teens, ₩6,600 for children. Check the schedule at 055/645-3717 (Korean only) before leaving. From the excursion boat terminal at Donam-dong, there is an excursion ferry that goes to the island via Haegeumgang, Maemul-do, and Jeseung-dang. The 4-hr. tour runs every hour 9am–6pm in the summer and 10am–3pm during winter. The tour costs ₩19,500 for adults, ₩13,000 for children. Check the schedule at 055/646-2307 (Korean) before leaving.
Yokji-do ★★ Finds The largest island in the Yeonhwa archipelago, it is located about 32km (20 miles) from Tongyeong. It used to be called “Nok-do” (Deer Island) because of the large number of deer that roamed the island, but the population was greatly reduced during the 16th century. That’s when Japanese sailors began hunting the deer for their antlers, which they then sent to the Japanese royal palace. Fish farming is the principal source of income here, and regular farming (especially of sweet potatoes) is also practiced. All the island’s beaches are pebbled, the largest being Deokdong Beach, which is full of black stones called bamjagal (night pebbles). Outshone by its more famous neighbors, Yokji-do sees few tourists and doesn’t even have any taxis. However, you can bring your own rental car over a ferry. There is very limited bus service, so check with the tourist office for schedules before venturing out to the island.

There are regular ferries (ride lasts 40 min.) 3 to 4 times a day from Tongyeong Harbor to Yokji-do. Car ferries (which take 90 min.) run about 3 times daily. Call to check for schedules at ☏ 055/641-6181. Car ferries also run from Samdeok Harbor on Mireuk-do 2 to 4 times a day. Check for schedules at ☏ 055/641-3560.

WHERE TO STAY

There are not many tourist-class hotels in Tongyeong, but you’ll have no trouble finding cheaper accommodations (many are clustered around the bus terminal). You can also find some love motels near the harbor, most of them with rooms starting at ₩30,000.

A good hotel in town is the Chungmu Tourist Hotel ★★, 2, Donam-dong, Tongyeong-si (☎ 055/645-2091), which was built in 1971. The 50-room hotel has oceanview rooms and is set on nice landscaping in a wonderful location. Standard rooms start at ₩80,000.

Even better is the 16-story Chungmu Marina Resort Condo ★★★, 645, Donam 2-dong, Tongyeong-si (☎ 055/643-8000; fax 055/643-8634), which has some rooms that look out onto the ocean and is especially convenient for traveling families, since the rooms include living rooms and kitchens. One-bedroom units are ₩80,000 to ₩110,000. Two-bedrooms are ₩100,000 to ₩150,000. For the kids, they have a game room, a bowling alley, and a recreational area. For the adults, there are noraebang/karaoke, a conference room, a bar, restaurants, a pool, a fitness center, and a supermarket. You can also rent a yacht (they have about 20) to sail around the area.

The Tongyeong Tourist Hotel, 1141, Chongryang-dong, Tongyeong-si (☎ 055/644-4411), is a bit more boring but less expensive and conveniently located near the harbor. Built in 1988 and renovated in 1996, the 47-room hotel does have a sauna and a nightclub.

Also near the water is the newer Chungmu Beach Hotel, 177-15, Seoho-dong, Tongyeong-si (☎ 055/642-8181), which has 43 rooms, as well as a buffet restaurant, a coffee shop, and sauna facilities.

If you find yourself stranded or wanting to spend the night on one of the outlying islands, they all have low-priced minbak available. On Yokji-do, there is the Goraemeori Tourist Farm (☎ 055/641-6089), a South Korean “condo” that’s good for families, located near Deokdong Beach. In Somaemul-do, the Dasol Penthouse (☎ 017/857-2915) and the Hayan Sanjang (☎ 017/590-2007) are good options.

WHERE TO DINE

Like most of South Korea’s coastal towns, hwae restaurants are omnipresent, but it’s especially fresh and tasty here. A restaurant that serves good Japanese-style sushi and bokeo maeuntang (spicy hot pot made with swellfish) is the Tongyeong Daeoe Chobap, 115-8 Jeongryang-dong (☎ 055/641-5176).

Another dish not unique to Tongyeong, but equally delicious is the junbok jook (abalone porridge). Although not cheap (usually about ₩15,000), a bowl is great to warm you up on a cold winter day and is supposed to be healthy for you. Namgyeong Hwaet Jib, 357-5 Misu-dong (☎ 055/643-3030), serves a hearty bowl of the porridge. Located on the water near the underwater tunnel, they have a nice array of hwae as well.

From Tongyeong’s old name, “Chungmu,” comes Chungmu gimbap, a dish named after the Chungmu haelmae (the Chungmu grandma), a legendary fictional figure. This local specialty is rice rolled in seaweed just like any other gimbap, except that there are no fillings and it’s served with kkakdugi (radish kimchi) and boiled squid seasoned with vinegar and chile paste. A couple of dozen restaurants specializing in the dish line the city’s pier. Most places charge about ₩3,000 for this local “fast food,” but the restaurant that originated the dish is the Chungmu Halmae Gimbap, 129-1 Jung-ang-dong (☎ 055/643-3105), just about a 5-minute walk from the bus stop. About 70% of their business is takeout and you may want to pack some to go for an island excursion.

The Tongyeong bibimbap is prepared the regular Korean way, but their variation is the accompanying soup, which is made with sea mustard and sea lettuce cooked in water in which the rice was washed.

There are plenty of other good seafood restaurants in town. A couple of places that specialize in oysters is the Hyangto Jip (☎ 055/645-4808) and the Tongyeong Gul Madang, 647 Donam-dong (☎ 055/644-7891), located on the first floor of the Marina Condo sports center. Hodong Shikdang (☎ 055/645-3138) specializes in swellfish, which is supposed to be a good hangover cure. A place for generally fresh seafood is Jinmi Shikdang (☎ 055/643-0240), behind the Jeokshipja (Red Cross) Hospital.

Those with a sweet tooth can get Korean “donuts” from Omisa Ggul Bbang, 498-1 Donam-dong (☎ 055/646-3230; www.omisa.co.kr), located near the Seong-u apartment complex. Their fried dough balls (made with rice flour and covered in honey) are so popular that they close shop whenever they run out, which can be as early as 11am, only an hour after they open at 10am.

SHOPPING

Tongyeong is best known for its najeon chilgi (lacquerware). These are wooden boxes inlaid with elaborate mother-of-pearl designs before being lacquered to a shiny finish. The lacquerware became popular during the Shilla period (A.D. 668–935), although the craft dates farther back, to the Naklang period. During the reign of King Munjong of the Goryeo Dynasty, the government ran workshops to make najeon chilgi. The elaborate boxes made from these workshops were given as gifts to foreign kings and envoys. There’s even a Najeon Chilgi Festival in August (during the Hansanadae Festival). The beautiful works of art are small enough to tuck into your suitcase and make nice gifts. Be sure to shop around for the best prices, since works by master craftsmen and antiques will be way more expensive than less elaborate pieces.

A bustling traditional market in town is the Seoho Shijang, across from the ferry terminal. Here you can find halmuhni (grandmas) selling fresh fish and seafood. The large Tongyeong Traditional Craft Hall, 642 Beonji, Donam-dong, Tongyeong-si (☎ 055/645-3266), is a good place to buy lacquerware as well as other local craft items, like hand fans, wooden trays, and items made form abalone shells. A couple of smaller markets include the Geobuk Shijang (Turtle Market) in Taepyong-dong and the Jungang Live Fish Market (the name says it all) near Ganguan Port in Dongho-dong.
For more modern shopping options, there’s the Lotte Mart in Bukshin-dong, not far from the bus terminal and the main post office.

7 THE REST OF GYEONGSANGNAM-DO

With the country’s largest coastal population, the Southern Gyeongsang Province (sometimes shortened to “Gyeongnam”) is mostly oriented toward the sea. The largest cities are Busan and Ulsan, each of which has its own separate governments.

Gyeongnam is home to South Korea’s most celebrated temple, Haeinsa, located on the southern slopes of Gayasan. There are 15 hermitages associated with Haeinsa, located in the valley nearby. The closest to the great temple is Hongje-am, where the famous military leader Monk Samyeongdaesa of the Joseon Dynasty retired, after leading a group of Buddhist warrior monks during the Hideyoshi Invasions. The first hermitage built in the area, Wondong-am (which is said to have been the staging site for the building of Haeinsa) is nearby. There are other historical sites in the area, including Baengnyeong-am, which has the most beautiful scenery; Hirangdae (where the Monk Hirang meditated); and Jijog-am (a place for prayer).

In the western part of the province is Jirisan National Park (which is covered in the Jeolla-do chapter) and the small town of Hadong, which is located on the western edge of the province. This mountain town is known for its wild tea fields and the vendors in its open-air herb market, Hwagae Jangteo.

Gyeongnam is also known for its wonderfully rocky coasts, tiny little islands scattering into the sea, and beautiful beaches, like Sangju Beach near Geumsan in Namhae. The country’s best dinosaur footprints can also be found on the picturesque coast in Goseong.

9 ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE The most convenient place to fly in is Busan’s Gimhae Airport, which has international flights from other destinations in Asia, as well as domestic flights from Incheon, Gimpo, Jeju, Gwangju, and Gangneung. The province also has two domestic airports, one in Sacheon (near Jinju) and the other at Ulsan. Sample bus fares from Sacheon Airport are₩3,300 to Goseong (30-min. ride), ₩6,300 to Chungmu (1-hr. ride), and ₩7,800 to Geoje (about 80 min.).

Visitors traveling by rail usually arrive in Busan first (usually using the high-speed KTX line) and then take one of three rail lines to other parts of the province. The Gyeongbu line runs north through Miryang toward Daegu and up. The Donghae Nambu line goes to Ulsan, Gyeongju, and Yeongcheon. The Gyeongjeon line goes west from Samnyang-jin to Jinju, Hadong, and other destinations in Jeollanam-do.

Rather than infrequent trains, buses are a more convenient way to get around the province.

If you’re driving, major expressways extend to most parts of the province. The main one, the Gyeongbu Expressway (road 1), runs between Seoul and Busan. The Ulsan Expressway (road 16) connects Ulsan to Eonyang. The Namhae Expressway (road 10) joins Gyeongsangnam-do to Jeollanam-do, with a branch line, 104, going around Gimhae and running into the southern part of Busan. The Junghu Naeryuk Expressway (road 45) connects Masan to Daegu, while the Junghu Expressway (road 35) connects Hamyang to Jinju and Tongyeong. The 88 Olympic Expressway (road 12) connects Daegu to Gwangju. When the Donghae Expressway (road 65) is completed, it will connect Busan to Ulsan and Pohang and run along the coast up to Gangwon-do.
You can also take an express bus from Seoul to Andong, Sangju, Gimcheon, Gumi, Daegu, Gyeongju, Pohang, Yeongju, and Yeongcheon. Intercity buses travel all over the province.

There are boats from Jinhae and Masan to Geoje-do and from Geoje-do to Busan. The most extensive ferry services are available from Tongyeong to the outlying islands, with some ferries from Samcheonpo.

GETTING AROUND   Local buses from smaller cities and towns take you to outlying areas, but some of them run infrequently to remote or less popular places, so check your return bus schedule and plan accordingly.

VISITOR INFORMATION   Gyeongsangnam-do’s main Tourist Information Center, 484-3 Samdeok-li, Hoehwa-myeon (☎ 055/670-2670), is located next to the Oksu Service Station in Goseong County. Another information center can be found near the Hamyang service station in Hamyang County, San 40-1 Bosan-li, Jigok-myeon (☎ 055/964-2710). Both are open daily from 9am to 6pm March to June and September to October; until 8pm July to August; and until 5pm November to February.

GAYASAN NATIONAL PARK
The name “Gaya” comes from the Sanskrit for “cow.” Gayasan is sometimes called “Someurisan” (head of cow mountain) because (why else?) the mountains are shaped like a cow’s head. Consisting of a series of high peaks, Gayasan has long been sacred for Buddhists, so its name was changed to Gayasan in honor of the Buddha’s preaching in India.

It takes 2 days and 1 night to climb the whole of Gayasan, starting from Sudosan, but most travelers visit the park for just 1 day. The most popular route passes through the Hongnyu-dongcheon stream to Haeinsa to the peak, Sangwangbong.

Admission to the park is +1,300 adults, +600 teens, +300 children. The park is open from sunrise to sunset daily.

There are campgrounds in Haeinsa and near Baegun-dong, but these facilities are used less frequently since new roads have been built, making it easier to get in and out of the area. Camping fees range from W3,000 to W6,000, depending on the size of your tent. Parking costs W4,000 to W6,000 per day. There is one midsize hotel and several motels and minbak near Haeinsa. In Baegun-dong, there is one small hotel and a couple of yeogwan. Most people make a day trip to the area and choose not to overnight here.

To get to Gayasan from the Daegu Seobu Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Haeinsa and get off at the last stop. Buses run every 20 minutes and the ride takes about an hour.

Driving, take the 88 Olympic Expressway (road 12) to the Haeinsa IC. Then take local road 1084 toward Yacheon-li, take national road 59, and follow the signs to Haeinsa and Gayasan.

The official site for the national park is http://english.knps.or.kr/Knp/Gayasan/

Cheongnyangsa (Cheongyan Temple)   Isolated and a bit difficult to reach, this temple is a peaceful place, located on a steep slope. Not a place to find amazing architecture. Cheongnyangsa is a relatively small temple, but enjoys spectacular scenery. From the park entrance, there is a small road that leads up to the temple.

No phone. Free with admission to the park. Daily 24 hr.

Haeinsa (Haein Temple) ★★★   The name “Haein” comes from the expression “haeinsammae,” which is taken from Hwaemgyeong Buddhist scripture and which means “truly enlightened world of Buddha and our naturally undefiled mind.” One of the “Three Jewel” temples of South Korea, Haeinsa was founded by two monks during the third year of King Ae-Jang’s reign (A.D. 802).

A World Heritage site, the temple houses the famed Tripitaka Koreana. Begun in 1236 (the 26th year of the Goryeo Dynasty), these three holy Buddhist books took 16 years to complete. They were created as a way to win favor from the Buddha and overcome invading Mongols. The word “tripitaka” comes from Sanskrit, meaning “three baskets.” The Tripitaka is the Buddhist equivalent of the Christian Bible or the Muslim Koran. The 81,340 blocks include 6,791 volumes. Each wooden block is 68cm (27 in.) wide, 25cm (10 in.) long, and 3cm (1¼ in.) thick with wood fixed at each end to maintain balance and lacquer applied to prevent corrosion. The oldest engraved wooden block characters in the world (over 770 years old), it contains a comprehensive collection of the Buddhist Tripitaka.

Not only the Tripitaka Koreana are housed here in the four halls of the Janggyeong Panjeon, but so are several public and private treasures, including almost 3,000 other wooden printing blocks of Buddhist scriptures, carved during the Goryeo Dynasty (between 1100 and 1350). They are stored in small halls in the courtyard around the Janggyeong Panjeon and you’ll have to peer in through open slats to see them.

If you arrived after 6pm, when the Tripitaka Koreana are locked up, wait a bit on the temple grounds and you can see and hear the drums and the gongs played by the monks, who live on the grounds.

For a complete experience, you can do a temple stay at Haeinsa (see box below).

CHANGNYEONG

Changnyeong is a small town in a county of the same name with a rich history, located between Daegu and Masan.

A few hundred meters to the north of the town center is a group of ancient mounds from the Gaya Period, which are similar to the ones in Goryeong (northwest of here). Across the road from the tombs is the Changnyeong Museum (☎ 055/530-2246), with an entrance fee of W500 for adults, W440 for children. On-site is a life-size replica of one of the tombs so that you can see what it looks like on the inside.

One of the oldest relics in town is a stone tablet from the 500s, marking the boundary of the town after Shilla King Jinheung defeated the Dae Gaya Kingdom. Although it’s not much to look at now, it is one of the oldest written tablets on the peninsula.

Bugok Oncheon (Bugok Hot Springs) ★ One of the best hot springs in the country, the Bugok Oncheon is located at the foot of Deokamsan. Bugok Hot Spring Tourist Special Complex includes a handful of tourist hotels, a small zoo, botanical gardens, and a shopping center. One of the few oncheons that contain sulfur, it contains many other minerals that are supposed to have health benefits. The hot springs themselves have an average temperature of about 172°F (78°C), hot enough to boil an egg. In fact, they serve eggs boiled in the hot springs at the Bugok Tourist Hotel. The largest facility is Bugok Hawaii. There is a festival to promote the hot springs every year in October.

233 Geomun-li, Bugok-myeon, Changnyeong-gun, Gyeongsangnam-do. ☎ 055/530-2003 or 4 Admission W58,000 ages 14 and over, W43,000 ages 3–13. Daily 6am–9pm; water park 8am–11pm. From
A Temple Stay in Haeinsa

Although you can do an overnight stay in many of the country’s temples, an overnight at Haeinsa is truly special. For 2 days and 1 night, you'll get a rare glimpse into monastic life. You'll be provided with a simple grey monk’s outfit and be served vegetarian meals to help cleanse your body. You’ll get a brief lecture on temple etiquette (how to sit, how to behave at meals, how to drink tea, and how to behave during meditation). At 6pm, the drum and gong are struck for about 10 minutes. At 3am, there is an early-morning service and meditation, with another ringing of the drum and gong for 10 minutes, followed by a service in the Daejeok gwanjeon. The service is followed by a 1-hour meditation in the assembly hall. You can take a morning stroll with the monks, enjoy conversation and a cup of tea with them, view the Tripitaka Koreana, and see the Ingyeong printing tablets. Bring an open mind and be ready to spend a lot of time sitting cross-legged on the floor. ₩50,000 to ₩80,000 per person.

Seoul’s Nambu Express Bus Terminal, take a bus for Bugok, which runs at 9:45am, 2:45pm, 4pm, and 5:05pm and takes 5 hr. The spa is a 5-min. walk from the Bugok Bus Terminal.

Upo Wetlands ★★★ The largest swamp area in South Korea, the wetlands stretch across three counties and 13 villages. This primitive marsh, which is made up of four smaller, connected marshes, was created about 140 million years ago. There are over 1,000 different species of flora and fauna living in the wetlands. It is beautiful in the early morning or early evening when a light foglike rain descends upon the waters. The late summer months (Aug–Sept) bring out the fireflies and the winter attracts a variety of migrating birds to the area.

Yibang-myeon/Yueu-myeon/Daehap-myeon areas of Changnyeong-gun, Gyeongsangnam-do. ☏ 055/530-2238. http://upo.or.kr. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the Changnyeong Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus headed for Yibang-myeon and get off at Somoak Jangjae Village (15-min. ride); walk 5 min. toward the sign that reads GREEN UPO’S FRIEND. You can also take a bus from the Yonshin Bus Terminal (a 5-min. walk from the Changnyeong Intercity Bus Terminal) that is bound for Hanteo and Sejin-li. This bus goes directly to the Upo wetlands parking lot (takes 20–30 min.).

HADONG ★★★
The Hadong region and the small village of Agyang are known for the green tea plants that grow wild on the foot of Jirisan. The green tea has been growing here for over 1,300 years, growing naturally along the gentle slopes of the mountains. Known as the King’s Tea, the high-quality leaves were grown for royal teacups for centuries. The farmers here still grow the tea naturally, using no fertilizers or pesticides and picking the leaves by hand. The tea fields line the slopes on either side of the Seomjingang (Seomjin river), which flows by Agyang village.

The best time of year is spring, when the cherry blossoms are in full bloom and the newest leaves from tea plants are picked for the best brew. Unfortunately, the secret’s out, so you’ll have to fight the hordes of Korean tourists who come here by the bus loads, especially during the Hadong Wild Tea Cultural Festival, which happens here for 5 days each May.
If you decide to visit in the fall, you can sample the Daebong persimmon, a dried persimmon, which has also been grown for royalty, but only since the early Joseon Dynasty.

No matter what time of year, Agyang’s Hwagae Jangteo ★★★ Finds (Hwagae Street Market) will be going on. This open-air market specializes in medicinal herbs and green tea grown from the region. The small stalls are run by local farmers with ceramic artisan shops and casual restaurants lining the outer edges. Open around sunrise and closing around sunset, the market is a rare glimpse into the older traditions in the area, including one artisan, who still makes iron tools by hand. A good place to pick up some local green tea products is Cheongjeong Teuk Sanmul （☎ 017/552-4985）, which is a small shop located in the corner of the marketplace, near the public restrooms.

Ssanggyesa (Ssanggye Temple) ★★ （☎ 055/833-7019, 208 Unsul-li, Hwagye-myeon, Hadong-gun) is also worth a visit (especially since the bus that runs to Ssanggyesa stops in Agyang). Originally constructed in 723, the temple was destroyed like many others during the Imjin Waeran (1592–98), but was rebuilt in 1632. The main building dates back to the mid-Joseon period. To the east of the main building, there’s a great Ma-aebul, an image of the Buddha engraved in a hollowed part of a rock. It is said that Monk Jimgam, who studied Buddhist music in China, watched the fish swimming in the Seomjingang and composed the “paleumryul” (eight tones and rhythms) of Korean Buddhist music. It is also said that another man, Kim Daeryeom, brought seeds from China and planted the first tea shrubs here during the era of King Heungdeok of the Shilla Kingdom. Admission to the temple costs ₩1,600 for adults, ₩ for teens, and ₩400 for children; free for children 6 and under and seniors 65 and over. The temple is open daily 9am to 6pm.

There are a few motels in Agyang just up the road from the Hwagae Jangteo, as well as a handful of hotels along the mountain road on either side of the Seomjin River.

Although this is a tea-growing area, the local cuisine never incorporated the green leaves into their dishes, since they were too busy sending their harvests to the kings. Instead, the specialties of the region are tiny freshwater clams and mitten crabs, which are collected from the Seomjingang. A good place to try the local cuisine is Gangnam Matjib （☎ 055/884-4791, which is just a 100m (328-ft.) walk up the river from the Hwagae Street Market.

To get to Agyang from Seoul, take a bus to Hadong from Seoul Nambu Terminal. There are eight buses daily and the 4½-hour ride costs about ₩26,200. From Hadong Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Ssanggyesa (Ssanggye Temple) and get off at Agyang. From the Busan Seobu Bus Terminal, there are two buses a day that go to Ssanggyesa. The ride takes about 3 hours.

If you’d rather travel by train, there is only one daily train that goes to Hadong from Seoul Train Station. It starts at 10:05am, takes nearly 8 hours, and will cost ₩33,700.

About an hour from Hadong by bus is Cheonghak-dong ★★ (“Blue Crane Village”), a once-remote village in Jirisan that didn’t have any electricity or even a road leading up to it until the early 1990s. Unfortunately, their neo-Confucian lifestyle has been disturbed by the introduction of television and contact with the outside world. However, they still live in traditional hanok and continue to follow their cultish beliefs.

Just down the road from the village (about a 20-min. walk) is Samseong-gung ★★★, the “Palace of the Three Sages,” dedicated to the three originators of Korea’s foundation myth—Hwanin, Hwaneung, and Dan-gun. You can’t miss the museum building at the entrance, which has a huge blue crane incorporated into the roof. Visitors are supposed to hit the gong three times and wait for a guide. The guide gives a short talk (in Korean only, unfortunately), explaining the rules for visiting. The “palace” shows a glimpse of Korea’s cultural history, its Daoist roots, and its ancient shamanistic rituals. If you’re lucky enough to be visiting during the third day of the 10th month of the year (usually sometime in early Oct), you can see the Cheonje Festival here.

There are five buses daily from Hadong-eup to Cheonghak-dong, 8:30am, 11am, 1pm, 2:30pm, and 7pm. Ask the bus driver when he will be back so that you can time your trip back.

The rest of Jirisan National Park is covered in the Jeolla-do chapter.

HALLYEO MARITIME NATIONAL PARK

Hallyeo Maritime National Park (☏ 055/831-2114) is spread over Sacheon-si, Geoje-si, Tongyeong-si, Hadong-gun, and Namhae-gun of Gyeongsangnam-do province and over Yeosu-si of Jeollanam-do province. It covers an area ranging from Geoje-do in Gyeongsangnam-do to Jeollanam-do, including an archipelago, Bijin-do, and the Haegeum River. Although I’ve included detailed information in the Tongyeong and Yeosu section, I wanted to provide an overview of the park here.

Designated a national park in 1968, it is South Korea’s only maritime national park. It includes parts of the southern coast and many islands including Namhae-do and Geoje-do (see below). The best time to visit the beaches is from July to mid-August when the waters are warm, but typhoon season hasn’t kicked off yet. Unfortunately, many vacationing natives will be flocking to the shores as well. Spring and fall are also good to enjoy the varying seasons. Winter rarely sees visitors, so it may be nice for solitude, but boat schedules will be greatly reduced and bad weather may keep you from being able to venture out to far-flung islands.

From Tongyeong’s bus terminal, you can take a bus to Geoje (runs every hour) and get off at Haksong to catch a ferry. There are several ferries that run there, but the one that goes around Haegeum River and Oedo is quite popular. From the Jangseungpo Ferry Terminal, you can see a different part of the park by taking the bus bound for Hongpo that goes through Gujora, Mangchi, Hakdong, and Yeongcha.

The park’s website is http://hallyeo.knps.or.kr.

Namhae Island (Namhae-do)

Namhae-do is located between Tongyeong and Yeosu. The island itself is the fourth largest in the country, and Namhae County is composed of 68 smaller islands. The official website of Namhae county is http://english.namhae.go.kr.

The country’s first suspension bridge (built in 1973) connects the island to the mainland (Namhae is the last stop on road 19). The view for the bridge is spectacular, but there are no places to stop and take it in. If you’re driving into the area, be sure to take some time to enjoy the view from the coastal highway. The road hugs the edge of the island and has spectacular views of the sea, the surrounding islands, and the terraced rice paddies that wind up the side of the mountain.

Buses from Seoul leave for Namhae eight times a day, 8:30am to 7pm. The 4½-hour ride costs W22,200. Since Namhae is still a very rural area, buses here run infrequently. The best way to get around is by car. You can rent a car from Seoul and drive it to Namhae, or rent one upon arrival. There is only one company in Namhae, World Rent-a-Car (☏ 055/864-3081; 443-4 Bukbyeon-li, Namhae-gun, Gyeongsangnam-do), located near the bus terminal. Rentals start at W70,000 and go up with size. You can also hire a taxi (many will be waiting in front of the bus terminal) for about ₩100,000. Be sure to negotiate with your driver before embarking on your tour.

The tallest mountain in Namhae is Geumsan (Silk Mountain), which is sometimes called small Geumgang Mountain because of its relatively low height. Still, it is high enough to provide a wonderful view of the surrounding seascape. It was called Bogwang-san by the Buddhist Priest Wonhyo, who built the temple Bogwangsa here in the third year of Shilla King Munmu’s reign. If you happen to overnight in the area, catch the sunrise from its peak. It’s breathtaking.

On Geumsan, perched just below the summit, is the famed hermitage Bori-am ★★★, which is one of the three main holy sites in the country. It is also one of the eight special shrines for the Bodhisattva of Compassion (there is a tall statue of her looking out into the water). People believe that if you faithfully pray here, your prayers will be granted. Regardless of your beliefs, the climb up to Bori-am is worth it for the gorgeous view. There is a ₩1,500 entrance fee.

One of Namhae’s best destinations is Sangju Beach ★★★, a wide, sandy expanse with clean water, surrounded by the pine forest of Geumsan (Geum Mountains). The beach gets over a million visitors in the summer and is even crowded in the winter with training athletes. The beach has shower rooms, camping facilities, and parking available. You can take a bus from Daegu’s Seoubu Bus Terminal, with more frequent service in the summer. From Seoul, catch a bus from the Nambu Bus Terminal (off of subway line 3). Buses run daily from 8:30am to 7pm and take about 4½ hours. From the Namhae Gongyong Terminal, take a bus headed for Sangju Beach. It takes about 30 minutes. Behind the pine trees on the edge of the sand, there are several yeogwan and minbak available for overnight accommodations. More expensive during the summer, prices can be bargained down off season.

About 4km (2½ miles) east of Sanju is Songjeong Beach. Similar in shape to its neighbor and usually less crowded, it is also an expansive sandy beach with shallow waters and a spectacular view. A more hidden and less crowded beach is Wulpo Dudok, which is less sand and more rocks (mongdol), tumbled into their round shapes by the waves. It’s on the way to Gacheon from Nam-myeon.

Next to Songjeong is the small port town of Mijo. Watching the fishermen unload their catch and seeing the cases of freshly caught seafood in the fish market is quite a sight. This is also a great place to have a fresh meal of hwae from one of the small joints that serve it fresh from the nets of fishermen.

A similar but smaller fishing village is Mulgeon, which faces the German Village (“Dogil Maeul” in Korean; www.germanvillage.co.kr), a town built here by and for Koreans returning from working in Germany. Next to the German Village is a new garden, where you can pay to see the well-designed landscapes of private homes for ₩5,000 for adults, ₩3,000 for teens, and ₩2,000 for children.

There is a small forest on the shore, down the hill from the Dogil Maeul, planted by the local people 300 years ago to serve as protection from the high winds from the sea. Today the forest covers over 1.5km (1 mile) of coastline and is a designated national monument.

Another tiny fishing port is Seongnu Village, along the coastal road. Almost stopped in time, this small town is a fishing village from times past. With a long history, the fishermen of Seongnu continue their old customs and maintain folk traditions long discarded by modern fishermen. The hiking trail from here to Dalaengi Village has the best view of Hallyeo Haesang National Park, but it’s not for the faint of heart. Gacheon Dalaengi Maeul, 898-5 Gonghyeon-li, Nam-myeon, Namhae-gun (☎ 055/863-3427), is a more popular tourist site for its terraced rice paddies and the Gacheon Amsu, the town’s guardian rock. Be sure to plan your trip for some time between spring and early fall, or you’ll miss the green harvest and see only dirt terraces after all the rice and garlic has been farmed. Make your way down to the bottom to get a taste of the local makgeolli (milky rice wine).

As far as accommodations are concerned, there are several minbak and yeogwan around popular tourist areas on the island. The one upscale facility is the Hilton Namhae Golf and Spa Resort, San 35-5 Deokwok-li, Nam-myeon, Namhae-gun (☎ 055/860-0100; fax 055/862-2677; www.hilton.com), which has an oceanside golf course, spa, restaurants, and cafes. Doubles start from W325,000 and suites start at W425,000. Some rates include breakfast and dinner.

The local delicacy on Namhae is galchi hwae (raw hairtail fish), which is caught in the South Sea June through November. Sometimes the smaller ones are served bones and all (since you can just eat the bones too). The best hwae restaurants can be found in Mijo, where you can enjoy the catch fresh from the boats. A couple of joints that specialize in Galchi hwae are Gongju Shikdang (☎ 055/867-6728) and Samheon Shikdang (☎ 055/867-6498).

Geoje Island (Geoje-do)

Although Geoje-do is connected to Tongyeong by two land bridges, I’ve listed it here because it is a separate city and has its own attractions. The second-largest island in South Korea, its largest town is Sinhyeon. With several natural harbors, the second- and third-largest shipyards in the country are both located on the island. Other than the main island, Geoje City encompasses about 60 smaller islands, including Oedo, the most popular of the bunch.

The island’s most crowded beach is Hakdong Mongdol Beach, named for its shape that some say looks like a crane (hak). Covered in tiny pebbles, the beach attracts many vacationers, especially in the summer as families pitch tents in the nearby campgrounds.

You can take an excursion ferry from here to Oedo via Haegeumgang. Other tour boats are available from Jangseungpo, Oehyeon, Gijura, Hakdong, Dojangpo, and Galgot-li.

Haegeumgang, the “diamond” of the south sea, has been designated an official green area of the national park. From this island made of rocks, the best views are at sunset and sunrise from either Ilwoll-bong or Lion Rock. Buses from Tongyeong’s Intercity Bus Terminal run about eight times a day and take about 90 minutes. From either the Jangseungpo Ferry Terminal or the Jangseungpo Bus Terminal, take a Hongpo-bound bus and get off at Haegeumgang. Buses run only twice a day, unfortunately.

Although Geoje is a beautiful and peaceful island, the P.O.W. Camp (☎ 055/639-8125) here reminds visitors of its turbulent history. Though a bit cheesy with overdone re-creations of battles and such, it is still a good educational resource for background on the Korean War. The original camp was closed after the 1953 armistice, but a park was created here in 1997. Remnants of the war—tanks, trucks, and the like—are on exhibit here. Open daily from 9am to 6pm; entrance fees are ₩3,000 adults, ₩2,000 teens, ₩1,000 children and seniors, free for kids 6 and under.

About 4km (2½ miles) away from Geoje-do is Oedo 三星, sometimes called “Paradise Island.” In 1969, fisherman Lee Chang-ho discovered this small island while seeking refuge from the wind and waves. Since then, he and his wife brought plants here by boatloads, creating the Oedo Botania 三星, a beautiful, European-style botanical garden. From the Jangseungpo Ferry terminal, you can catch a ferry to Oedo, which takes about 25 minutes. The ferries, run by a handful of companies, aren’t on a regular schedule, but leave daily every 1 to 2 hours depending on the number of passengers. You can also take an excursion ferry (which takes longer, of course), that goes around Haegeumgang to Oedo. The island is open daily, except for Lunar New Year. On top of the ferry charge (which varies by company but runs about ₩17,000 for adults), admission to the gardens is ₩8,000 adults, ₩6,000 teens, ₩6,000 children, free for kids 6 and under.

Located between Dojangpo Village and Haegeumgang is the Sinseondae Observatory, from where you can get a wonderful view of the surrounding ocean. Found off the coastal highway, a staircase leads up to the lookout point. April and May are the best months to take in the scenery, as the yellow rape seeds are in bloom then. You can take a ferry to Sinseondae Observatory from Jangseungpo. From the Geoje-do Bus Terminal, it’s a 50-minute ride.

Dojangpo Maeul is a quaint fishing village between Hakdong and Hamok beaches. In the springtime, pack a picnic lunch and hike up the hill overlooking the village. Locals call it Mangneungjandi Park. From here, you can look out over the ocean, enjoy the ocean breezes, and watch the goats grazing on the grassy hillside.

GOSEONG

Goseong County ★★★ (☏ 055/673-4101; www.dinopark.net) is located north of Tongyeong and between Sacheon, Masan, and Jinju. This is the best place in South Korea to see dinosaur footprints. Since the discovery of the sauropod prints in 1982, about 4,300 fossilized footprints of dinosaurs have been found along this 6km (3¾-mile) coastal rock bed, formed about 100 million years ago, during the early and mid-Cretaceous period. Along with sites in Colorado and on the western coast of Argentina, Goseong is one the world’s top three sites for dinosaur prints.

The Goseong Dinosaur Museum, 85 beonji, Deokmyeong-li, Hain-myeon, Goseong-gun (☏ 055/670-2825 or 055/832-9021; http://museum.goseong.go.kr), has exhibits that explain the movements and habits of certain species in the area. It also houses several fossils and skeletons. In front of the building is a giant model of the Mesozoic Era herbivore brachiosaurus, made of steel truss mosaic tiles. The museum is open daily 9am to 6pm March to October, until 5pm November to February.

The real excitement is outside of the museum on the rocky shores nearby. On the rocky area near Sangjog-am are the actual prints from creatures long extinct. The footprints found in the area can be classified into 12 types. They include ornithopods that walked on two legs, iguanodons and sauropods that walked on four legs, and carnivorous theropods. Dinosaur eggs were also discovered at six sites along the coast of Goseong-eup and Samsan-myeon. The eggs were from three types of dinosaurs, and a nest was discovered, almost intact with very little damage. There is conjecture that Goseong may have been a nesting place for dinosaurs.

With Uhang-li and Haenam, Goseong has the highest number of bird footprints found in Korea. These bird prints from the Mesozoic Era led to the discovery of new species, and more research is underway. Not only are the footprints impressive, but the view from Sangjog-am (Sangjokam) County Park is also quite spectacular. Be careful when crossing over the wet rocks to the cave, Sangjok-gul, since it could get a bit slippery from the seawater. Although the area is open daily 24 hours year-round, be sure to call the Korea Travel Phone, ☏ 1330, to find out when low tide is so that you’ll be able to see the dino prints.

There are only three buses daily to Sangjog-am from the Goseong Bus Terminal (8am, 11:10am, and 4:55pm). The schedule is subject to change, so check on that as well before making a special trip. Buses from Sacheon run a bit more frequently to Sangjog-am County Park. Goseong county’s official site is http://eng.goseong.go.kr.

On the way in or out of town, stop in for a lunch of jjajangmyeon (black bean noodles) at Jangbaeksan Suta Sonjjajang ★★★ (☏ 055/673-8030; 841-1 beonji, Baedun-li, Hwaehwa-myeon, Goseong-gun). For about W5,000 per person, you are treated to a meal and a show as the chef spins and pulls the dough into noodles in just minutes, right before your eyes.
Busan

South Korea’s second-largest city—it’s home to 3.7 million residents—Busan is filled with towering apartments, crowded streets, and a modern subway system. That description may remind you a bit of Seoul, but don’t be fooled—this is a very different city. The people of Busan are in some ways more formal and traditional, but in other ways more easygoing and open. Busan’s residents are not what you’d expect of those living in a modern metropolis, exhibiting the same friendliness you’ll encounter in most rural towns, but that’s just part of the city’s charm.

Due to its natural harbor and gentle tides, it is the largest port in the country and the third largest in the world. Located on the southeastern coast of the peninsula, Busan is surrounded by the South Gyeongsang province (Gyeongsangnam-do) and is about 763 sq. km (295 sq. miles) in area. It is nestled in the Nakdong River Valley, surrounded by the ocean on one side, and mountains on the other with hot springs scattered throughout. Busan is called South Korea’s summer capital, as its six beaches attract thousands of tourists from throughout the country. So it’s not the place for a peaceful vacation in the summers, but off season (especially winters) brings quieter shores and a less hurried atmosphere.

Because Busan grew up along its coastline, the city is unusually long in shape—as a result, it has more than one city center. The area around Busan’s ports bustles with energy as boats arrive daily from all over Asia, and nearby Nampo-dong is home to the massive Jagalchi seafood market. The tourist center of Haeundae boasts some of the country’s finest resort hotels, while the Seomyeon neighborhood is a paradise for shoppers. The old city center, Dongnae, in the north toward the mountains, is a great place to experience hot springs and Korean-style bathhouses.

It can thank its major international port for its modern growth, and its cultural festivals and natural seaside beauty for its attraction as a major tourist destination. I hope you’ll enjoy not just the beaches and cafe culture here, but the genuine warmth and hospitality of the people.

1 ORIENTATION

ARRIVING & DEPARTING

By Plane

The city of Busan is served by Gimhae International Airport (PUS; 051/964-3114; www.gimhaeairport.co.kr), which is located about 35 minutes outside of the city, across the Nakdong-gahng. Busan is planning to build another international airport to handle the increasing demands, but there are no set dates yet.

Korean Airlines (www.koreanair.com) and Asiana Airlines (us.flyasiana.com) are the major national airlines that fly in and out of Gimhae. Flights from Seoul’s Incheon Airport start from W55,000 and go up from there. International flights are available via Japan Airlines, China Eastern Airlines, China Northwest Airlines, Air China, Philippine Airlines, SAT Airlines, and Vladivostok Airlines. Note that when you leave the country from Busan, there’s a departure tax, currently ₩12,000, which may or may not be included in your ticket price.

A standard cab to the city center costs about ₩15,000 including tolls. Deluxe cabs, which are black, cost twice as much (₩30,000), but the drivers all speak English, accept credit cards, and will give a receipt.

Airport buses (☎ 051/972-8653) cost ₩900 to ₩1,500 and run daily every 10 to 40 minutes, depending on which line you take. There is no direct line on the subway to the airport, but you can take bus no. 307 to and from Deokcheon Station on Line 2. Limousine buses (☎ 051/973-9617) start at ₩6,000 and run daily every 30 minutes or so to most parts of the city, including the Lotte Hotel, Haeundae Station, and the Westin Chosun Beach Hotel.

By Train

Once Gyeongbu High Speed Rail line is completed in 2010, you will be able to take a train from Seoul to Busan in 1 hour and 56 minutes. Currently, you can take the KTX train from Seoul Station, which takes 2 hours and 50 minutes (which is still pretty darn fast), or the Saemaul train, which takes 4 hours and 10 minutes. The standard KTX fare is ₩44,800, while the first-class fare is ₩62,700 and the Saemaul fare is ₩36,800. Various discounts apply if you buy tickets in advance, and you’ll get further discounts if you travel on a weekday. The Gupo Train Station (☎ 051/440-2497) is located in central Busan. From there, you can hop on the subway, take a bus, or catch a cab to your hotel or any other destination within the city.

To get to the train station from the city center on the subway, take line 1 to stop 13. Follow the signs to exit into the station plaza. The Gyeongbu Line travels north to Seoul and the Gyeongjeon Line goes west along the southern coast to Mokpo.

By Bus
There are two main bus stations in Busan. The major one is the Busan Bus Complex, which is in the same building as the Busan Dongbu Gyeongnam Intercity Bus Terminal (with buses that travel to the east) at Nopo-dong. From there, you can pick up subway line 1 to get into the city. The other is Seobu Intercity Bus Terminal (which has buses to the west), which is on subway line 2, stop 227 (take exit 1). Buses run daily about every 15 minutes to and from major cities throughout South Korea.

Buses from the Seoul Express Bus Terminal to the Busan Bus Complex start running at 6am and run daily every 15 minutes until 10:40pm, with ticket prices ranging from ₩20,100 to ₩29,900. Daily buses departing from Dong Seoul Bus Terminal to the Busan Bus Complex start running at 6am and depart every 60 minutes until 6:40pm at a cost of ₩20,600 to ₩30,800.

By Boat
You can take a boat to Busan Port from cities in South Korea, China, and Japan (☎ 051/999-3000; www.busanferry.com or http://busanpa.com). The terminal is centrally located, so once you disembark, you’ll find it very easy to get to your hotel. You can catch the subway, local buses, or a taxi from the port.

There is also a coastal pier (for domestic ferries) and an international pier. Both are located in Juang-dong. Ships from the domestic pier daily arrive from and depart to Jeju Island, Changsungpo, Geoje-do, Okpo, Gohyun, Haegeumgang, Hungmu, and Yeosu. You can also catch a tour boat to explore Jeju and the many islands of Hallyeo-sudo (Hallyeo Maritime National Park) along the southern coast. From the international pier, you can also catch ferries to Fukuoka (Hakata) and Shimonoseki in Japan and Yodai in China. Keep in mind that whether or not the ships actually sail is completely dependent on the weather, so make sure to confirm your reservations in advance with Busan Information for Coastal Tours 16, Jung-ang-dong 5-ga, Jung-gu (☎ 051/469-0116 or -0117). Japan doesn’t require visas for short (less than 90 days) visits by citizens of the U.S., U.K., Canada, or Australia. China, however, requires visas even for travelers in transit.

The following ferry companies operate from Busan passenger port: Dongyang Express Ferry Co., Jeju (☎ 051/464-2266); Gukje Dae-ho Development Co., Jeju (☎ 051/464-6601); Gukje Tong-un Co., Jeju (☎ 051/464-2228); Semo Co., Changsungpo, Gohyun, Sungpo, Okpo, Chungmu, Yosu, Saryangdo, Samcheonpo, and Namhae (☎ 051/469-3851); Shimonoseki Ferry Co., Shimonoseki, Japan (☎ 051/463-3161); Koryo Ferry Co., Fukuoka, Japan (☎ 051/466-7799); Hanguk Express Ferry Co., Fukuoka, Japan (☎ 051/465-6114); and Chinsung Co. Ltd., Yunae, China (☎ 051/441-888).
To get to the boat terminal on the subway, take line 1 to stop 12 (Jungang-dong Station). It's one stop from the Busan Train Station. Bus nos. 8, 8-1, 11, 70, 88-1, 97, 101, 109, 135, 190, 309, and 507 all go to the port.

VISITOR INFORMATION
Good tourist information in English is available at the Gimhae Airport. The office on the first floor of the international terminal is open daily from 9am to 5pm (☎ 051/973-2800). The Busan Tourist Information Center office (☎ 051/973-4607; http://english.busan.go.kr) on the first floor of the domestic terminal is open daily from 9am to 9pm.

There are also several tourist information booths throughout the city. The easiest to find is the one at Busan Station (subway line 1, stop 13), located right next to the ticket counters inside the terminal. All booths (☎ 051/441-6565) are open Tuesday through Saturday 9am to 9pm, and Sunday and Monday 9am to 5pm. You'll also find visitor information on the first floor of the International Ferry Terminal (☎ 051/465-3471; daily 8am–6pm); in Haeundae Beach, Woo-1-dong, 629-3 Haeundae-gu (☎ 051/749-5700; daily 9am–6pm). Tourist information in English is also available by dialing ☎ 1330 and the foreigner's service center at ☎ 051/441-9685. The city's official site is at http://english.busan.go.kr.

CITY LAYOUT
Busan is located in the Nakdong River Valley, and mountains separate some of the city's districts. Mt. Geumjeong looms on the western side, with its hiking trails, views, and the famous temple Beomeosa. The city's expansive beaches, the most popular being Haeundae, Gwangalli, and Songjeong, attract visitors year-round, but are positively crawling in the summertime. Its traditional markets and shopping districts are found in Nam-dong and Seomyeon (what they call the “new downtown”).

BUSAN NEIGHBORHOODS IN BRIEF

Songjeong On the far eastern side of the city lies its third-most-popular beach. The northern, rocky part of this shoreline attracts fishermen, but the expansive sandy part draws big beach crowds—though not nearly as big as the crowds that flock to the beaches of Haeundae and Gwangalli. That’s because Songjeong is a bit out of the way. Still, it’s worth a visit, and early risers should try to catch the sunrise from Haedong Yonggungsa (p. 331), the temple perched on the rocky cliffs above.

Haeundae Home to the most famous and frequented beach in all of South Korea, Haeundae attracts several hundred thousand visitors annually. Major resort hotels are perched above the ocean here, and a few offer the rare experience of soaking in an oceanside hot spring. Though it’s a bit far from the shore, this neighborhood offers both budget accommodations and a ton of shopping options.

Gwangalli Near Haeundae, the Gwangalli neighborhood is also a hot beach resort location. Its open-air café street draws thousands of visitors with its neon lights and views of the Gwangan Bridge. Popular with the younger crowd, the area boasts galleries, a cultural center, and plenty of opportunities to shop. The beach’s outdoor stage is also the center of rock concerts and various festivals throughout the year.
Nampo-Dong/Gwangbok-Dong/Jung-Gu The city’s major markets are here, including the Jagalchi Market, the Dried Seafood Market, and the Herb Market, and there are inexpensive yeogwan (inns) within walking distance of them all. The Pusan International Film Festival (PIFF) is also held every September in (where else?) PIFF Square. Theater lovers will find small, funky productions being put on here, though sadly most are in Korean.

Yeong-Do/Taejong-Dae The island of Yeong-do separates the two halves of Busan harbor. The center of the island is residential, while its harborfront is rather industrial. But the island’s southernmost tip belongs to Taejong-dae, famous for its views of the Korea Strait—on clear days, you can see all the way to Japan.

Songdo The first of Busan’s beaches to be used for recreation, Songdo underwent a 1-year coastal maintenance project and reopened in 2005. It’s less popular (and less dramatic) than the beaches in Haeundae and Gwangalli, so it’s best for those looking to avoid huge crowds (though good luck doing that anywhere in July–Aug). Songdo is famous for Amnan Park and its raw fish restaurants; this area is ideal to relax after a long day of sunbathing.

Eulsukdo/Dadaepo This island in the middle of the Nakdong River channel is the perfect resting place for migratory birds. A sanctuary for these avian visitors is found on the southeastern part of the island. On the western peninsula nearby is Dadaepo beach, the widest in the city. There is also a cultural center, an outdoor concert hall, a drive-in theater, and an inline skating rink.

Seomyeon The busiest area in Busan, the Seomyeon neighborhood has developed into a sort of second downtown thanks to its open markets, underground shopping arcade, and cheap eateries (especially those in Mokja Golmok [“Let’s Eat Alley”]). It’s popular any night of the week with college students and young professionals. This is a good area to stay in if you’re more interested in shopping and eating well than in hitting one of Busan’s many beaches.

Dongnae Located north of Seomyeon, the Dongnae district houses one of the oldest known hot springs in the country. This is a great place to experience South Korea’s hot spring and spa culture. The area is also home to Busan National University (PNU). Not surprisingly, the PNU area (Busan Daehak-ap) has the city’s newer bars, cafes, and nightclubs.

Geumjeong Geumjeong is home to one of the most famous Buddhist temples in South Korea, Beomeosa (p. 331). A hike along the walls of the Geumjeong Fortress (p. 333) or a visit to the 500 wisteria vines is a great way to get away from the hustle and bustle of the city below. Pack a picnic lunch and don your hiking boots to enjoy a bit of nature and the view.

BY SUBWAY Busan’s extensive subway system makes it possible to go just about anywhere within the city. There are three lines and announcements are made in both English and Korean. The trains start running daily at 5:10am and stop at 12:45am and a birdcall (as well as a verbal announcement) is used to signal transfer stations. To use the subway, you can buy single tickets at automatic ticket machines. (Tip: The automatic ticket... machines accept only W1,000 bills or coins, so be sure to carry small bills. They will, however, give you coin change.) One-way fares are W1,100 for travel in one “section” (up to a 10km/6¼-mile distance) and W1,300 for two sections (distances over 10km/6¼ miles). Be sure to hold onto your ticket because you’ll need it to exit the subway as well. If you plan on taking the subway or bus extensively, you should get either the Hanaro (☏ 051/868-7621) or Mybi card (☏ 051/1588-8990), which you can purchase for a minimum of W5,000 and refill as needed. Both cards are sold at bus stops, subway ticket offices, or Pusan Bank (www.pusanbank.co.kr). Fares with either card are W990 for travel in one section and W1,170 for two sections. At the end of your trip, you can get a refund of any unused fares by showing your passport and returning the card at Pusan Bank.

BY TAXI  Busan has four types of taxis—regular, call, deluxe, and TIP taxis. You can flag a regular taxi at a taxi stand or along any street. You’ll know a taxi is available by the lit sign on top or a red card on the right side of the dashboard. Call taxis can be called from hotels or other locations. Some drivers of call taxis speak English, although you shouldn’t count on that, as most do not. Deluxe taxis are black and charge more than twice the regular fare. Deluxe taxi drivers generally speak English, take credit cards, and provide in-car phones. They can be flagged down anywhere, but can be found more easily at airports, hotels, tourist sites, and transportation terminals. The fares for regular taxis start at W1,800 and go up in W100 increments, depending on distance and riding time. There is a 20% increase in fees at night. Deluxe taxis start at W4,200 and go up in W200 increments. Their fares don’t go up at night. TIP taxis (found mostly at airports, tourist hotels, and transportation terminals) have a picture of a seagull (the official bird of Busan) on them (“TIP” is the name of the bird, not a suggestion of what you should do with your money). They provide a variety of language services and accept credit cards.

BY BUS  There are three types of local buses in Busan: the regular (which are blue and white and make more stops), the express (which are red and white and make fewer stops), and the late-night bus. Local buses have destinations written in both English and Korean with recorded messages that announce the next stop. Look at the bus route and plan ahead, especially if the buses are crowded. Once you’re on the bus, push the button to let the driver know you want to get off and always exit the buses through the back door. Bus drivers generally don’t speak English.

Bus fares can be paid with cash (exact change required), tokens, bus passes, or a Hanaro or Mybi card (which can be used on both buses and subways). Cash fare for regular buses is W1,000 or W950 with a Hanaro card, Mybi card, or bus tour pass. For the express bus, fare is W1,500 and W1,000, respectively. The late-night buses are W1,800 cash and W1,700 with a card. All buses issue free transfers that can be used within the next half-hour. For more info, contact the Busan Bus Transportation Association (☏ 051/508-9200).

BY CAR  Busan is easier to navigate by car than Seoul. You will still need an international driver’s license (some rental places require you to show your national driver’s license as well) and must be over 21. Renting a car in Busan is not cheap, but can be convenient if you plan to travel outside the city to areas where the subway or buses don’t go. You can rent a car for as few as 6 hours or for several days. Prices start at W31,800 for a small-size car (like a Hyundai Elantra) for 6 hours on a weekday (an additional W3,180 on weekends), or, for a larger car (like a Kia Potentia), W145,300 for 1 weekday
(₩1,450 more on weekends). There are dozens of car-rental agencies throughout the city, but only a handful operate from Gimhae Airport. They are Tongilro Rent Car (☏ 051/941-5400); Avis Rent-a-Car (☏ 051/941-7400); Gumho Rent-a-Car (☏ 051/972-1515); Jeju Rent Car (☏ 051/972-4777); and Samsung Rent Car (☏ 051/973-6611). You can reserve your car online before you arrive, or ask your hotel desk to help you with a rental if you want a car just for a short while during your stay.

ON FOOT Due to its size, Busan is not a city to explore solely on foot, but there are nice places to walk once you get there by bus or subway. Areas around Gwangalli Beach and Yongdusan are especially nice for strolling. There are also wonderful hiking opportunities in the mountains and parks. See the “Hiking” section on p. 337.

American Express The American Express office is located on the ninth floor of the Busan Jung-ang Building #51, Daechang-dong 1-ga, Jung-gu (☏ 051/461-0098).

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs In general, ATMs are located at the airport, the train station, supermarkets, and at banks. Kookmin Bank, Citibank, Korea Exchange Bank, and Chohung Bank all have international ATMs, and while most of these machines dispense only Korean won, some do dispense American dollars. Most ATMs provide service in Korean and English, but Citibank ATMs provide information in 11 languages. There are eight Citibank locations throughout Busan (☏ 051/621-0222; www.citibank.co.kr). Most ATMs operate 24 hours.

At banks in Busan, each customer takes a numbered ticket and waits until his or her number is called. If you want to exchange traveler’s checks, make sure you have your passport, and if you are exchanging cash, you must visit a bank that is authorized for international exchange. Banks are open Monday to Friday 9:30am to 4:30pm and are closed on weekends and national holidays.

Car Rental See the “By Car” listing in the previous “Getting Around” section.

Cellphones KTF cellphones can be rented at Gimhae Airport and Busan’s International Ferry Terminal. See chapter 3 for details.

Consulates Busan doesn’t have an American consulate here, but the U.K. honorary consulate (☏ 070/7733-1055) is at 111-2, Suan-dong, Dongnae-gu.

Australia has an honorary consulate (☏ 051/647-1762) in room no. 802 of the Samwhan Officetel, 830-295, Bumil 2-dong, Dong-gu.

Canada has an honorary consulate at the Dongsung Chemical Co. Ltd., 472 Shin Pyung-dong, Saha-gu (☏ 051/204-5581). Take bus no. 2, 11, 98, 113, 138-1, 161, or 338 to the Dongsung Chemical Co. Station. They’re open Monday through Friday 8am to noon and 1 to 4:30pm.

Currency Exchange You can change money at most Busan banks on weekdays—just look for the currency exchange desk. The Korean Exchange Bank, 89-1, Jung-ang-dong 4-ga, Jung-gu, is the most convenient place to exchange currency downtown. You’ll also find currency exchange bureaus at the airport, at the train station, and in large shopping areas. It is more difficult to exchange traveler’s checks, but most banks will accept hard currency, like U.S. dollars and British pounds. Be sure to have your passport and keep the receipt to change back any leftover currency you may have at the end of your trip.

Doctors & Dentists Most of the nicer hotels have medical clinics staffed by registered nurses and have doctors on duty during specified hours or on call 24 hours. Otherwise, your concierge or the U.S. consulate in Seoul can refer you to an English-speaking doctor or dentist. In an emergency, dial 999 or call one of the recommendations under “Hospitals,” below.

Embassies & Consulates The Australian Consul is located at Room 802 Samwhan, Bumil 2-dong, Dong-gu (051/830-295). The Australian Embassy is at 1434-1, U 1-dong, Haeundae-gu (051/744-2281 or 051/647-1762; www.southkorea.embassy.gov.au). The Canadian Consulate is at the Dongsung Chemical Co., 472 Shin Pyung-dong, Saha-gu or 32-1, 2-ga Daechang-dong, Jung-gu (051/246-7024 or 051/240-1813). The U.K. Consulate is at 25-2 Jung-ang-dong, Jung-gu (051/463-4630). The New Zealand Consulate can be found at 84-10, 4-ga, Jung-ang-dong, Jung-gu (051/464-5055). There is no American or British embassy in Busan.

Hospitals Several hospitals in Busan have doctors who speak English fluently. If you need medical help, try the Good Gang-an Hospital, 40-1 Namcheon-song, Suyeong-gu, easy to find if you take the subway to Geumnyeonsan Station (exit 4; 051/625-0900); or the PNU Hospital, 305 Gudeok-lo, Seogu, Ami-dong (051/240-7890), which you can get to by taking subway line 1 to Tosung-dong Station. There is a special receptionist for English speakers on the sixth floor.

Internet Access There are many ways to access the Internet from Busan. Many of the high-end hotels and love motels in the city provide free Internet access in the rooms. There are also thousands of PC bangs (computer cafes) that offer high-speed connections and charge between W500 and W2,000 per hour. Some also offer printing and scanning services and many are open 24 hours.

Laundry Most of the city’s hotels have laundry facilities available. There are no coin laundries in the city, but you can find dry cleaners scattered around each neighborhood.

Maps Free city maps in English are available at tourist information centers located throughout the city. See “Visitor Information,” earlier, for locations.

Newspapers & Magazines The city’s newspaper, the Busan Ilbo, stopped its English coverage online, but English print versions of two Korean newspapers, the Korean Herald (www.koreaherald.co.kr) and The Korea Times (http://times.hankooki.com), can be found at convenience stores, street stalls, hotels, and bus, train, and subway terminals for W600. News magazines issued abroad can be found in most large hotel bookstores, but for more specialized journals or periodicals, visit the major bookstores. See the “Shopping” section for locations.

Pay Phones There are three kinds of public telephones in Busan: phones that take only coins, those that accept calling cards, and those that accept both. Charges start at W70 for 3 minutes. Toll and international calls are charged depending on where you’re calling and how long you talk. Charges are discounted by 30% on Saturdays and holidays and from 8am to 9pm on weekdays. Calling cards may be purchased at banks, telephone offices, supermarkets, or convenience stores in W3,000, W5,000, or W10,000 denominations.

Pharmacies Simple Western remedies like aspirin are most likely to be found in 24-hour convenience stores and the lobbies of high-end hotels. You can find pharmacies in any neighborhood, but none of them is open 24 hours. Most display a large cross symbol (usually green), but all of them have the Korean word for medicine (∼) on their windows.

Police The emergency number for the police is (2) 112. There are 14 police stations throughout the city of Busan. The Busan Police are under the jurisdiction of the national government, since all of South Korea is under one national police organization.

Post Offices There are 145 post offices and 80 postal agencies in the city, so it’s not difficult to find one. Just look for the red signs with white text and the flying-bird logo. They’re all open 9am to 6pm weekdays, but only a handful are open 9am to 1pm Saturday.

Restrooms There are free public restrooms available at most subway stations, bus terminals, train stations, and some tourist attractions. However, some restrooms in South Korea do not provide toilet paper or paper towels. It is best to carry a small packet of tissues with you at all times. You can buy them at any corner store or in vending machines outside some restrooms for W500. American-style fast-food restaurants and large department stores have the best public restrooms.

Safety The crime rate is relatively low in all of South Korea. In larger cities like Busan, you should take the usual precautions as you would in any major city in the world. Watch out for pickpockets and purse snatchers on public transportation, and exercise caution when traveling alone at night, especially around the port areas.

Taxes A value-added tax (VAT) of 10% is usually added to most goods and services. Most stores and restaurants just include it in their prices. In tourist hotels, the VAT is applied to rooms, meals, and services and is included on the bill. A TAX-FREE SHOPPING sign on a store means that you can get a refund on the VAT when you buy at that store. You must get a receipt, and get a stamp from the Customs officer; be prepared to show him or her the purchased item and the receipt. You can get a refund at the Cash Refund Office at the airport. For more info call Global Refund at (2) 02/776-2170. You must leave South Korea within 3 months from the date of purchase to receive the refund.

Water Drinking tap water in Busan is not advised. Most restaurants will offer water from a self-service water dispenser, which is fine to drink. Otherwise, bottled water is recommended. You can buy bottles at any corner store or tourist attraction for about W500.

Weather Located in the temperate monsoon zone and influenced by its seaside location, Busan has four distinct seasons. The city is relatively warm year-round and positively steamy in the summer, reaching up to 90°F (32°C) with high humidity. Its average annual temperature is 57°F (14°C), with average winter temperatures around 39°F (4°C). Weather information can be found in the directory at www.korea.net or by dialing (2) 131.
Accommodations in Busan range from high-end beach resorts and rental condos to small yeogwan and love motels.

Although most of the high-end resorts are in Haeundae, there are a variety of motels and midpriced lodgings throughout the city. Make sure you specify that you want a room with a bed (chimdae bahng); otherwise, you’ll end up with a Korean-style ondol room where you sleep on the floor on padded blankets (the floors are heated in the winter). Unless otherwise indicated, a 10% VAT will usually be added to prices quoted for high-end hotels. Lower-end yeogwan and love motels quote flat fees that you pay upfront when you check in. High season in Busan is from mid-July to August, when the kids are out of school and the water becomes a comfortable temperature for swimming. Be sure to reserve a room in advance if planning a trip during that time, but usually it’s not difficult to just walk in and get a room in town.

Other than the accommodations listed below, two of Busan’s temples offer overnight stays with an opportunity to meditate and participate in temple life. Spending a night at Beomeosa (☎ 051/508-3122) costs ₩50,000 to ₩80,000 per night, which includes dinner and breakfast. The smaller, less famous Hongbeopsa (☎ 051/508-0345) offers a cheaper stay at ₩20,000 per night. They ask that you make reservations at least 10 days in advance. Additional info about the temples can be found in the “Top Attractions” section, later in this chapter.

SONGJEONG

Busan Dongseong Youth Hostel ★ Kids One of the few youth hostels in the city, it has very inexpensive rooms in a good location within walking distance of Songjeong Beach. You can opt for a cheap bed in a dorm-style room or get a family room (bedrooms and a living room area) for not much more.

206-11, Songjeong-dong, Haeundae-gu. ☎ 051/703-8466 or 7. Fax 051/745-0256. 141 beds. ₩22,000 per person for adults, ₩17,000 for teens and children; family rooms available starting at ₩30,000. Amenities: Cafeteria; auditorium. In room: A/C.

SongJung Hotel Located right next to Songjeong Beach, this is one of the larger hotels in the area—which is to say, not that large at all. The hotel doesn’t have a lot of amenities (they do have a cozy lounge), but the rooms are airy, clean, and largely undorned, with off-white wood furnishings. They have both oceanview and city-view rooms, but you’ll pay extra for the seaside privilege. Even if you opt for a less expensive room, you’ll still be within easy walking distance of the beach. The staff does not speak great English, but they are friendly and helpful.

297-9, Songjeong-dong, Haeundae-gu. ☎ 051/702-7766. www.songjunghotel.co.kr. 60 units. ₩140,000 single/double, but prices can go as low as ₩50,000 weekdays off season. MC, V. Amenities: Restaurant, cafe, karaoke. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, minibar.

HAEUNDAE

Novotel Ambassador Busan ★★★ Formerly the Busan Marriott, this high-end hotel is one of the new kids on Haeundae Beach. Great for both business travelers and luxury vacationers, the upgraded spa (which has a natural hot spring) and golf center are a nice touch. With modern facilities and recent upgrades, the Ambassador has contemporary dining available on-site. The updated rooms are spacious and airy with probably the best beds in the city. There is an extra charge for an oceanview room.

1405-16 Jung-dong, Haeundae-gu.  ☏ 051/743-1234. Fax 051/743-1250. www.novotelbusan.com. 327 units. ₩310,000 standard rooms, but discounts are readily available. AE, DC, MC, V. Amenities: 3 restaurants, bar, cafe, lounge; babysitting; concierge; golf center; health club; Jacuzzi; pool; sauna; smoke-free rooms. In room: A/C, hair dryer, minibar, Wi-Fi.

Palé de CZ ★★★ One of the newest hotels to set up beachside digs in Haeundae, this Korean-style “condo” hotel stands 17 stories tall. It has a variety of rooms and suites with dining areas, flatscreen televisions and cozy beds with fluffy comforters. Ask for an oceanview to get the most out of the prime location and to see the boardwalk action below. Both beds and ondol rooms available.

1124-2 Jung-dong, Haeundae-gu.  ☏ 051/746-1010. 197 units. ₩150,000 to ₩250,000 standard room; suites ₩250,000 and up. AE, MC, V. Amenities: Restaurant, bar cafe, 2 lounges; health club; indoor golf; pool. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, kitchen.

Riviera Hotel ★ Value  Located on top of the Riviera Department store, it isn’t the fanciest hotel in the neighborhood, but it is conveniently located, as it’s within walking distance to both the subway and the beach. The rooms are basic, but serviceable, and the bathrooms are small, though they offer both a tub and a shower head. The English-speaking staff is exceedingly polite.

1380-14 Jung-1-dong, Haeundae-gu.  ☏ 051/466-9101. Fax 051/462-9101. 77 units. ₩190,000 standard room, but discounts available. AE, MC, V. Parking in the department store below. Amenities: Restaurant; room service. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, minibar.

Westin Chosun Beach Hotel ★★  Built in 1978, this was Busan’s first luxury hotel. With a prime location at the western end of Haeundae Beach, the hotel’s rooms all have views of the ocean and Gwangalli Bridge or the forest park. In my opinion, it’s worth it to pay a little extra and get the ocean view. The beds aren’t as “heavenly” as the hotel claims, but they are comfortable. Most rooms and suites are spacious and Western-style, but they do have Korean-style ondol rooms, which are also roomy. Staff levels of English vary from very good to passable, but everyone is extremely polite and accommodating.

737 Woo 1-dong, Haeundae-gu.  ☏ 051/749-7000. Fax 051/742-1313. www.starwoodhotels.com. 290 units. ₩155,000 standard room; ₩300,000 deluxe oceanview suite with king bed. AE, DC, MC, V. Valet and free self-parking. Amenities: 3 restaurants, bar, cafe, lounge; babysitting; boat rentals; bikes; concierge; driving range; health club; pool; sauna; spa; room service; smoke-free rooms; Wi-Fi (in lobby). In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, Internet (fee), minibar.

Inexpensive

Busan Youth Hostel Arpina ★★★  This hostel belongs to the Arpina chain (arpina is a Korean-made word, short for areumdappie ponada, which translates as “bloom beautifully”), which advertises it as the world’s best youth hostel. For the price, the convenient location and facilities can’t be beat. Though the rooms are modest, they are modern, some with ocean views of Haeundae Beach and the Gwangalli Bridge. Ideal for families traveling together, ask for one of the twin or triple “business rooms” if you want a Western-style hotel room with a bed. Family rooms are suites (usually with one double bed), complete with dining table and kitchens. They don’t take reservations online, but you can e-mail or call to book a room.

1417 Wu-dong, Haeundae-gu.  ☏ 051/731-9800. Fax 051/740-3225. www.busanyouthhostel.co.kr. 469 beds. ₩22,000 bed in dorm room; ₩96,800 standard room. AE, MC, V. On-site parking. Amenities:

Restaurant, bar, lounge; driving range; health club; pool; sauna; smoke-free rooms. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, Internet.

Grand Prix Motel ★★★ Value  Of the many love motels in the area, this one is convenient to both the beach and the subway (about midway between the two), close enough to the main drag, but far enough to be away from most of the noise. In this older building, the rooms are still spacious and comfortable.

Own House Motel ★ An upscale version of many of the love motels in South Korea, this motel has modern and comfortable rooms. Although a bit on the smaller side, the rooms have understated decor with clean-line and dark wood furnishings. All rooms have their own whirlpool tub, so you can see why it’s popular with couples. There are only two types of rooms, deluxe and superior, and it’s worth it to pay the W10,000 more for the superior.

GWANGALLI

Hotel Homers ★★★ Finds  This boutique hotel is located near the bridge in Gwangalli. It has state-of-the-art facilities (including a nice fitness room, sauna, and massage options), making it one of the most popular places for South Korean tourists. The building is 20 stories tall, with most rooms having seaside views. The price listed below is their regular price, but you can get a much better rate if you book online. Rooms are contemporary yet cozy, with comfortable beds (except in the Korean-style rooms, of course).

JUNG-GU/NAMPO-DONG

Busan Tourist Hotel ★★★ Finds  Convenient to both the Gukje and the Jagalchi markets, this hotel is located at the base of Yongdusan (near Busan Tower) so you’ll have to walk up a bit of a slope to get to it. Built in 1974, the hotel is a bit dated, but convenient. Rooms are relatively spacious though they are sparsely decorated (ondol rooms are a bit larger than Western-style ones).

12 Donggwang-dong 2-ga, Jung-gu. ☏ 051/241-4301. Fax 051/244-1153. 275 units. W120,000 standard room, but discounts are readily available. MC, V. Amenities: 3 restaurants bakery, cafe, karaoke lounge; health club; room service; sauna. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, Internet.

Commodore Hotel ★★★  Inspired by palaces from the Joseon Dynasty, this 15-story hotel is hard to miss with its pagoda-like shape and traditional designs incorporated into a high-rise building. Inside, the rooms and amenities are modern. Added bonus: It’s centrally located just minutes from the ferry terminals and the Jagalchi Market. If you have extra room in your budget, book a “corner suite” for the best deal in terms of space and amenities.

Blue Backpackers Hostel ★★ (Finds)  Located inside the Gyeongnam Apartments, this spare but functional hostel is the best value you’ll find in the city’s center. It’s within walking distance to shops, banks, and the subway. The free Internet, laundry, and breakfast (well, toast and coffee) are an added bonus, especially for the price. All beds and rooms have shared bathrooms and the owner speaks English. Be sure to book well in advance during high season in July and August (though the owner will let you sleep on the living room floor or sofa for W10,000 if you care less about privacy than about saving money). Enter at the 1-2 door at Building 106 and take the elevator to the 18th floor.

Bldg. 106 #1802, Gyeongnam Apt., 944-1 Beomcheon 2-dong Jin-gu. ☎ 051/634-3962. 14 beds. W15,000 dorm-room bed; W25,000 single; W35,000 double. MC, V. Amenities: Living room w/TV/VCR; shared kitchen.

Busan Lotte Hotel ★★  Built in 1997, this is one of the few luxury hotels convenient for business travelers who have work in the Busanjin area. It’s close to shopping, subways, and the financial district in the central area. There is a Las Vegas–style theater with shows that change every year (at a fraction of Vegas’s prices). The tropical rainforest lounge is sort of fun and the Lotte department store is conveniently attached. The hotel is forty-three stories high; you’ll get a magnificent view of the city from any of the higher floors. The rooms aren’t huge and the bathrooms are even smaller, especially for the price, but the staff speak English and are very professional.

DONGNAE

Hotel Nongshim ★★ (Finds)  A midsize building in the hills, the hotel’s best attribute is the Heosimcheong (they spell it Hurshimchung) Spa (p. 335), a multilevel bathhouse associated with the hotel. Both Western-style and ondol rooms are available.

137-7 Oncheon-dong, Dongnae-gu. ☎ 051/550-2100. 199 rooms. W190,000 double/ondol; W400,000 and up suite (rack rate). 10% VAT and service charge not included. AE, MC, V. Amenities: 3 restaurants, bakery, cafe, nightclub; health club; sauna; spa. In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer, Internet.

4 WHERE TO DINE

There is no shortage of places to eat in Busan, with restaurants to fit every budget, and the city is known for its fresh hwae (raw fish) and other seafood. Raw-fish restaurants and markets line the shore in Haeundae (on the east of the shore on the other side of the boardwalk away from the Westin Chosun), Gwangalli, and Songdo beaches, and at the Jagalchi Market.

Other specialties of the city include so galbi (beef ribs, usually cooked on a tabletop grill at your table), which can be found in eateries throughout the city. Sanseong Village’s restaurants specialize in yeomso gogi (grilled goat meat) or heuk yeomso (black goat), which is usually enjoyed with the local liquor, a type of rice wine. For dweji galbi (pork ribs), there is actually a street, Choryang Galbi Street, dedicated solely to restaurants that serve pork.
You can also get your fair share of cheap street food in the mokja golmok ("let’s eat alley"). There are two of them in town—one in Seomyeon and another in Changseon-dong near the Jagalchi Market. They feature sit-down joints and street vendors serving everything from flatcakes and noodles to meat and dumplings. There is even a street in the Nampo-dong area called the “Original Bossam and Jokbal Alley.” Jokbal (boiled pig feet) is actually tender, sliced pork, served with bossam (lettuce leaves) to be eaten with rice, kimchi (fermented cabbage), and other banchan (side dishes).

Open-air cafes are concentrated along the shores of Gwangalli looking out onto the view of the bridge and the ocean. Restaurants and cafes are also clustered at Gwangeogol Food Town near Songjeong Beach.

Almost all of the larger hotels have their own restaurants, but prices are more expensive, since you’re paying for the ambience and the view. Department stores have Korean “fast food” (usually on the basement floor) and their own restaurants on the top levels. There is no end of street carts selling a variety of snacks and drinks near market streets and at night.

As elsewhere in South Korea, Korean food is usually cheaper than Western cuisine, since most ingredients have to be imported. Even getting a hamburger or pizza won’t be cheaper than buying some ddeokbokgi (spicy rice cake sticks) or gimbap (rice and other stuff rolled in seaweed).

HAEUNDAE

If you saunter along the boardwalk on the beach with the Westin Chosun Hotel at your back, you will come upon a row of hwae restaurants along the shore. Although the seafood here is good and fresh, you’re paying a bit more for the location and the view. Haeundae does have its share of upscale restaurants. The fancier ones are located inside the high-end hotels. For less expensive, but equally delicious fare, look for those tucked away in small streets and alleyways away from the waterfront.

Expensive

Ventana ★★ WESTERN/STEAK/SEAFOOD  Possibly the best place to get a steak dinner in the city. With the ocean view and the plush chairs, it’s a good choice for a romantic dinner or a business lunch. Most meals come with soup, salad, and an appetizer. The best part is the sommelier’s selection of imported wines, which are hard to find in Busan.

Inside the Novotel. ☏ 051/746-8481. Entrees W48,000 and up. AE, DC, MC, V. Mon–Sat 11:30am–2:30pm and 6–10pm; Sun 11:30am–2:30pm.

Moderate

Ganga ★★ INDIAN  This Seoul chain has made its way to Busan. Good thing because it’s one of the best places to get Indian food in the country. Although prices aren’t cheap, no one’s complaining since their mouths are too full of chicken masala. Get an extra serving of nan to mop up the sauces, since the rice is the short-grain, Korean style instead of the preferred basmati.

Haeundae Amso Galbi Jib ★★★ KOREAN BEEF  Known for their galbi (beef rib) dishes, they also serve fresh beef for your barbecuing pleasure. For those who aren’t in the mood for meat, not to fear—this place serves up excellent noodle dishes, too.
Although the sign is only in Korean (large white letters on the brown building), you can’t miss the traditional roofed entrance gate to the restaurant (although the building itself is a more modern brick block). While this is not necessarily a cheap place, the beef dishes are still priced fairly reasonably.

Napal Ggot (Morning Glory) Restaurant ★★ KOREAN This restaurant is known for its affordable hanjeongshik (traditional Korean meal), which consists of an ever-changing number of courses and many varieties of banchan. Starting at W20,000 for the lowest-priced meal, it’s a bargain for the nicely presented dishes and the atmosphere.

Inexpensive Café Ban ★★★ CAFE In the gallery district of Haeundae, this modern space (with a polished steel, concrete, and wood interior) showcases not only good, strong coffee, but art from famous local artists. The drinks aren’t cheap, but you’re partially paying for the ambience too. So linger and enjoy a cup of the Brazilian coffee with a simple sandwich on the outdoor patio.

501-15 Jung-dong, Haeundae-gu. 051/746-8853. Coffee W6,000–W8,000; sandwiches W8,000. MC, V. Sun–Thurs noon–1am; Fri–Sat noon–2am. Parking available.

GWANGALLI For inexpensive and fresh hwae, the Millak Hwae Town at the northeast end of Gwangalli Beach is a place to get relatively inexpensive fare. You choose a fish from one of the vendors on the first floor. They run from about W20,000 to W30,000. For an extra W10,000, they’ll slice and dice and fix it up for you upstairs. You can’t get fresher fish than that! Be sure you bring your appetite because the meal involves several courses, with the hwae as the highlight of the meal, ending with spicy fish stew and rice.

For a different experience, there is a Kongnamul Haejang Guk (Bean Sprout Seafood Soup Street) next to Millak Hwae Town where a handful of restaurants specialize in this spicy soup.

If you’re not in the mood for fish or soup, head on over to the Gwangalli Eonyang Bulgogi Street (on the other side of Gwangalli Beach), which is a street lined with bulgogi (marinated sliced rib-eye) restaurants.

Also on the beach side with a view of the Gwangan bridge is Café Street, a line of open-air cafes, where you can enjoy the nighttime view of the lights on the water while sipping a joe with your loved one.

DONGNAE-GU, GEUMJEONG-GU & PNU AREA

This neighborhood is famous for its Dongnae pajeon (green-onion flatcakes). You can find them being made fresh on the streets or in most of the restaurants in this area. Not a big enough dish to make a meal, it’s a great appetizer or snack or can make a good anju (drinking snack) with your soju or beer.

Moderate Bawoo Seokswegui ★★ KOREAN BEEF Delicious Korean grilled beef at bargain-basement prices without compromising on taste, with generous portions. The galbi is terrific, and a terrific deal. Just remember, as with dining at any Korean barbecue place, you’ll be carrying the scent of your meal long after the flavors have left your tongue, so don’t wear anything too fancy.

1-10 Suan-dong, Dongnae-gu. \(051/556-6115\). Entrees $7,000–$13,500. MC, V. Daily 11am–midnight.

Goyu Hanjeongshik ★★ TRADITIONAL KOREAN  This is a great place to try a traditional hanjeongshik meal (rice served with side dishes, usually consisting of seasonal vegetables), since that’s their specialty. Be sure you bring your appetite, since the dishes will keep coming (they might fool you into thinking you’re done just because their service can be slow when they’re extra busy). There is a set menu here, but dishes vary depending on the season.

570-16 Myeong-lyun 1-dong, Dongnae-gu. \(051/557-2800\). Set menu $15,000–$20,000. MC, V. Daily 10am–10pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Parking available.

Pasta Vanita ITALIAN  A decent place to get spaghetti in the PNU area. Don’t expect authentic Italian fare, but the pastas are passable. You can get good vegetarian pizza and spaghetti with crab, but the biggest draw is the wide selection of imported wines. The restaurant is on the second floor of the building.

420-30 Jangjeon-dong, Geumjeong-gu. \(051/512-9113\). Entrees $11,000–$13,000. MC, V. Daily 11am–midnight. Take subway line 1 to PNU Station; it’s a 10-min. walk from there.

Inexpensive

Jumunjin Makguksu ★ KOREAN NOODLES  Located in a nondescript gray building (the name of the place is in Korean in white letters on the side and in front), this crowded joint serves up delicious and inexpensive makguksu (buckwheat noodles in broth) and kalguksu (handmade “knife” noodles—so called because they’re cut from the dough with a knife). Be prepared to wait in line (they’ll give you a number). They have only two types of noodles and pork, so it’s not difficult to decide what you want. Several locations in town.

In Sajik-dong, across from the Sajik baseball field (at the end of the alley where the Dunkin’ Donuts is located). \(051/501-7876\). Entrees $4,500–$13,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–10pm. Parking available, but difficult to get a spot.

JUNG-GU & NAMPO-DONG

Probably the cheapest hwae and seafood can be found at the Jagalchi Market, where you buy the fish from vendors on the street level and have them prepare it upstairs for you. They usually offer three meal options, labeled A, B, and C. Even the A course is quite filling with plenty of hwae, an appetizer course of mussels or other seafood, and maeuntang (spicy hot pot) to finish up the meal. All of the upstairs restaurants serve similar meals, costing between $50,000 and $80,000 for two people. I’ve listed my personal favorite, Gyeongbucksang Hwae, below. And don’t be offended by the ajumma (married ladies) who grab you by the arm and try to get you to eat at their place. The ones who have tables far away from the view have to use such aggressive tactics to get business during slow days.

For more hwae and other seafood, go to the fish market along the waterfront of Jagalchi shijang. The vendors display their fresh catch as you walk through the narrow walkway. You make your pick and sit at an inside table or outside bench or even watch as the ajumma cooks the food right there in front of you. Choices included a variety of hwae, grilled fish, and other fresh seafood.
If you're not in the mood for seafood, you can try your luck at the Changsun-dong Mokja “Let’s Eat” Street, between Gukje and Jagalchi markets, near the Art Street.

Moderate

Gyeongbukjang Hwae KOREAN SEAFOOD One of the many hwae jib (raw fish joints) above Jagalchi Market. They don't have the advantage of the table with a view, but they make up for it with their generous portions, so make sure you bring a full appetizer for this multicourse meal of seafood. They’ll start you out with some snacks (which go well with a cold beer) and then mussels and other shellfish. Then the large plate of raw fish arrives, and when you think you’re too full, they’ll bring the rice and a steaming pot of maeuntang with the bones and leftover bits from your hwae. Not a meal to be eaten alone; bring a friend and take your time savoring the fresh seafood.

Changseong-hyang Mandu Jib ★ KOREAN-STYLE CHINESE Fans of the film Oldboy might recognize this dumpling joint. Don’t worry that the menu isn’t in English, since you can just point at the pictures and order. They have the standard Korean-style Chinese dishes like jjajangmyeon (noodles with black-bean sauce) and tangsuyuk (sweet and sour pork). But the mandu (dumpling) dishes are what the regulars order. The hardest part is trying to decide whether you want them steamed or fried. Look for the name in gold Chinese letters on a brick facade.

5 TOP ATTRACTIONS

The beaches are the largest draw in Busan, but there are other great things to explore. Whether it’s seeing the live fish being sold at Jagalchi Market, watching the sunrise from Yonggungsa Temple, or sitting in a cafe at Gwangalli, there’s plenty to do. If you want to see some historical culture but have limited time, at least be sure to visit the famous Beomeosa Temple. Yongdusan Park is a fun place to stop by, especially on weekends when they are usually holding some sort of performance. In the evenings, you can take a cruise around the waters, sit at a cafe, or just watch couples launch bottle rockets off the sandy beaches.

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Busan Museum ★★ (Value) This is the major museum for the art, culture, and history of Busan. Built in 1975, the building was renovated in 2002. With over 4,500 items in its collection, the museum exhibits everything from cultural relics to calligraphic works. Plan on spending a couple of hours here, starting with the prehistoric displays and exhibits spanning the Gaya period to the Joseon Dynasty, through the Korean War to modern-day Busan. Unfortunately, the videos are only in Korean, but artifacts are all displayed with English text.

948-1, Daeyeon 4-dong, Nam-gu. 051/610-7111. www.museum.busan.kr. Admission W500 adults, free for seniors and children 12 and under and to all Sat. Mar–Oct Tues–Sun 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; last entry 1 hr. before closing. Closed national holidays. Subway: Take line 2 to Daeyeon, take exit 3, turn around 180 degrees, take the 1st left, and walk 10 min. Bus no. 25, 51, 68, 93, 134, 139, 239, 240, or 302.

Busan Museum of Modern Art (PMAM) ★ The largest modern art space in South Korea, this is one of the best places in the country to see what contemporary Korean artists are producing. The site of the annual Busan International Art Festival, the museum is also responsible for exhibits held at the Yongdusan gallery. Exhibits change every couple of months, so check with the museum to see what's showing in their galleries at the time you wish to visit. Plan to spend about an hour here.

Hankwang Museum A museum dedicated to the calligraphy and paintings of Korean, Japanese, and Chinese artists, the Hankwang was founded in 1975, but didn't become an official museum until 1996. It contains more than 500 works that were collected over a 50-year period by the late Kwangduk Han. Although only a fraction of its collection is exhibited at any given moment, it is a wonderful way to glimpse the talents of brush painters and see traditional landscapes of Asia spanning works from the Joseon Dynasty through the present time.

Toam Ceramic Park ★ Located in Gijang-gun, the most rural of Busan’s districts, this park is actually a working center for Busan's ceramic artisans. If you time your visit right, you may be able to catch one of the craftsmen at work. Either way, you'll enjoy the wide variety of ceramic figures on display here (and the over 2,000 ceramic figures with smiles and open mouths greeting you from the hillside). If that doesn’t sound all that interesting, you can also just take in the scenery from the lush surrounding garden. The small restaurant on-site is a nice place to get a delicious lunch of down-home Korean food, and the prices are reasonable: W5,000 for a bowl of pot jook (red-bean porridge) up to W15,000 for japchae (sweet-potato noodles).

521-1 Daebyeon-li, Gijang-eup, Gijang-gun. 051/724-2231. Free admission. Daily 10am–6pm. Take subway line 2 to Haeundae Station, and then take bus no. 142 or 181.

Yongdusan Gallery A small exhibition space just north of Yongdusan park, the gallery usually showcases exhibits from one major artist at a time. Featuring contemporary Korean works, the shows range from painting and sculpture to fashion and ceramics.

1-2, 2-ga, Gwangbok-dong, Jung-gu. 051/244-8228. Free admission. Daily 10am–6pm. Take the subway to either the Jung-ang-dong or Nampo-dong Station and walk to Yongdusan park. It is the 2-story building just north of the park.
TEMPLES

Beomeosa ★★ Originally built in 678, Beomeosa (like most of the temples in Korea) was destroyed during the Japanese Imjin Waeran invasion in 1592. Renovated in 1713, it is a wonderful example of mid–Joseon Dynasty temple architecture. The name Beomeosa means “fish of the Buddhist scripture temple.” Located at the edge of Geumjeongsan and amid a wisteria grove that blooms each May, it is Busan’s most famous temple, and it feels very far away from the modern city. Originally part of the Hwaeomsa sect, which believes in all-encompassing harmony, the temple is now administered by the Cheongye order of the Seon (or Zen) sect of Korean Buddhism. Several dozen monks live here, and more live in 11 adjacent hermitages.

The Beomeosa complex consists of a main hall, which houses the Seokgamoni Buddha and two bodhisattvas; a bell/drum pavilion (with a three-story pagoda and a lantern dating from the Shilla Dynasty); seven royal palace wings; and three gates. The main hall was rebuilt in 1614—look for the dragon’s heads carved into its rafters. To the left of the hall is a building that's split into three sections. The first section features murals depicting the eight major scenes from the Buddha’s life. Another section is dedicated to the Lonely Arhat, a Buddha saint who attains liberation from the cycle of birth and death, generally by leading a hermetic, monastic lifestyle. The third is filled with statues of Buddha’s disciples.

This is a great place to do a temple stay, offering a small glimpse into the lives of the monks who live here.

546 Cheongryong-dong, Geumjeong-gu. ☎️ 051/508-3122. Admission ₩1,000; ₩500 children, teens, and military. Wed–Mon 9:30am–5pm; last ticket sold at 4:30pm. Closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok. Subway: Take line 1 to Beomeosa Station, take exit 5 or 7, walk between the 2 exits along the road for 5 min. and you will reach the Samsin bus stop. Take bus no. 90 to temple. Bus no. 37, 47, 48, 49-1, 50, 50-1, 80-1, 147, 148, 247, or 301; get off at the last stop and take bus no. 90.

Haedong Yonggungsa ★★ Initially built in 1376 (during the Goryeo Dynasty), the main sanctuary was reconstructed in 1970. This is one of the few temples found along the coast and it honors the Haesu Gwaneum Daebul (Seawater Great Goddess Buddha of Mercy), who is said to live alone in the ocean and to ride on the back of a

A Feast Fit for a Monk

Many of South Korea’s temples offer meals to visitors and to those spending the night, and while temple cuisine is likely not the best food you’ll encounter on your trip, it does stem from some fascinating traditions. The food served at temples is always vegetarian and usually made up of rice and small banchan made from local and seasonal vegetables. However, the monks will not cook with the five “hot” vegetables, including garlic and ginger, because they believe that these foods lead to obscene thoughts when eaten raw and to anger when consumed cooked.

Indeed, Korean temple food is supposed to cleanse the body and encourage spirituality. Meals are prepared as “medicine” for the mind, body, and spirit and are not supposed to be eaten for pleasure. Even so, I find temple food quite tasty, as it’s always fresh and subtle in flavor. It’s definitely worth skipping a serving of beef ribs to get a taste of South Korea’s spiritual heritage.
dragon. Since the temple faces northeast, it offers a spectacular view of the sunrise—many come early on the Lunar New Year to make a wish as the sun rises—and an enormous bronze bell is rung five times at sunset. Special features of the temple include the three-story pagoda with its four lions (symbolizing joy, anger, sadness, and happiness), the Yacksayeorae Healing Buddha (a stone statue of Buddha wearing a traditional Korean hat), and the Bulbeop Buddhist Sanctum (which is enclosed in a cave). April and May are wonderful times to visit, as the cherry trees are blooming and the lanterns are lit for Buddha's Birthday.

416-3 Sirang-li, Gijang-eup, Gijang-gun. ☎ 051/722-7755. www.yongkungsa.or.kr. Free admission. Daily 4am–8pm. Take subway line 1 to Dongnae Station, and across from there take bus no. 100 or 100-1 and get off at Songjeong Beach; then transfer to bus no. 181. Or take bus no. 139, 140, 239, 302-1, or 2003, get off at Songjeong Beach, and then transfer to bus no. 181.

Hongbeopsa (Kids) Located in the suburbs of Busan, this temple lies in the foothills of Cheolmasan, behind Geumjeongsan. Standing near Sinchang Farm, it aspires to be the center of Saeng-hwal Bulgyo (Buddhism for Everyday Living). There is a river nearby and a lily pond with about 150 types of waterlilies (they bloom in late summer). If you happen to be here for the celebration of the Buddha's Birthday (usually in May), you can see children who are ordained as monks for the day, in the hopes of planting the seeds of Buddhism in their young minds. (Seeing small boys with shaved heads dressed in the traditional gray robes of the monks is quite a sight!) They have cultural events for foreigners once a month. You can do a temple stay here if you wish, but be sure to book at least 10 days in advance.

1220-1 Dugu-dong, Geumjeong-gu. ☎ 051/508-0345. www.busanbuddhism.com. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. Bus: 1, 2, 2-1, 50-1, or 301. You can also take the subway to the Nopo-dong Station and walk from there.

Samgwangsa Built at the foot of the Baekyang Mountains by the monks of the Chongdae Order, this temple is relatively new (built 1982–2001). Worth a visit just for the view of the city or the spectacular sunrise, it is a place for praying to Avalokitesvarā (the Buddhist Goddess of Mercy). Although the temple's construction is recent, its designs still follow the Buddhist traditions. Other than the main Buddha hall, the guardians' platform, which houses the four treasures of Buddhist ritual (the bell, drum, wooden fish gong, and cloud-patterned gong), is a colorful sight to behold. Buddhists believe that ringing the temple bell helps living things to attain oneness with the Buddha and be freed from earthly desires. The sound of the drum, the gong, and the fish carry the sound of truth to all things on earth, the sea, and the sky. The nine-level DaeBo Tahp (pagoda), built for world peace and the reunification of the two Koreas, with its eight sides carved with 53 Buddhas, is also worth a look.

Seokbulsa (Stone Buddha Temple) ★★ Finds Most people don’t know about this small temple south of Geumjeong Fortress and north of Mandeok tunnel. Since it’s a walk to get here (no buses stop nearby), it’s a quiet temple even on the busiest of summer weekends. The temple got its name from the statues of the Buddha carved in the rock here (Seokbul means “stone Buddha”). The main temple and some of the associated meditation halls are small “caves” carved into the rock. Of course, there have the usual wooden temple structures here, too.
San 2 Mandeok-dong, Buk-gu. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the express bus terminal, take bus no. 48, 110, or 111 and get off just after you pass the tunnel. You’ll find the start of the trail when you walk toward the right of the upper, older tunnel. Alternatively, take bus no. 33 to the end at Mandeok and walk 40 min. You can also take maeul (village) bus no. 9 from Dongnae Station. If you take the Geumgang cable car up, you can walk to the temple via the South Gate (Nam moon).

HISTORIC SITES

Bokcheon-dong Burial Mounds and Museum ★ At one of the oldest burial sites in the southern part of the country, there were once more than 100 burial mounds dating back to the Gaya Kingdom (6th c.) here. Although part of the mound was destroyed inadvertently by construction in the area in 1969, it has since been designated a historical site. Now over 9,000 relics (including pieces of pottery and ironware) have been excavated from the surrounding area. Although many of those finds are no longer here—they’re now part of the Busan National Museum’s collection—there is also a museum on-site housing some of the unearthed treasures. A few of the tombs have since been re-created.

50 Bokcheon-dong, Dongnae-gu. ☏ 051/554-4263. Free admission to the site, but the museum is W500 adults, W300 teens, W200 children. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. Subway: Take line 1 to Myeongnyun-dong or Dongnae Station, and then take maeuil bus no. 6.

Geumjeongsanseong (Mt. Geumjeong Fortress) High on the peak of Mt. Geumjeong, Geumjeongsanseong, formerly called the Dongnaesanseong, is the largest fortress in South Korea. There is only about a 4km (2 1⁄2-mile) section left from the original today, presumed to be built during the Three Kingdoms Period. The present fortress was built in 1703 after the Imjin Waeran to prepare for further invasions from Japan, but none ever came. The hills are great for a half-day of hiking—the small villages nearby are known for their charcoal-grilled goat meat and makgeolli (a milky white rice wine). Admission includes entry into Beomeosa (p. 331).

779 Daeyeon 4-dong, Nam-gu. ☏ 051/519-4081. Admission W1,000, W700 teens 13-18, W500 kids 7–12. Subway: Take line 1 to Oncheon Station, and then bus no. 203. Alternatively, you can take the cable car from Geumgang Park and walk the trail from the botanical garden.

U.N. Memorial Cemetery and Peace Park Located near the Busan Museum, this cemetery honors soldiers who were killed during the Korean War (1950–53). There are about 2,300 military personnel buried here, from 16 nations. The Korean government gave the 14-hectare (35-acre) property to the United Nations in perpetuity as a tribute to those who gave their lives. Dedicated in 1951, the majority of the graves are British; 500 Turkish troops and more than 100 Dutch are also interred here. The remains of all American, French, Norwegian, Philippine, Greek, Belgian, Colombian, Ethiopian, and Thai soldiers were sent home for burial.

779 Daeyeon 4-dong, Nam-gu. ☏ 051/625-0625. www.unmck.or.kr. Free admission. Winter daily 9am–4:30pm; summer daily 9am–6pm. Subway: Take line 2 to Daeyeon Station, walk 15 min. toward Gwanganli. Bus: 25, 68, 93, or 134.

PARKS

Daeshin Citizen’s Park ★ Located near Dong-A University’s main campus on Gubongsan, this small city park is densely populated by older trees on the hillside. A forest retreat in the middle of the city, it’s a great place to take a short hike, a leisurely walk, or a run along the jogging trails.
Located in the mountainside above Gudeok Stadium. Free admission. 24 hr. daily. Bus: 2, 11, 13, 15, 16, 40, 42, 58-1, 59, 67, 70, 81, 86, 96, 103, 105, 126, 140, 161, 167, 190, 309, or 310; get off at Gudeok Stadium and walk from there.

Suyeong Park ★ The site of a naval camp (called the Gyeonggung juwado Sungun jeoldo sayeong) responsible for guarding the seas to the east and to the west during the Joseon Dynasty, the park is located just north of the Suyeong intersection. The park includes a couple of military shrines and the Suyeong Folk Art Center. In the open theater, they present folk performances here on a regular basis.

Yongdusan Park (Dragon Head Mountain Park) ★★★ Yongdusan is so named because the shape of the mountain seems to resemble the head of a dragon that climbs out of the sea. A popular park for both residents and visitors alike, it is a small oasis from the cars and skyscrapers of the city. There is a covered escalator from Gwangbok-dong that goes up the incline. This hillside park houses a statue of Admiral Yi Sun-shin, the great naval commander of the Joseon Dynasty.

The most popular attraction here is the Busan Tower, which climbs high above the harbor. It’s worth paying the admission just to see the view. From the top, you’ll be treated to wonderful views of the harbor and nearby Yeong-do. On clear days, you can see as far out as Japan’s Tsushima island. This is also a great place to enjoy the city lights. In addition to the tower, the park has an aquarium, a cafe, and restaurants. Quite often on summer weekends you’ll stumble upon free cultural events and performances.

Gwangbok-dong, Jung-gu. 051/860-7821. Free admission to the park. Admission to the tower W3,500 adults, W3,000 teens, W2,500 ages 3–12. It contains over 35,000 varieties of fish, algae, amphibians, and reptiles. The highlight is on the bottom level, where there is a main tank and tunnel where you can walk through the water, while fish and shark swim above you. There is an additional W4,000 fee to go through the underwater simulation.

Eulsuk-do Bird Sanctuary/Nakdong Bird Estuary ★★ The spot where the Nakdong River meets the South Sea has been declared a natural monument since 1966. At large mouth of the river, there are sand dunes, deltas and small islands (including Ilung-do). It is now a bird sanctuary for migrating species that visit between October and March. There are over 150 species (including many rare birds like white-naped cranes, black-faced spoonbills, and white-tailed eagles) that stop here during their travels.
It's difficult to reach by land, so it's best to take a boat from Myeongji-dong harbor. The ideal times to see the birds is early in the day, before it gets too hot.

Nakdong-gang, Nak-dong, Hadan-dong, Saha-gu. http://wetland.busan.go.kr. Free admission to sanctuary; Estuary Eco-center ¥1,000 adults, ¥500 teens, free for children 12 and under and seniors 65 and over. Eco-center daily 9am–6pm. Take the subway line 1 to Hadan Station (exit 5). From there, take bus no. 58, 58-1, or 300 and get off at Eulsukdo rest stop. Tip: It will be a long walk to the bird sanctuary, so be sure to wear comfortable shoes.

Heosimcheong Spa ★★★
Claiming to be the largest hot spring spa in Asia, Heosimcheong has multiple levels for your relaxing entertainment. The first-floor entry has a garish water fountain, some shops, and a bakery, but the fun starts when you head upstairs. One floor is just jjimjilbang (hot saunas), igloo-shaped structures made out of clay where you can steam yourself alive. This floor also has a snack shop and restaurant. On the other floor is the "grand hot springs," a huge atrium full of pools and waterfalls of varying temperatures, ranging from boiling hot to icy cold. Don't be shy about walking around naked in front of same-sex strangers. Koreans have been doing it since they were kids and you'll get used to it. You can also get scrubbed—an attendant will "scrub" you with a scratchy towel that feels like sandpaper, exfoliating away dead skin and giving you a simultaneous massage. Koreans seem to love it, but it's not for those with sensitive skin. The price is generally ¥10,000. If you'd like to go a more gentle route, ask for just a massage. Prices vary, depending on the type and length of the massage, but start at ¥10,000.

137-7 Oncheon-dong, Dongnae-gu (inside the Nongshim Hotel). ☏ 051/555-1121. Admission ¥7,900 adults, ¥3,000 children. Daily 5:30am–10pm; last entry at 9pm. Subway: Take line 1 to Oncheonjang Station (exit 1) and walk toward the Dongnae Gweumgangwon. Bus: 51, 51-1, 77, 80, 100, 100-1, 110, 110-1, 121, 131, 131-1, 183, 188, 189, 203, 210, or 301.

Yeongdo
Yeongdo (Yeong Island) separates the two halves of Busan Harbor. The old Yeongdo Grand Bridge connects to the rest of Busan to the island's southern road. The scenic drive to Yeong-do leads to a group of hwae restaurants on the coast. The newer Busan Grand Bridge runs parallel to the old bridge.

Taejongdae Park ★★
This place is where Shilla King Taejong Muyeol, who ruled from 604 to 661 and who united the three Korean kingdoms into one dynasty, loved to practice his archery. There are over 200 pine trees and camellias that line the coast at this gorgeous park. The park overlooks the craggy cliffs and fun-shaped rocks that cascade down into the sea below. Nearby is a 19th-century lighthouse from which you can see Oryuk-do and Japan's Daema-do when the weather is nice. You'll see a statue of a mother with her children called Mangbuseok (Rock of the Faithful Woman), after the legend of a woman who waited so long for the return of her husband, who had been captured by the Japanese and taken to Japan, that she turned to stone. The statue is located at what used to be called Jasal Bawi (Suicide Rock), where people used to throw themselves into the water. A temple, Geumyeongsa, was built here to prevent people from committing suicide and to console the ghosts of the dead. This is also the place where Taejong would come to pray for rain during a drought; rain on the 10th day of the fifth lunar month is called "Taejong Rain."

The beach becomes one big outdoor concert venue in August when the Busan International Rock Festival happens. Take bus no. 2 or 98 to Dadaepo from Busan Station. The beach is open 24 hours with shower booths and a cafeteria.

Gwangalli Beach ★★ Famous for its fine sand, Gwangalli Beach stretches 1.4km (almost a mile). When Japan colonized Korea in the last century, this beach was used to teach elementary and junior high school kids how to swim during summer vacation. You can rent water skis or jet skis, or even go windsurfing. The beach draws its share of crowds during the summer and sports an outdoor stage where the Busan Ocean Festival is held each year. The beach is open 24 hours and is most popular in July and August. Take subway line 2 to Gwangan Station (exit 3 or 5) and walk 5–10 min. to the beach. Buses to Gwangalli run frequently (bus no. 42, 139, 140, 239, or 240).

Haeundae Beach ★★ At Busan’s (and perhaps South Korea’s) most popular beach, you certainly won’t be escaping the crowds if you come during the summer. From June to August this beach is packed, although the waters remain warm enough for swimming through September. The sand is rough, as it is made up of eroded rocks washed down by the Chuncheon stream and shells that have been naturally ground down by the wind and sea.

Besides all the other beachside sports you can enjoy, it is one of the few places in the country where you can windsurf. Take a break from your sunbathing and have a little stroll down to Dongbaek Island. There are many islands in the South Korean Sea called Dongbaek-do (all named for the dongbaek trees that thrive on them). This one in Busan (which is no longer even an island) has a small park and a tall statue of a mermaid. Take subway line 2 to Dongbaek Station or Haeundae Station (exit 3 or 5) or bus no. 139, 140, 240, or 302. For more info, contact the Haeundae Beach Department of Culture and Tourism at (051) 749-5700.

Songjeong Beach ★ Kids On the far eastern side of Busan, Songjeong Beach’s shallow waters are also perfect for children. Not as popular as Haeundae or Gwangalli beaches, it still draws a crowd during the summer season. The white sand was created by erosion from the Songjeong River and from crushed seashells. The beach is open from 9am to 6pm. At the entrance to the beach is Jukdo and its thick evergreen groves. At the northeast end are rocky shores, popular for fishing. Take subway line 2 to Haeundae Station (exit 7), and then take bus no. 100, 100-1, 139, or 142. Bus nos. 140, 239, and 302 also go to Songjeong Beach.

Hiking

The mountains in Busan have some good hiking trails. On the west side of town, Geumjeongsan is the most popular place for residents to hike on weekends, so try to visit on a weekday to avoid the crowds. One of the more frequented routes starts from the South Gate (Nam mun) of Geumjeong Fortress. You can get there by taking a cable car from Geumgang Park (near Myeongnyun-dong Station) or by taking a bus from Oncheonjang Station to Sanseong Maeul, a small village hidden in the mountain valley. Walk down to the North Gate (Buk mun) and down to Beomeosa. The trail is about 8.8km (5.5 miles) and will take about 3 to 4 hours to complete.

Swimming

If you don’t mind swimming in chilly waters, you can enter the Polar Bear Swimming Competition (051/749-4065 or 749-3986), which is included as one of Busan’s many Lunar New Year festivities (a similar event is also held at Jeju-do’s Seogwipo City). The dozens of other events include the Haeundae White Sand Races, Haeundae Ocean Swimming Contest, and the Ice Carving Competition (that should give you an idea of how cold the waters are during the winter!). It costs ₩40,000 and only 2,000 people are allowed to compete. So put your hat in the ring early for an icy dip, your free T-shirt, and a surprise souvenir. For more beach information, see p. 336.

All the luxury hotels in town have their own indoor pools, but if you’re not lucky enough to stay in one of them, you can still pay a fee to just use their pool and/or spa facilities. The Busan Port Authority is currently building a multiuse megaplex by the port, which will include an indoor pool, a spa, a sauna, and a sports center. If you can’t wait until the building is finished in 2020, the Busan Sports Complex has an Olympic-size pool, built for the 2002 Asian Games, available for public use.

6 SHOPPING

There is no shortage of shopping to be done in Busan. Be it haggling with old ladies in the open-air markets or browsing the high-end department stores, there are ample opportunities for you to part with your won.

BEST SHOPPING AREAS

For bargain hunting and browsing in outdoor markets, the largest shijang (traditional market) is Gukje Market, which is also close to the Jagalchi Market. Smaller open-air marketplaces can be found in most neighborhoods in the city.

There are plenty of fashions on display, but most items are made for petite women, so it may be difficult to find larger sizes. If that’s what you need, head for the Choryang Arcade for Foreigners (usually called “Texas Street” or “Foreigners Street” by locals) in Dong-gu, where you may find a larger variety of sizes.

For more stylish fashions, try the boutiques and stalls in the PNU Area of Dongnae, as well as the areas around Kyungsung and Pukyong universities, catering to the college-age crowd. In the college areas are “shopping town” and “beauty town,” where you can find the latest clothes, accessories, and cosmetics for fashionistas. A tight group of hip clothing stores is in Gwangbok-dong. The cluster of Nampo-dong shops and restaurants and the popular night market draws a crowd. There are more shops available in Seomyeon as well. The streets and alleys near the cafes on Gwangalli Beach also have shops that attract the younger crowd.

For upscale shopping, Busan’s department stores are chock-full of several floors of everything from designer handbags to housewares. Major stores like Lotte and Shinsegae (which made the Guinness Book of World Records for being the largest department store in the world) can be found in Centum City and Busanjin (in the Seomyeon area). Mega-shopping malls, like Migliore and the Judies Taehwa in Seomyeon or the SfunZ in Haeundae, also have several floors of boutique shops all in one multistoried building or have underground shopping areas. There are some in Nampo-dong and Sasang as well. Duty-free shops can be found near major transportation (at the airport and the ferry terminal) or in luxury hotels, like the Lotte in Busanjin or the Paradise in Haeundae. Also, Rodeo Street in Haeundae is an area dedicated to upscale shops.

Large-scale box marts, like E-Mart, can also be found in major sections of town like Haeundae and Busanjin.

In general, you can find vendors who speak English at hotel arcades, department stores, souvenir and duty-free shops, and on Foreigners’ Street. Otherwise, be ready to use a lot of sign language and gesturing to get your point across.

SHOPPING A TO Z

Bookstores

Although there are many more smaller bookstores around the city, you’ll find a better selection of English-language books and publications at those listed here. Kyobo Mungo, 536-3 Bujeon-dongjin-gu (☎ 051/806-3501), located on the first floor of the Gyobo
Life Insurance building, also has a good CD shop, Hot Tracks, inside. Also in Busanjin are the Dongbo Bookstore, 165-5 Bujeon 2-dongjin-gu (☎ 051/803-8004), and the Yeong-gwang Bookstore, Bujeon 1-dongjin-gu (☎ 051/816-9500), which has a good selection of English-language magazines and staff who speak pretty good English. In Jung-gu, the Munwudang, 3, 4-ga, Nampo-dong, Jung-gu (☎ 051/245-5555), has a small English-language section, and the Nampo Mungo, 2-ga, Nampo-dong, Jung-gu (☎ 051/245-8911), on the first two floors of the Horim building, has some English books.

Contemporary Art & Galleries

Although its claim as South Korea’s Montmartre is overstated, the “Art Street” inside the Gukje Underground Shopping Center is a good place to get some insight into Busan’s art scene. Take subway line 1 to Jagalchi (exit 7) and walk about 5 minutes. There are also a handful of galleries that exhibit and sell works by contemporary Korean artists in Haeundae, Nampo-dong, and Gwanganli.

One of my favorite places, in the Haeundae area, is Arbazaar, 1467-2 Jwa-dong, Haeundae-gu (☎ 051/704-0151; located right off the Sangsan subway station), which specializes in art by contemporary South Korean artists.

Also, if you happen to be in the Gwanganli area at night, don’t miss the Busan New Media Art Museum, 148-15 Namcheon 2(i)-dong (☎ 051/622-4251; http://badavit.suyeong.kr). The outdoor works by such international artists as Jenny Holzer, Jean-Pierre Ratnaud, and Korea’s own video artist, Paik Nam-June, span the shores of Gwanganli beach. Take subway line 3 to Gwang-an Station (exit 5) or Geumnyeonsan (exit 5) Station. Buses 20, 38, 49-1, 51, 51-1, 62, 83, 83-1, 108-1, 131, and 155 stop at the museum.

Department Stores

Like any South Korean city worth its salt, Busan has several multistoried department stores that sell everything from housewares to groceries and high-end fashions. If you need a break from shopping, you can go to the basement or top floors for your choice of upscale or down-home food to fuel up.

Your best bet will be to go to Centum City ★ (subway line 2 to Centum City Station), where the entrance to both the Lotte (☎ 051/730-2500) and the 18-floor Shinsegae department stores are easily accessible from the subway. They’re both open from 10:30am to 10pm daily.

The largest one is the Lotte Department Store (☎ 051/810-2500) attached to the Lotte hotel in Seomyeon. Eleven stories high, the megacomplex has everything from clothes to cosmetics to sporting goods and jewelry. The ninth floor is reserved for restaurants and the top two floors are the Lotte Cinema. Groceries and Korean-style fast food are available on the first basement floor, with a cafe and sports center underneath. Parking is available on basement floors three to five, with exclusive parking just for women. Take subway line 1 or 2 to Seomyeon (exit 3, 5, or 7). The second basement level of the department store is connected to the subway. They’re open daily from 10:30am to 8pm.

There is also another location in Dongnae (☎ 051/605-2500). Take subway line 1 to Myeongnyun-dong (exit 1) and walk about 5 minutes.

Slightly smaller (only nine floors) is the Hyundai Department Store (☎ 051/667-2233), located right in front of the Beomil-dong subway station, near Busanjin Market. It’s arranged more like Western-style department stores, with cosmetics and clothing on the bottom floors and housewares and electronics on the seventh floor. Restaurants are on the eighth floor, with cheaper eateries on the second basement floor. The top floor has a health spa, golf center, and swimming pool. Some parking is available on the third basement floor. Open daily 10:30am to 8pm, the store is closed one Monday a month. Take subway line 1 to the Beomil-dong Station (exit 5 or 7). The second basement floor of the store connects to the subway.

Discount Megastores

In the past several years, large-scale discount stores have become ubiquitous throughout the country. Most conspicuous are the bright yellow and black E-Marts, which have several locations in the city. The easiest to get to is the Haeundae E-Mart, 1767 Gungil 1-dong, Haeundae-gu; take the subway line 2 to Jung-dong Station and take exit 7 or 9. They’re open daily from 10am to midnight, but closed Lunar New Year and Chuseok.

Home Plus (✆ 051/532-2080) also has several locations in Busan. There is one in Haeundae, 1406-2 Haeundae-gu 1-dong. Take subway line 2 to Dongbaek Station (exit 1) and walk about 3 minutes. They’re open daily from 10am to midnight. The Home Plus in Seomyeon is off of subway line 2, Buam Station (exit 4). It’s about a 5-minute walk toward Dang-gam-dong and it’s open 10am to 11pm daily.

Fashion

There is no shortage of clothing stores in Busan. For high-end designer fashions, you can shop the hotel arcades and departments stores (info above). The best for window shopping are the shopping arcades found in various neighborhoods.

The younger crowds are drawn to the area around Busan National University (PNU) in Dongnae, where you’ll find a bunch of cute boutiques with the latest fashions, interspersed with restaurants and cafes. A touch smaller, but just as fun and crowded, are the areas around Kyungsung University and Pukyong National University.

For serious shopping, you can go to the mega–shopping malls, fashioned after Seoul’s Dongdaemun Market. These super-sized buildings house dozens of wholesale clothing stores vying for your business. Some of them even have movie theaters, bookstores, restaurants, and arcades. One of the most popular for discovering young designers is Migliore ★★, 668-1 Jeunpo 1-dong, Jin-gu (✆ 051/922-0001 or 5), located in Seomyeon. Open daily 11am to 11:40pm, it’s closed the first and third Mondays of the month. Take subway line 1 to Seomyeon Station (exit 5 or 6). Another large shopping mall in the area is Judies Taehwa (✆ 051/667-7000), also off the Seomyeon subway station. Open daily from 11am to 11pm, they’re closed the second and fourth Mondays of the month.

Save Zone, 380-14 Jung-dong, Haeundae-gu (✆ 051/740-9000), and SfunZ (✆ 051/740-0800) are both huge malls in the Haeundae area. Take subway line 2 to the Haeundae Station (exit 3 for Save Zone and exit 1 for SfunZ). Save Zone is open daily from 10am to 10pm, while SfunZ opens a half-hour later.

Renicite (✆ 051/319-5000) is the huge complex in Sasang-dong. It’s open daily 10:30am to midnight (closed on the first Mon of the month). Take subway line 2 to Sasang (exit 3) and walk about 10 minutes.

For jewelry sold directly by factories and wholesalers, look no further than “Jewelry Street,” where the vendors have created their own group of jewelry shops in Beomcheon-dong, Haeundae-gu. Open daily from 10am to 8pm.

Food

Although a bit overpriced, the Korean Traditional Authentic Food shop is conveniently located at Gimhae Airport (right next to the airport police station). At this shop, open daily from 8am to 6pm, you can find everything from fermented seafood to ginseng and cookies. For better bargains and variety, try one of the large discount stores in town or the Maeil Food shop, 1185-37 Choryang 3-dong, Dong-gu, on the second floor of the Dongbu Goseok (Express) Bus Terminal.

For insam (ginseng) specifically, the Bujeon Insam Wholesale Shopping Center is your best bet for this dried root. Not only is it the largest ginseng market in the city, but the center has grown to include many other health foods. Expect to see a selection of dried mushrooms and other unidentifiable dried products. It's open daily from 6am to 5:30pm. Take subway line 1 to Bujeon-dong and take exit 5.

Worth a look is the Nampo-dong Dried Fish Market, located near the Jagalchi seafood market. You'll see piles of squid jerky, dried seaweed, and other marine products laid out by small street-side vendors.

Handmade Crafts

There is no dedicated area for handmade crafts, artworks, and antiques in Busan like you’d find in Seoul’s Insadong area. Most special products and traditional handicraft items can be found in souvenir shops. Although they are usually well made, they are mass-produced and overpriced. A better bet is to try the smattering of shops on the streets between Gwangbok-dong and Daecheong-no. You won’t discover any fabulous finds here, but they do have a large selection of traditional ceramics and pottery.

Although they’re expensive, you can get authentic traditional antiques at the Korean Antique Gallery Migodang (☏ 051/731-3444) in Haeundae. Take subway line 2 to Haeundae and walk about 10 minutes. The Yegwadang Gallery (☏ 051/752-3016) in Gwangalli has a nice collection of teapots and teacups made by modern craftsmen. Take bus no. 41 to the Seongshim Hospital or get off at the back entrance to the Sehwa Mart. The Busan Crafts & Exhibition Center (☏ 051/740-7588) on the first basement floor of the BEXCO also has a decent selection of wooden crafts, ceramics, and lacquerware. On the second floor of the Busan Department Store, the Arirang Folk Art Center (☏ 051/245-6789) and the Hankook Folk Art Center (☏ 051/555-0092) specialize in folk crafts and traditional wares.

Souvenirs

Most souvenir shops can be found in the shopping arcades of major hotels, inside department stores, and in the shopping areas of transportation hubs. You’ll find items more expensive than those in open-air markets and most of them are mass-produced. However, the items are usually of good quality, the shops take most major credit cards, and the sales staff can speak English.

Of special note is the Dalwoo Amethyst shop, 1-2, 2-ga, Gwangbok-dong, Jun-gu (☏ 051/243-8085), which specializes in all things made of amethyst or jade.

The Gonglee Art Creation store (☏ 051/516-6755), inside the Home Plus building in Yeonje-gu, has a variety of souvenirs made of wood, paper, mother-of-pearl, and metals.

Traditional & Open-Air Markets

The open-air markets of Busan are interesting places to look for hard-to-find items, to browse the crowded stalls, and to haggle with vendors for the best price.

In addition to the major markets listed below, there are a handful of oil shijang (5-day markets) scattered through the city. The Jwacheon Market is a village shijang, with a fish and cattle market nearby (open on days that end in 4 or 9). Near Gupo and Deokcheon stations is the Gupo Market, another traditional village shijang (open on days that end in 4 or 9).
The Gudeok Cultural Market, open Saturday and Sunday near the Gudeok Stadium, is a great place to buy traditional folk art and handicrafts.

Busanjin Market ★ Although there is a large cluster of clothing stores in Busan, this one caters to newlyweds. Here you can find everything a new bride needs for her wedding and to get her household started. It’s also a great place to buy fabric and silks. Open daily from 8am to 8:30pm. Take subway line 1 to Beomil-dong (exit 8) and walk about 5 min.

Gukje Market ★★★ At the largest and oldest shijang in Busan, the vendors here sell a variety of items—everything from food to industrial goods and clothes. Open daily from 9am to 8pm. Take subway line 1 to Jagalchi (exit 7) and walk about 10 min.

Jagalchi Market ★★★★ South Korea’s largest seafood market, Jagalchi (roughly translates to “Pebble Village”) Market became mostly a fish market after the Korean War. Although you probably won’t be buying any fish to take home with you, this is a great place to see a variety of seafood you may have never seen before (most active early morning and late afternoon) and one of the best places to eat fresh raw fish, straight from the tanks. Since most of the vendors are middle-aged women, they are called the jagalchi ajumma. The Jagalchi Festival is held here every October. Open to wholesalers daily from 2am to midnight; regular retail hours are 7am to 9pm. Take subway line 1 to Nampo-dong Station and walk about 5 min. or to Jagalchi (exit 2) and walk 3 min. You can also take city bus no. 139, which will take you right to the market entrance. There is a paid parking lot that charges by the hour at the end of the street.

Pyeonghwa and Jayu Markets A short walk from the Busanjin Market are the Pyeonghwa (Peace) and Jayu (Freedom) markets. These are great places to get designer shoes, though it’s harder to find larger sizes, since they cater to South Korean women’s smaller feet. The Jayu shijang, located on the first and second floors of the building, is open 8am to 6pm, while the Pyeonghwa shijang, on the third floor, is open daily from 6am to 6pm. Take subway line 1 to Beomil-dong (exit 8) and it’s about a 5-minute walk.

BUSAN AFTER DARK

Busan is perhaps a more beautiful city at night than it is during the day. From the glittering neon of the shopping districts to the lights of Gwangalli bridge, there is no shortage of views and things to do after the sun goes down. In fact, the city's cafe and bar culture doesn't come alive until dark.

Upscale bars and cocktail lounges are located in the city's high-end hotels. Several other nightclubs and bars can be found throughout the city. More informal are the hofs (German-style beer bars) and pojang macha (neighborhood rice-wine joints) where you can imbibe without breaking the bank. Most places with English-speaking owners can be found in Foreigners Street and the upscale hotels. A quieter evening can include a cup of coffee from one of Gwangalli’s many cafes, a stroll on the boardwalk in Haeundae, or a view of the city lights from Busan Tower.

PERFORMING ARTS

Opened in 1977, the Busan Cultural Center ★★ (Daeyeon 4-dong, Nam-gu) has since added several smaller theaters and performance spaces. It is connected to the Municipal Museum and the main stage can seat 1,600 people. Take subway line 2 to the Daeyeon-dong Station (exit 3 or 5), and then walk 10 minutes toward the U.N. intersection (past the Busan Museum). Take bus no. 51-1 to the center or bus no. 68 or 134 and get off at U.N. Park. Call ☎ 051/625-8130 for info on tickets and dates.

MOVIE THEATERS
Nampo-dong is the home of the Pusan International Film Festival (☎ 051/1688-3010; www.piff.org; they decided to keep the old spelling “Pusan”), one of the largest film festivals in Asia. Usually held sometime in October, the PIFF is a showcase for not only domestically produced films, but movies from international directors. The winners of the festival each year imprint their hands and feet on copper plates (similar to the prints in front of Grauman’s Chinese Theater in Hollywood). These copper plates can be seen all across the plaza. Even outside of festival times, the area is crowded with moviegoers of all ages. Unfortunately, South Korean films aren’t regularly subtitled (though they are for the festival), but you will be able to watch an English-language film here with no worries.

DANCE CLUBS & BARS
There is no shortage of bars in Busan, but very few Western-style clubs for dancing. There are few places in the city dedicated to strictly dancing, but people in most clubs begin dancing later on in the wee hours. Most dance clubs can be found in the PNU area or in the luxury hotels in Haeundae.

Be aware that if you go to a Korean-style bar or soju bang (literally, “soju room”), you’re expected to order an overpriced anju with your drinks. Also, they won’t let you in if you’re dressed down or look like you came from the beach. Koreans dress to impress when they go out. The exceptions are the foreigner-friendly bars, mostly near the universities (see below). Also, beware of the “girlie” or “go-go” bars on Texas Street, which will have Western-style or Russian music. Some of the women earn a commission on how many drinks they can get patrons to buy for them. They aren’t prostitutes by any means, but you can end up with an empty wallet, nevertheless.

Due to the military curfew of the past, most regular places close at midnight. However, newer clubs and some less-than-legal joints stay open later, even 24 hours. There are bars all over town, but the most popular areas include Nampo-dong, the PNU area, the Kyungsung University area, Haeundae, Gwangalli, and Seomyeon districts.

Haeundae
A bar that’s very popular with expats and foreigners is Starface (☎ 051/742-0600) in Haeundae, which has an open bar every night from 7pm to 2am for only ₩15,000. There is a pool table and sometimes live bands play in the early evening.

One of the hippest clubs is the MurpII (☎ 051/743-1234; www.murphys.co.kr), a renovated space opened in the old Murphy’s location in the Novotel Ambassador. There is a dance floor with DJs and sometimes popular live acts, as well as a couple of private noraebang rooms. A more casual joint is U2 Bar, a rock-‘n-roll club across the street from the Novotel. Just down the way at the Paradise Hotel is Club Elune (☎ 051/802-0555; www.clubelune.com), which is a stop for international DJs after they’ve done Seoul. Across from the Paradise Hotel is the third big, Western-style club, Club Maktum (☎ 051/742-0770; www.maktum.co.kr). You can’t miss well-dressed partiers lining up in front of the giant silver phallic entrance.

A foreigner-friendly, late-night option for dancing is the Fuzzy Navel (☎ 011/1757-6349) (every night 7pm–6am). It’s behind the Seacloud Hotel, on the right-hand side on the fourth floor (there are signs on the street level as well). The L-shaped bar has a main dance floor and other subrooms, one with a pool table.

For Western-style options, stop by Brother’s Bar and Grill (☎ 051/721-5589) on Mipo Street, on the basement level of the DalMaji Hotel. Open noon to 1am Sunday to Thursday (until 2am Fri–Sat), the place is run by a PNU English professor who missed his nachos and margaritas. They have Mexican-style buffets from 6pm to close every Thursday night for a mere ₩12,000.

Gwangalli

There are a few bars along the narrow beachfront with excellent views of the Gwangan Bridge. You can’t miss Beach Bikini with its glass front overlooking the water. Nearby is the larger Beachfield Bar, which has balconies overlooking the beach and an outdoor stage, great for live music on warm summer evenings.

Seomyeon

In the Seomyeon area, many foreigners head over to O’Brien’s Irish Bar and Restaurant (☎ 051/894-6541) for a pint and a burger. (They also have live music on Sat.) Beers usually start at ₩5,000 for a bottle. Take the subway to Gaya Station (exit 2), walk straight ahead, and you’ll find the bar on your left-hand side; just go down the stairs to the basement.

Another popular nightspot in the neighborhood is Club Foxy (☎ 010/7648-1010). You’ll see a bunch of Korean hip-hop dancers on the two dance floors, which can be quite entertaining. The last time I checked, there was no cover for foreigners.

Another happening place is Guri Bar (☎ 010/6807-1149), located behind the Lotte Hotel (go down the alley next to the GS25 and you’ll see it past the V Motel).

PNU Area

The younger crowds head out to the bars near the universities. A popular place for dancing in the PNU area is Soul Trane, a small, foreigner-friendly bar located underneath the Western-style restaurant Moe’s. They sometimes have live bands, DJs, and other events and can get pretty crowded on weekends. Just down the street from Soul Trane is Crossroads, another bar popular with expats and run by the same owner. They sometimes have live acoustic sets on Tuesdays. To get to either bar from the main gate of Pusan National U., make the first left and walk about 3 blocks. Crossroads will be on your left. If you turn right on that street and walk a bit more, you’ll run into Soul Trane. Around the corner from Soul Trane is what used to be a popular bar, Moo Monk, but it has turned quieter as other more popular joints have opened up nearby. Still, the house band on Friday nights brings in crowds. Across the street is a spacious jazz/blues/folk club, Interplay. Many of the country’s top funk bands play here and it’s a good place to get imported beer, if you’re tired of the weak Korean brews.

Bukyoung & Kyungsung University Area

Near Bukyoung University is a great place to dance, the Vinyl Underground (☎ 051/628-0223). DJs come from Seoul on weekends to spin in front of a typically crowded dance floor. They sometimes have live bands on Saturday nights as well. For a more “meet market” scene, follow the beats to the open terrace of Ghetto (☎ 010/4588-4697), where the dance floor is crowded and shots can be had for a mere ₩1,000. A mellower place that also has friendly, English-speaking staff is Monk (named after Thelonious Monk). They have regular local jazz bands on Tuesday and Thursday; live rock/blues/jazz bands on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday; and jams on Monday nights. About every month or so, they also have their famous Poetry Plus (poets, stand-up comics, one-act plays, and more). Bottles of domestic beer start at ₩4,000. Take subway line 2 to the Bukyoung/Kyungsung Station. Walk toward Bukyoung U. and turn left at the next-to-the-last street before you reach the entrance to the campus. The Monk Bar will be on your left, and make a left to get to Vinyl Underground (it’ll be on your left side).

Another great place to catch live music (more on the punk and rock side) is Ol’ 55, located near Monk and Vinyl. Also in the same area is Thursday Party, which is a chain of bars in Busan. They have several other locations, including Gwangalli, Seomyeon, and in Haeundae (on the main drag between the subway station and the beach). All of them are popular with foreigners. Just up the street from Vinyl Underground is a smaller, mellow bar called Live House. The friendly English-speaking owner is also the entertainment—he plays the sax. It’s not some cheesy bad saxophone playing; he’s actually pretty good. Just look for it right above the OZZY bar.

Namgu
Although this area isn’t the most happening section of the city at night, there are always places to grab a drink with the locals. One casual pub-type bar is London, 55-14 Dae yeon-dong, Namgu (☏ 051/625-1150), open daily from 4pm to 1am. They have light snacks like chips and salsa to go with your pitchers of beer. A classic hof and soju bar nearby is the Janda Look, 68-7 Daeyeon-dong (☏ 051/623-6420), located on the first floor of the basement level. Along with your beer or soju, you can get a pork sausage meal for ₩7,000 or fried shrimp (sort of tempura style) for ₩8,000.

CASINOS
Like the majority of casinos in the country, the one in Busan is open only to foreigners. So don’t forget to bring your passport. They offer free food and drinks, so you won’t have to go hungry or thirsty while gambling the night away. The Paradise Casino, located inside the Paradise Hotel on Haeundae Beach, is the largest one in Busan (not difficult since it’s the only one in the city at the moment) and is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. They have blackjack tables, baccarat, roulette, slot machines, and more.

OTHER OPTIONS
There are a variety of nighttime boat cruises that tour the Busan area. One company, Covecruise (☏ 051/742-2525), provides both dinner and night cruises, which last about 2 hours. The nightly dinner cruise leaves at 7pm and returns at 9:30pm and costs ₩70,000. The nighttime cruise runs from around 10:30pm to 12:30am and costs ₩55,000. Most of the other cruises set sail at sunset and return well after dark. See the section on boat tours (p. 336) for info.
The Taebaek Mountains, sometimes called the backbone of Korea, run the length of Gangwon-do (Gangwon province). Because of this geographical division, the province has two distinct regions: Yeongseo, the region west of the mountains, which has a small amount of farmable land, and Yeongdong, the region east of the mountains, whose people primarily rely on food from the sea. Because South Korea’s three largest rivers (Namhan, Bukhan, and Nakdong) all originate in the Taebaek Mountains, Gangwon-do was traditionally known as the “area that started our ancestor’s life.”

The province covers some 16,894 sq. km (6,523 sq. miles), but more than 80% of that land is thickly forested. Indeed, very little of the land is even flat, making farming difficult. So, not surprisingly, the people who settled here either stuck close to the coastline and relied on fishing, or moved into the interior, cultivated potatoes (which can be grown in rocky terrain), and learned to supplement their diets with wild plants. Regardless of the scarcity of farm products, the people of the region are known for their generosity.

Traveling through the region, you will discover the beauty of the land (with unfettered forests), and learn about the history of the people. There are a handful of cities, but none of them is highly developed or very large in size, so the region retains some of the natural beauty it has had for centuries, although the carving of the mountains for new roads coupled with severe rains have eroded some of the terrain’s green splendor, leaving exposed dirt and unsightly concrete supports.

Still, lovers of nature will find everything from the majestic landscape of Seoraksan to rafting down the white waters of the region’s strong rivers. All seasons bring tourists escaping the insanity of Seoul, but the changing colors of autumn draw the largest crowds. Winter attracts skiers, sledgers, and ice fishermen. Summer brings campers and hikers, and spring attracts nature lovers to its blooming forests.

1 SEORAKSAN NATIONAL PARK ★★★

As South Korea’s most popular national park, Seoraksan (Mt. Seorak, sometimes spelled “Sorak”) attracts many visitors on the weekends. But when the leaves change color in the fall, traffic basically comes to a standstill. If you want to avoid the crowds, aim to come on a weekday.

Since its declaration as a natural monument by the government in 1965, Seoraksan, which means “Snow Peak Mountain,” became South Korea’s fifth national park in 1970 and was declared a conservation area by UNESCO (the only one in the entire country) in 1982. Since then, the government has tried to protect the 360 sq. km (140 sq. miles) of natural habitat and the unique plants and animals that are found here, while updating the facilities to meet international standards for visitors.

In the spring, blooming azaleas, dogwoods, and forsythia carpet the slopes in vibrant yellows, purples, and pinks. The summer brings lush green slopes and full streams and waterfalls as the melted snow makes its way down the rocky slopes. Fall is the most popular, with the brilliant colors of the autumn foliage in a riot of greens, yellows, reds, and oranges. Even in the winter, the snow blankets the hushed landscape, bringing serenity and a quiet beauty.

Seoraksan is divided into three parts: Outer (Oeseorak), Inner (Naeseorak), and South (Namseorak). Outer Seorak is part of Sokcho city and is the spot where you'll find the best lodging, leisure facilities, beaches, and spas. Outer Seorak has more dramatic scenery, since this is where the craggier, higher peaks can be found. It is closer to the ocean and has steeper slopes.

Less accessible is Inner Seorak, deep within the Taebaek Mountains. The slopes are mellower, but there is thicker vegetation. It boasts beautiful scenery and famous temples, like Baekdamsa (p. 353) and Bongjeong-am. There are fewer tourist spots, but more opportunities for hiking (trails range from short ones that take a few hours to longer ones that take days to traverse). The area at the south of the main ridgeline of Seoraksan is South Seorak. A popular starting point for hikers, it is the most direct route to the Daecheongbong, the main peak of the mountain range, and is also where you'll find the Osaek Hot Springs (p. 351) and other carbonic acid spas in the area.

The mountains and waterfalls of the region offer spectacular views, and not just for serious rock climbers but for those willing to take a casual hike. Admission to the Osaek/Changsduea area in the south is ₩1,600 adults 18 and up, ₩600 teens 13-17, ₩300 children 12 and under. Admission to the park from the Baekdam region (accessible from Inje) or to the Sinheungs area in Oeseorak (accessible from Sokcho) is ₩3,200 adults, ₩1,300 teens, ₩700 children. Additional fees apply for individual temples and other attractions within the park.

GETTING THERE

There is a tiny international airport at Yangyang (YNY), 281-1, Dongho-li, Sonyang-myeon (☏ 033/670-7312 or 7); there are flights from Busan (once a day) and Jeju-do, as well as charter flights from China, Japan, or Taiwan. Check with China Southern Airlines (www.csair.com), Jeju Air (www.jejuair.net), or Korean Air (www.koreanair.com) for flight info.

There are no rail lines that will take you directly from Seoul or Busan to Seoraksan, but you can take a bus. The closest train station is at Jeongdongjin. From there, you can take a bus to Sokcho. There are local buses from Jeongdongjin to Sokcho seven times a day which cost ₩1,700. Buses also go to Samcheok three times a day. Airport limousine buses run three times a day from Yangyang and go to various places, including Naksan, Sokcho, and Tongil Park. Fares range from ₩1,000 to Naksan to ₩6,400 to Tongil Park.

From Seoul Express Bus Terminal, 19-3 Banpo-dong, Seocho-gu (☏ 02/535-4151), or Dong Seoul Bus Terminal, 546-1 Guui-dong, Seongdong-gu (☏ 02/446-8000), take a bus to Sokcho city. Buses from Seoul Express Terminal start leaving at 6:30am in 30- to 60-minute intervals and stop running at 11:30pm. Buses from the Dong Seoul Terminal depart daily every 1½ hours from 7am to 7pm. The trip takes about 4 hours from either station and costs anywhere from ₩12,800 to ₩20,700. There is a 20-minute rest stop after about 2 hours. From Sokcho, take bus no. 7 or 7-1 for Seorak-dong and it will take you to Outer Seorak (Oeseorak). The local bus costs about ₩1,000 and takes about 30 minutes.

Driving from Seoul, now that the Yeongdong highway (road 50) is completed, it takes only about 3 hours to get to Seoraksan (sans traffic, of course). If you can spare the time and prefer to take more scenic routes, opt for one of many mountain roads that wind around the terrain of Gangwon-do to Seoraksan. Once inside the national park, you'll have to hoof it.

A South Korean travel agency, Exodus DMC (☏ 031/907-8044, ext. 5; fax 031/907-2393; exodusdmk@koreabound.com; Mon–Fri 9am–6pm), offers 3-day/2-night trips from Seoul to Mt. Seorak, which includes a stop in Hwajinpo, a coastal town where North Korean leader Kim II-Sung and his family, including his son, current North Korean dictator Kim Jong-II, used to spend their summer holidays before it became part of South Korea.
GETTING AROUND  Since much of Seoraksan is protected natural preserves, there are no buses running through the park. However, buses from nearby towns will bring you to the park’s entrance. From there your best bet is to walk or take a taxi to the sections you’d like to see. You may wish to rent a car to give yourself maximum freedom to get around. I suggest renting a car in Seoul and driving here (see chapter 3 for car-rental info). If you wait until you’re in the area, you can rent a car at most of the higher-end hotels or from Seorak Park Rent-a-Car (the Gangneung branch, ☎ 033/651-8006, or the Gangwon branch, ☎ 033/652-4266).

VISITOR INFORMATION  The official Seoraksan National Park Management Office website is at http://english.knps.or.kr/Knp/Seoraksan/; or call ☎ 033/636-7702 in Sokcho, ☎ 033/672-2883 or 033/462-2554 in Osaek, or ☎ 033/463-3476 in Inje. There is a tourist information center (☎ 033/639-2689) at the Sokcho Express Bus Terminal, which is open daily from 9am to 6pm, but closed in January.

Fast Facts Seoraksan

The closest “village” to Seoraksan is Seorak-dong, a man-made, hypertouristy enclave of hotels, motels, restaurants, and souvenir shops.

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs  A veritable tourist trap, Seorak-dong is the most convenient, though not the most economical, place to get your money exchanged (at the currency exchange desks of high-end banks). You’re better off looking for ATMs, which are fairly easy to find.

Post Office  The post office (Mon–Fri 9am–4:30pm) is at 46-119 Seorak-dong, Sokcho-si (☎ 033/636-7002).

EXPLORING OSEORAK (OUTER SEORAKSAN)

There are four different entrances to Seoraksan National Park, and which one you choose will depend on what you’d like to see. The park itself is bordered by four cities and counties—Sokcho, Inje, Goseong, and Yangyang. Outer Seoraksan can be best reached from Sokcho.

Biryong Falls ★  The name, which means “Flying Dragon Falls,” came from the idea that the roaring waters tumbling over the rocks evoked the shape of dragons rising from the mist. The hike to these 40m-high (131-ft.) falls is a pleasant one, leading through a bamboo forest and over the Biryong-gyo (Biryong Bridge) in the lower part of the Cheonbuldong (One Thousand Buddhas) Valley. If you walk past the bridge and go about 30 minutes to the left, you will see Yukdam Falls, a group of six small waterfalls cascading down into a deep pond. A further 20-minute walk will bring you to Biryong Falls. Another narrow path leads to the Towangseong Falls, but because of the rocky and dangerous terrain, the climb leading to the falls is currently closed to the public.

Cable Car  During high season, there can be up to a 2-hour wait for the cable car, which runs from the park entrance up to Gwongeumseong (see below), so be sure to come early or late, when the crowds have thinned out. The actual ride up takes only 6 minutes and saves an arduous and steep climb that takes over an hour on foot. It doesn’t run during strong winds, so check the weather before making a special trip.
Seoraksan National Park

Cheoksan Oncheon (Cheoksan Spa) ★  The region’s hot spring, which dates back to the Mesozoic era, is known for its slightly blue color. Like many of South Korea’s hot springs, the locals claim that the waters are great for people with skin and eye disease. I don’t know how curative the minerals in the water are, but the hot soak is nice after a long day of hiking in Seoraksan. They also have hotel rooms starting at W50,000 for a double room on weekdays.

Cheonbuldong (Seorak Valley) ★★★  The main valley in Seoraksan, it got its name because of the many peaks surrounding it, lined up like 1,000 Buddhist saints. There is a river that runs through the narrow valley as the water flows over white boulders. What used to be a difficult path is now overrun with tourists, especially in early October, when the fall colors bring the masses. From Sinheungsan, walk to the Biseondae (Fairy Rock) and continue to the valley. Once you get here you’ll see why, since the surrounding peaks and the foliage are pretty spectacular.

Gwongeumseong  A site of an old castle, it was believed to have been built by the 23rd Goryeo King, Gojong. It is also called Onggeum Castle, Toto Castle, or Gwon-Kim Castle, the latter name derived from a legend that two generals built it to keep peace. Past the Biryong Bridge, there is a path that leads to Gwongeumseong, but it was so steep and rocky that a cable car (see above) was built in 1971. From high on the plateau of the ruin, you can get a wonderful view of the valleys and the rocks below.

Gyejo-am  When starting from the Sokcho entrance to the national park, and climbing up to Ulsan Bawi, this small hermitage temple is a nice place to rest and take in the scenery (especially the nice view of Cheonbuldung valley below). Created from a natural stone cave, it was built in a.d. 652 (the sixth year of Queen Jindeok), the same year the Hangseongsa and Sinheungsan were built. Near Gyejo-am is Heundeul Bawi (Teetering Rock), a massive boulder which sits precariously on a cliff. One person pushing on the boulder can make it rock slightly, but it won’t budge from its resting spot regardless of how much force is used to push it. Check out the graffiti that other visitors have left behind, some of which dates back hundreds of years.

Osaek Hot Springs  Part of Namseorak (South Seorak), the hot springs were supposedly discovered by a Buddhist monk during the Joseon Period. Water that is high in iron and carbonic acid flows in rivulets from three base rocks. It’s supposed to have many health benefits, including being good for the complexion, and is sometimes called Mioncheon (Beauty Hot Springs) as well. The area has some easy walks and some very challenging trails, but what draws most visitors are the hot springs and baths available in the area’s resort hotels, such as the Greenyard Hotel (☏ 033/670-1000) and the Seorak Spa (☏ 033/672-2645).

Inside Seoraksan, Osaek-li, Seo-myeon, Yangyang-gun. Admission ₩1,600 adults, ₩600 teens, ₩300 ages 7–12, free for kids 6 and under. Daily 24 hr.

Seorak Sunrise Park/Naemulchi Park  Stretching along the coastal edge of Seoraksan, the park here has become famous for its beautiful sunrise over the East Sea. A Joseon Dynasty scholar, Song Si-yol, named the place Naemulchi ("a village sunk underwater by heavy rain") on his way to exile on Geoje-do. There is a memorial tower and... several sculptures. The tourist information center in the park is also a good place to get maps of the area.

Daepo-dong, Sokcho, Gangwon-do. ☏ 033/639-2547. Free admission. 24 hr. year-round. From the Sokcho Express Bus Terminal, take local bus no. 1, 7, or 9 (takes about 10 min.); from the Sokcho Intercity Bus Terminal, take local bus no. 7-1 or 9-1 (takes about 30 min.).

Seorak Waterpia (Seorak Water Park) ★ Located inside the Hanhwa Resort Complex, this water park and oncheon was the first one built in Seoraksan. The pools here are filled with mineral water from Cheoksan. In addition to the usual water park facilities, there is also a theme park with water rafts and body slides. There are plenty of soaking and sauna facilities as well. Tip: Go after 6pm. You’ll get a discount and 3 good hours of soaking.

Sinheungsa ★ The country’s oldest Seon (Zen) temple, it is also the closest to the Sokcho entrance to Seoraksan, only about a 10-minute walk from Sogong-won (small park). Built by the Shilla Monk Jajang Yulsa during the sixth year of Queen Jindeok’s reign (in a.d. 652), it has been destroyed and rebuilt many times. A newer bronze Buddha statue (over 10m/33 ft. high) stands on the path to the temple. Past the bridge at the entrance are the four Cheonwang (celestial king) statues. Although most of the structures have been rebuilt, the original three-story pagoda, a 1,400-year-old bell, and one of the original stone Buddha statues remain on-site. You may choose to do an overnight temple stay here as well.

Inside Seoraksan. No phone. Admission W3,400 adults, W1,300 teens, W700 ages 7–12, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Daily 4am–7pm.

Ulsan Bawi ★ There is a train from Gyejo-am that leads straight up the hill to the Ulsan rocks. Made up of six granite peaks, jutting above thick forests, Ulsan Bawi has a view of the surrounding mountains, the East Sea, and the Haksapyeong reservoir that is pretty spectacular. The trail up from Gyejo-am is so steep that a metal staircase was installed to make the climb easier. It is still a steep incline and will take about 45 to 60 minutes to climb to the top from Gyejo-am. From Sinheungsa (Sinheung Temple), it’ll take about 2 hours.

Hiking Trails

For most visitors to Seoraksan, a half-day or full-day hike is a good way to see the highlights of the park. If you’re a serious hiker or backpacker, you can hire a guide for about 3 days to explore the lesser-seen areas. Contact the Seoraksan National Park Administration Office (☏ 033/636-7700) for more info. The following are hikes (Koreans call them courses) that will take less than half a day to a full day. Regardless of how long you plan to be out, check the weather conditions and road closures before heading out. Be sure to bring a hat, sunblock, water, and snacks or a meal. Due to fire hazards, there is no smoking or cooking allowed in the park. The trails listed below are open year-round, except in inclement weather (such as extreme snow conditions in the winter). Note: Regardless of how hot it may get in the summer, swimming is also not allowed. The admission fee to the park is W1,000 for adults, W600 for teens, and W300 for children.

Biryong Falls-Sinheungsa Course Head for the Sinheung Temple. From there, go left, where you will see the Biryong-gyo Bridge. The trail starts right after you cross... the bridge and takes you to the waterfall. A pleasant hike near the water, it’ll take about 2 hours, with no major uphill climbs.

Biseondae Cliffs-Sinheungsas Course From Sinheungsas, head straight, toward the Iljumun (Gate). After passing the cliffs, you’ll see Daecheongbong (Great Green Peak). In the center of the Bonguri (rock) is Geumgang-gul (cave). Climbing up the steps to the cave will take about 30 to 40 minutes. This is one of the most scenic hikes in the park, and it’s an easy trek for beginners; plan on it taking about 2 hours.

Gwongeumseong-Sinheungsa Course From the entrance, walk down the path to the park—from there you can take the cable car up to the top. Once you get off the cable car, it’s about a 20- to 30-minute hike up to the Gwongeum Fortress. A relatively easy hike, the entire round-trip will take about 80 minutes.

Seongguksa Course (Osaek Area) This trail runs through Cheonbuldong and Baekdam valleys, as well as the Seongguk Temple site. From the entrance to the park, follow the trail that leads up to Seongguksa. Continue through Jujeongol Valley ★★★ and you will come to a fork in the road. The left leads to Sibi Falls, while the right path leads to Yongso Falls. This easy hike will take about 2 hours.

Ulsan Bawi Course This course is relatively easy from Heundeul Bawi (Teetering Rock) to Gyejo-am. The difficulty comes in the steep climb up the rocks of Ulsan Bawi from the hermitage below. There are metal stairs to help with the climb, but it’s still quite dangerous and slippery, especially in wet weather. Still, the view of the mountains and the ocean from the top is worth all that hard work.

Yangpok Course Starting from the Sinheungs area, this trail includes the Yang Falls, located in the Cheonbuldong Valley. This hike is well known for its colorful scenery in the autumn; you’ll walk along the valley and see mountain peaks, dense forests, and clear water falling from the mountains. This course takes about 6 hours round-trip, but doesn’t have any major uphill climbs.

EXPLORING NAESEORAK (INNER SEORAK)

Less convenient to get to, the inner part of Seoraksan is much more tranquil and quiet, but not any less beautiful.

Baekdamsa (Baekdam Temple) ★ Located inside Naeseorak (Inner Seorak), the temple has been destroyed several times and rebuilt, even changing locations and names. There is a newer stone bridge over the Bokdam Gyegok leading to the entrance of this humble, understated temple. Of its on-site treasures, the most impressive is the wooden Amitayus Buddha, which was made in 1748, and is considered one of the best statues of the 18th century.

Inside Seoraksan. Admission W3,200 adults, W1,200 teens, W600 ages 7–12, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Daily 9am–6pm. From the Inje Terminal, take a bus to Wontong or Jinburiyeong and get off at Yongdae-li. From there, walk 15 min. to the next bus stop and take a shuttle/village bus to Baekdamsa.

Baekdam Valley The valley got its name thanks to a legend about Baekdamsa (Baekdam Temple, see above). The temple was moved to this valley sometime in the 1300s, after it was plagued by mysterious fires in its old location. But the fires continued until one night, a monk dreamed that an elder monk tossed water from the mountain above. The name was changed to Baekam (100 Pools)—fitting since there are dozens of pools in the area—and the fires stopped. Unfortunately, the temple was destroyed during the Korean War and has never been fully rebuilt.
A river runs through the valley in an S-shape, from the Naegappyeong Village to the front of Baekdam Mountain Villa. You can walk up from the ticket booth to Baekdamsa, located in the middle of the valley, or take a shuttle bus halfway up. About a 10-minute walk from the temple is the Baekdam Mountain Villa. If you continue up, you’ll see the Geumgyo, the first bridge on the right side. After crossing the third bridge (the Gang-gyo), you’ll see Eunseon-do. From the fourth road, the rest of the paths are sand.

Baekundong Valley The valley is located between Deoktaesan and Seongaksan, between the Seven Brothers Stones and the Yongdam Falls, starting from Gwuiddge-cheong Peak. On either side, there are sheer cliffs, which are popular with mountain climbers but can be enjoyed by all visitors. The largest waterfall in the valley is Baekun Falls, from which you can get a great view of the mountainous scenery.

Daeseung Falls This was the main recreational area for the last Shilla emperor, King Gyeong-Sun. The path to the falls starts on a steep, rocky climb from the left of Jangsudae ticket booth. Go past Sajung Falls and continue up the metal ladder until you reach an observation area, where you can see the falls. Walk along on the right walkway to Daseung-ryong for about 5 minutes, and you’ll meet a narrow path leading right up to the waterfall.

Gaya-dong Valley Located deep in the heart of Seoraksan, Gaya-dong is a relatively small valley, but has its quiet charms. The trail that leads to the valley starts behind the Suryeomdong shelter. Walk up for 30 minutes and you’ll come upon Ose Falls. In front of it are the high cliffs, called the Cheonwang Gates, the entryway to Gaya-dong. Shortly past the “gates” is Cheonwang Falls, and then Waryongyeon. Above Waryongyeon is Neoreok Rock. If you walk farther up there is a crossway. The old path to Ose-am is on the left and the path to Bongjeong-am (sometimes called Tapgol) is on the right. Stop to enjoy the scenery at Mangyeongdae on the way to Ose-am. If you keep going up, you’ll reach Muneomi Ridge. There the path splits into two again—one leads to Bongyrong Ridgeline and the other to Cheonbuldong Valley. If you want to climb to Daecheong Peak, walk past the Huiungak shelter in the Socheong Peak toward Jungcheong Peak. About 2km (1¼ miles) down from Daecheong Peak is Bongjeong-am, which is supposed to be one of the best retreats for Buddhists in the country. The most famous structure in the hermitage is a five-story stone pagoda that’s over 1,300 years old. Gaya-dong has convenient paths, still unadulterated by any signs or metal steps.

Hangyeryeong One of the three ridges that make up Seoraksan (the other two are Misiryeong and Jinburyeong). If you go down the Hangyeryeong path, you will reach the Osaek District, named such since “o” in Korean means five. Everything in this area is supposed to come in fives. The natural carbonated spring water is said to have five flavors; the original stone pagoda that stands in the Seonggaksa temple site is said to have rocks of five colors. There is even a mythical flower that is said to have bloomed in five different colors.

Hwangtaedeok Jang (Alaskan Pollack Market) In the winter (from the end of Dec to Mar), rows of hwangtae (Alaskan pollack) are left out to dry in the winter breeze. Alaskan pollack (also know as wall-eye pollack) is a meaty white fish and a member of the cod family. It’s also something of a staple of the diet around here. Not only is it fun to see row after row of fish laid out to dry, but the scenery in the Inje Yondae-li area is even more gorgeous under a blanket of white snow.
Jangsudae The least popular part of the park, the area is named after the traditional house built here by Korean soldiers, which they called Jangsudae. Surrounded by the Jangsudae cliffs, the house marks the starting point for the trail that leads to Daeseung Falls and the 12 Seonnyetang.

Misiryeong Valley The Misiryeong Valley extends into Seoraksan past Dojeok Pokpo (Thief Waterfall) toward Inje. The waterfall is named after a local legend about a thief who lurked in the valley, robbing unsuspecting travelers, and then drowning them in the waterfall. A little grim, but despite this area’s penchant for dark stories, this unfeathered forest is peaceful and cool, even in the summer. The path to the waterfall is a bit steep, but a rope is provided to guide you down.

Naerincheon (Naerin River) The onlycheon (small river) in the country that flows north, it crosses Hongcheon and Inje. Naerincheon Gyegok (valley) starts near Odaesan Valley and Hapgang-gyo (bridge) and continues for about 57km (35 miles). Usually, when people say Naerincheon, they mean the downstream area of Naerincheon. The upper stream of Naerincheon is again divided into Misan Valley and Moraeo Valley. Few people go there because it is difficult to reach. On the upper stream of Bangtaecheon, which joins together with Naerincheon, is Jindong Valley, and to the north of Naerincheon is Jumbongsan, Bangtaesan, Bangdong Springs, and Bangtaesan Recreational Forest. Hwangso and Seori resorts are in the midsection of Naerincheon, and Piasi Valley downstream. The Piasi River runs between Hyeon-li and Soyang-ho (lake).

Seongguksa (Seongguk Temple) A fairly new temple has been built on the site of the older destroyed temple. The original temple was built during the Shilla Dynasty, but the new temple was built in 1995. All that remains of the original is a three-story stone pagoda. The most impressive element of the current temple is a very large bronze Buddha that towers over the area. There is a reclining Buddha statue and a couple of large gold Buddha statues on-site as well. There are also new shrines with rows of smaller golden Buddhas, each dedicated to a family.

Seonnyetang Tangsugol (Valley of the 12 Angels’ Bath) The Valley of the Twelve Angels’ Bath is a valley in Yondae-li where a waterfall connects to a pool. Legend has it that 12 angels came down to bathe here (hence the name), but there are only eight pools. Due to natural erosion, there are steep holes and pools in the valley creating the water baths. Unfortunately, some of the scenery has been ruined by the iron bridges that go over the bathing pools, but the bridges do make for easy access.

Hiking Trails

Baekdamsa Course Enter the park from the Baekdam area of Inje-gun. This trail has two options: the first will take you to the Baekdam Temple. The well-paved path is easy, but longer. For those less inclined for walking, you can take a shuttle bus, which will take you halfway up the mountain, leaving the last few kilometers for you to hike up yourself.

Daeseung Falls Course The Daeseung waterfall is one of the three largest in the country. Enter the park from the Inje area and go up the steep steps. While hiking up the steps, you will see a forked path. Take the left one to go to the falls. You’ll know you’re close by when you hear the sound of cascading waters echoing on the rocks. The steep trail takes about 2 hours.
Suryeomdong Course  Enter the park from the Baekdam area of Inje-gun; this trail includes the Baekdam and Suryeomdong valleys. This is a long but not steep trail and will take about 4 hours. If you’re short on time, or feeling less than energetic, you can take a shuttle bus that will take you about 4.5km (23/4 miles) up.

AROUND SEORAKSAN
Sokcho
A small city on the eastern coast, Sokcho is the main gateway to Seoraksan National Park. In and of itself, it is a charming town with a beautiful beach and several attractions of its own. It is also one of the only towns in the area with a semblance of a nightlife.

Since there is no rail service and the small airport was closed recently, the best way to get here is by bus. There are two bus stations in town—one is an express bus terminal and the other is the regular intercity bus terminal.

Sokcho Beach  Located just about 500m (1,640 ft.) from the Sokcho Express Bus Terminal, just turn left and you’ll hit the beach in about 5 minutes. Summer vacation (mid-July through Aug) draws all the tourists fleeing the heat of Seoul. It’s a pleasant, sandy beach, with a volleyball court, a mini–football (soccer) field, and shower and changing facilities. There is a campground nearby as well.

Yangyang
Yangyang is south of Sokcho and the first town you reach on the coast when you come east from Seoul. You can take a bus for Yangyang from the DongSeoul Bus Terminal. They run daily from 7am to 7:30pm about every hour and the trip takes about 31/2 hours. There is a small airport in Yangyang (see “Getting There,” earlier in this chapter), but most people take the bus. Buses run to and from Osaek, Jangsu-daeng, Seoraksan, and Sokcho.

The town and the county (gun) have the same name (making this a bit confusing). Yangyang is well known throughout the country for its songi beoseot (pine mushrooms). You’ll even see a cartoon mushroom “mascot” statue at the entrance to the town.

Included in Yangyang county is Naksan Provincial Park, which has 24km (15 miles) of shoreline that extend through the Seonsa relic area, Dongho Beach, and Hajodae Beach. It is centered on Naksan Temple and Naksan Beach. Entrance to the park (which includes entrance to Naksansa) is W2,800 adults, W1,800 children, free for seniors 65 and over and children 6 and under.

Hajodae Beach ★ Located 1km (1/2 mile) north of the 38th parallel, there is a small pavilion, the Hajodae (dating back to the Joseon Dynasty), overlooking the sea. It used to be encased in barbed wire, but the government has recently removed most of the barbed wire from the eastern coast of the country. At the 38th parallel, there is a boulder indicating it. This is where the division was drawn at the end of World War II, so all points north of here were administered by North Korea. When the cease-fire was signed after the Korean War, territory above this line was traded with almost an equal amount of land north of Seoul, below the 38th parallel.

On the left side of the beach is an unmanned lighthouse, which is open daily from 9am to 7pm. You can see some spectacular scenery from there. The most popular times to visit are when the waters are warmer in mid-July through August.

Hagwangjeong-li, Hyeonbuk-myeon, Yangyang-gun, Gangwon-do. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From the Yangyang Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Gangneung or Jumunjin and get off at Hajodae. Buses run every 20 min. and take 10 min.
Naksan Beach  A popular beach on the east coast, a dense pine forest comes right up to the expansive sand here. Facilities include showers, a wrestling area, a mini–volleyball court, and dressing rooms.

Jeonjin-li/Jucheong-li/Josan-li, Ganghyeon-myeon, Yangyang-gun, Gangwon-do. Free admission, but you may need to pay entrance to the Naksan Provincial Park if you want to explore other areas. Daily 24 hr. Parking available. From Yangyang Bus terminal, take bus no. 9 or 9-1 to Naksan Station. It’s a 5-min. walk from there.

Naksansa (Naksan Temple) ★★  This temple burned down in the spring of 2005, and a newer, brighter temple building was completed in 2009. It is known as the “Temple of Compassion” (because the Avalokitesvara Bodhisattva, who embodies perfect compassion, is housed there). The beautiful and large stone statue overlooking the East Sea was luckily untouched by the fire. A smaller wooden statue and the building that housed it were also unharmed.

The original temple was founded by Uisang, the ambassador for the 30th Shilla king, in A.D. 671, during the 16th year of the reign of King Munmu. One of the few older items that remain is the arched gate (built in 1467 during the reign of King Sejo), which is said to be made of 26 stones, one for each of the magistrates governing the 26 towns in the area. The seven-story pagoda was said to be constructed during that time as well. The bronze bell on-site dates back to 1469.

Below the temple on a seaside cliff is the small hermitage, Hongryeon-am, which was also spared from the fire. When you enter the sanctuary (as always, be sure to remove your shoes), take note of the small hole in the floor through which you can view the waves crashing below.

Tip: Visit during lunch hour and be treated to a free bowl of janchi gooksu (“feast noodles”), a humble dish of broth and somen.

Jeonjin 1-li, Ganghyeon-myeon, Yangyang-gun, Gangwon-do. ☎ 033/672-2447. Admission free. Sunrise–sunset. From either the Yangyang or the Sokcho intercity bus terminals, take bus no. 9 or 9-1 and get off at Naksansa. It takes 10 min. from Yangyang or 40 min. from Sokcho. Driving from Yangyang, take national road 7 to Naksan beach and you’ll find signs pointing to the temple.

Sangwun Elementary School ★★ Finds Kids  This abandoned elementary school is now the studio of potter Jeong Jae-Nam and his novelist wife, Jim Ha-In. Not only is it a fun place to see how the inside of a small Korean elementary school looks, but it’s also a great place to see the potter at work. You can just tour the grounds or participate in a hands-on pottery-making class with Mr. Jeong. Although he doesn’t speak much English, he is very accommodating. The ceramics-making experience costs ₩10,000 per person. For an extra ₩3,000 he’ll deliver your finished piece to your hotel.

Sangwun-li, Sonyang-myeon, Yangyang-gun, Gangwon-do. ☎ 033/672-4054 (Korean). Free admission, except as noted above. Daily 9am–7:30pm. Parking available. From Yangyang Bus Terminal, take bus no. 9 and get off at Sangwun-li. The buses run every 40–60 min. and take 5 min. to get there.

Uisang-dae  Located on a hill overlooking the ocean, this small pavilion is on the way to Hongryeonam’s Gwaneum Cave from Naksansa. It is believed to have been built by Ambassador Uisang as a place for him to meditate while he was building the Naksansa. Like many other historical places in the country, it was destroyed and later rebuilt. The current structure was built in 1925.

Jeonjin-li, Ganghyeon-myeon, Yangyang-gun, Gangwon-do. You have to pay the admission to the provincial park, but the pavilion is free. Daily sunrise–sunset. Follow the directions to Naksansa (see above).
Inje

A county on the western edge of Seoraksan, Inje (☏ 033/461-2122; www.inje.go.kr) is a rural county with about 90% of the land covered with forests. Most travelers just pass through it to get from Chuncheon to Seoraksan and the eastern sea. While most of the luxury hotels and condos are on the Sokcho side of Seoraksan, Inje has many of the more affordable and humble minbak (homestays). The Inje Bus Terminal (☏ 033/463-2847, Korean only) serves buses to and from Dong Seoul Station, Chuncheon, Sokcho, Daejin, Seoraksan, and local destinations.

Although the major tourist attractions here are part of Seoraksan, the main draw is the white-water rafting. The conditions on the Naerincheon River are ideal for the sport.

Every winter the Inje Ice Fishing Festival (☏ 033/460-2082) is held, usually in late January to early February. While the area is frozen over and covered in white snow, there are smelt-fishing contests and other winter fun, like sledding, ice bowling, and snowmobiling.

WHERE TO STAY

Being one of the most visited tourist areas in the country, there are plenty of accommodations to choose from. High season is usually during vacation time in the summer (mid-July through Aug) and even more so when the leaves change color in the autumn (early Oct to mid-Nov).

For inexpensive lodgings, love motels in the area start at ₩30,000 for a double. Yeogwan and minbak have comparable prices for two. Most low-end accommodations don’t take reservations, take cash only (payable at check-in), and are the same price per room regardless of whether you’re traveling alone or with a companion. Most lower-end accommodations are family owned, which means the owners generally do not speak English, but most of them are very friendly and helpful. All of these places offer TVs, minifridges, and toiletries (some of the love motels have Internet access in the rooms). You can ask for a toothbrush or razor at the desk if you forgot yours.

Yeogwan and love motels in Yangyang start at ₩25,000.

Hotel Maremons ★ This modern building is located on the coast, so some of the rooms have nice views of the East Sea. The hotel is within walking distance to Sokcho Beach. Standard rooms are efficient with clean-line furniture, but not very spacious. The beds are the usual, Korean standard—comfortable, but not plush. You do get better facilities and beds with the deluxe rooms and suites. The on-site facilities are quite modern and staff are ultrafriendly. Ask about package deals when making a reservation and you may get a good discount on the spa and other facilities.

Kensington Stars Hotel ★★★ Located near the Sokcho entrance to Seoraksan, this may be one of the best hotels in the area. The rooms are comfortable and nicely furnished, and most of them have mountain views and balconies (be sure to request one with a view when making reservations or checking in). Built in 1979, the facilities are constantly being updated and the various themes add a fun touch. Both Western-style and Korean-style ondol rooms are available. The wonderful staff speaks excellent English and is very accommodating.

WHERE TO DINE

Since the province is not a rice-producing region, many of the dishes you'll find here feature potatoes as the starch of choice. Gamja buchingae (potato pancakes) are popular as a snack, appetizer, or anju (drinking snack). Because of the surrounding mountains, wild vegetables and mushrooms from the area find their way into traditional dishes. Be sure to try the sanchea bibimbap (wild mountain vegetable mixed rice), which is a delicious and inexpensive treat, or the local specialty, dotoli mook (savory gelatin made from acorns). One of the popular seafood dishes of the region is hwangtae, whose drying and marketplace is mentioned earlier, and ojing-uh soondae (Korean sausage made with squid instead of pork).

Inexpensive Korean restaurants serving local fare are easy to find, but Western-style cuisine and upscale dining can be found only in the resorts or high-end hotels, although you are more likely than not to get overpriced inauthentic fare. If you get tired of Korean food but don't want to break the bank, there are a handful of fast-food options (like pizza and burgers) in Sokcho.

If you love soon dubu (soft tofu hot pot), head over to Haksapyeong Soon Dubu Chon (Soft Tofu Village), where dozens of restaurants specialize in the dish. A couple of standout are Gim Yeong-Hae Halmuhn Soon Dubu (☎ 033/635-9520) and Jaelaehshik Chodang Soon Dubu (☎ 033/635-6612). However, you can't go wrong with any of the restaurants here. All of them have comparable menus (with tofu and Alaskan pollock as main menu items). Soon dubu prices generally range from ₩5,000 to ₩7,000.

From the Sokcho Bus Terminal, take bus no. 3-1 and get off in front of the Hwahwa Resort.

Moderate

Jinyang Hwaetjib ★★ KOREAN SEAFOOD  This hwae (raw fish) house specializes in the local dish—ojing-uh soondae. There are other fresh raw fish on offer, but it’s the soondae that brings in the crowds.

Inexpensive

Cheogatjib Yangnyeom Tongdak ★ Kids KOREAN FRIED CHICKEN  Although this is a chain, if you’ve never had Korean-style seasoned fried chicken, it really is finger-lickin’ good (though you won’t see many Koreans licking their fingers, since it’s considered bad manners).

635 Jangsa-dong, Sokcho-si. (☎ 033/631-9965. Entrees ₩6,000–₩15,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–10pm.

Yeongbawi Shikdang (Dragon Rock Restaurant) Finds KOREAN  For over 30 years, this place has been serving hwangtae and traditional local dishes at the same location. The best time to come is in the winter when the fish are all hung out to dry in the snow. The hwangtae gui jeongshik (grilled pollack meal), gamja buchim (potato flatcake), and dotoli mook are all worth a try. Wash it down with some dongdongju (homemade rice wine). There isn’t any English on the sign, so just look for the place with two stone dragon statues flanking the entrance.

401 Yeongdae-li, Buk-myeon, Inje-gun. (☎ 033/462-4079. Entrees ₩5,000–₩7,000. No credit cards. Daily 7:30am–9pm. Located off of highway 46, not far from the Alps ski resort.
Gangneung is one of the largest coastal cities in Gangwon-do and the largest economic center in the Yeongdong region. It is located south of Yangyang and north of Donghae. The Taebaek Mountains, which rise up behind the city, help keep it a bit warmer than coastal cities in the west. And unlike in other parts of the country, the rainy season is in the fall, not the summer. It has no commercial port and not a lot of fishing off its coast. Due to its historical significance and its seaside location, it has become a tourist spot for vacationing Seoulites.

GETTING THERE  Gangneung used to have a small airport, but now the nearest airport is at Yangyang (since it consolidated the Gangneung and Sokcho airports). Most people take the bus into Gangneung, since it is the fastest and most economical way to travel into the city. You can take a bus from the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal (take Seoul subway line 2, exit 4) daily from 6:30am to 11pm. It takes about 3 hours and buses run every 30 to 50 minutes. From Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal in Gangnam (take Seoul subway line 3, exit 1), buses run every 15 to 30 minutes, daily from 6am to 11:30pm. There are two bus stations in town, the newer one (far from the city center) and the older one, which serves buses from closer cities.

If you prefer to travel by rail, you can take a train from Seoul’s Cheongnyangni Station. There are usually between four and nine trains daily into Gangneung. The best way to arrive by train is to catch the “sunrise” train the night before, sleep on the way, and arrive in time to see the sun rise over Jeongdongjin Beach. There are daily Mugunghwa trains leaving at 10:40pm, arriving at 4:40am for early risers, and a midnight train that arrives at 6:22am. Night owls can take either the 2pm train that arrives at 8:10am or the 5pm train, arriving at 11:15pm.

GETTING AROUND  Local buses will get you pretty much anywhere you need to go. Unfortunately, most signs are not in English and drivers don’t speak English. However, if you can say the name of your destination in Korean, you can indicate to your driver to let you know when to get off. Local buses run frequently and cost about 1,000 won, so be sure you have plenty of small bills to get around.

VISITOR INFORMATION  The Tourist Guide Office, 992-3 Hongje-dong, Gangneung-si (☎ 033/640-4757; daily 8:30am–10pm), is located a couple of minutes from the bus terminal. Other tourist info centers can be found at the train station, Jeongdongjin (☎ 033/644-5062), and the entrance to Gyeongpo Beach. The city’s website is www.gntour.go.kr.

There are 12 other pavilions in the area, but this is the most impressive. The best time to visit is between March and October.

Jeongdongjin Beach ★★ A tiny fishing village is located on this beach, named during the Joseon Dynasty because it is by the ocean directly east of the Hanyang’s Gwanghwamun. At this beach, known for its great sunrises, you can get a nice view by hiking up Goseongsan. Across from the train station, there is a small alley to the right which leads to a hiking trail up the mountain. The wooden steps lead you up to the top and the view. You can catch a short train ride here from the Gangneung Station.

The train station here (which is incidentally in the Guinness Book of World Records for the somewhat strange honor of being the train station closest to the ocean anywhere in the world) is located right on the beach. Ojukheon Municipal Museum and Residence ★★ The Ojukheon museum was created by merging the city’s museum with a historic residence. Ojukheon is one of the oldest houses in the country and is perfectly preserved to show how people lived during the Joseon Dynasty. It was also the birthplace of Yul-Gok, a great scholar, whose real name was Yi I. He was a Neo-Confucian who came into prominence in the 16th century. His mother was a great painter and her influence may be what encouraged him to read and write Chinese characters by the age of 3 and to have finished his Confucian classics by age 7. His writings and theories continued to have a profound influence on Korea for years after his death in 1584. Gyeongpo Beach and Seongyeojae are nearby.

In 1996, a North Korean submarine was stranded on the rocks at this spot. The 26-member crew got out of the submarine and tried to return to the north, leading to a deadly manhunt that lasted over a month. All but one crew member was killed and there were 17 South Korean casualties. When you see the sub, which is on display here, you may wonder how they managed to squeeze in that many people. The park also houses a U.S. warship from the Korean War, given by the Americans as a gift in 1972.

Other Points of Interest

Gyeongpoho (Gyeongpo Lake) ★ Located in the middle of the city's tourist area, the name means “clear as a mirror.” Gyeongpoho was created when the mouth of a nearby bay was naturally closed off by sediment brought in by the sea. It used to be much larger, but the continual increase in deposits of sand and sediment decreases its size every year. A destination for migratory birds, it is now a natural preservation site and fishing is banned. The lake is surrounded by a series of bronze statues that tell the story of Hong Gil-dong, Korea’s real-life Robin Hood.

Haslla Art World On over 24 hectares (60 acres) of land overlooking the ocean, this art park has a variety of gardens, galleries, viewing areas, and even study rooms where kids can have hands-on experience creating their own masterpieces.

Morae Shigae (Hourglass) Park Gangneung city and Samsung Electronics built this park in 1999 in celebration of the new millennium. It houses the world’s largest hourglass (which is actually circular in shape—it takes an entire year for all the sand to fall). Fun fact: The Korean word for “hourglass” translates to “sand clock.” It is rotated every year at midnight on January 1.

WHERE TO STAY

Now that Gangneung has become a popular tourist destination, there are more choices in accommodations. As in most cities in South Korea, you have a choice of upscale hotels, midpriced hotels, and lower-end yeogwan and love motels. Many sleeping options are available in the downtown area near the bus terminals, as well as in the Namdaecheon district.

Expensive

Hotel Hyundai Gyeongpodae ★★ Value Possibly the best hotel in town, the Hyundai overlooks the East Sea, nestled in a grove of pine trees. The rooms are open and nicely furnished. Even the standard rooms have balconies that overlook either the ocean. or the mountains. Both Western-style and ondol rooms are available. An extra W30,000 gets you an ocean view.

Sun Castle Hotel ★ With both hotel-style and Korean condo-style rooms available, it’s convenient for singles, couples, or families traveling together. Both Western-style rooms and ondol rooms are available. Condo facilities with kitchens are available for a W10,000 surcharge. Rooms are furnished nicely with a decidedly Korean flair. Rates can vary wildly, so be sure to ask before you make a reservation. It’s a convenient hotel for those skiing nearby.

San 84-2, Jumunjin-li, Jumunjin-eup, Gangneung-si. 033/661-1950. 53 units. W55,000 and up standard room; W120,000 and up condo rooms. MC, V. Amenities: Restaurant, cafe; pool. In room: A/C, TV, hair dryer, Internet.

Moderate

Hotel Gangneung ★ Located east of the train station, the Hotel Gangneung offers both ondol and Western-style rooms. Whichever you choose, the rooms are well furnished and relatively spacious for the price (though, as usual, the ondol rooms are a bit bigger).

Inexpensive

In general, you can’t make reservations at lower-priced yeogwan, minbak, and love motels. You just have to walk in and hope that there are rooms available—which can be a dubious proposition in the high season. During the summer, rooms rates are usually in the W35,000 to W45,000 range, but rates go down to W25,000 during less crowded months. There are a bunch of low-priced options along Gyeongpodae Beach. Additional inexpensive sleeping quarters are available on the streets around the train station and the bus terminals on the west side of town.

WHERE TO DINE

In the pine forest south of Gyeongpo Beach is the Chodang Soondubu Village, known for its soon dubu. The soon dubu from this region is unique in that it’s made from water from the East Sea, which gives it a soft, light texture. Usually the soft tofu is served in a big bowl with a side of yangnyeom ganjang (seasoned soy sauce) for flavor. There are over a dozen restaurants in the “village” that specialize in the tofu dish.

There are plenty of other restaurants where you can get inexpensive Korean cuisine. Western food is more difficult to find. There are some fast-food, pizza, and fried chicken restaurants, mostly near the city center and some scattered near the beaches.

Since the region isn’t well known for its rice, the restaurants here tend to have noodles made of buckwheat, potato pancakes, and foods from other starches. Also, since Gangneung is a seaside town, there is no shortage of hwae restaurants along the coast.

Green Hwaetjib ★ Located right across the street from the sandy beach, this hwae place has fresh seafood, right from the water. The owners are generous with the portions, so you’ll be stuffed to the gills with fish. The menu offers a variety of hwae to choose from, including the most expensive dish, jeonbok hwae.
(raw abalone), for ₩70,000. Even the smallest hwae meals are enough to serve two, and the larger ones can serve four or more.

266-10 Sacheonjin-li, Sacheon-myeon, Gangneung-si, Gangwon-do. ☏ 033/644-0366 or 644-0169. Modeum hwae (mixed raw fish meal) ₩60,000 for a small order. MC, V. Daily 8am–midnight.

Heulim Sutbul Galbi KOREAN BEEF ★★ If you're in the mood for meat, look no further than this galbi joint in the middle of the city. The menu offers both beef and pork dishes that you cook on your own tabletop grill. The saeng galbi (unmarinated beef rib-eye), yangnyeom galbi (marinated beef rib-eye), and dweji galbi (spicy pork ribs) are all particularly good here.

1148-21 Ponam-dong, Gangneung-si, Gangwon-do. ☏ 033/643-9125 (Korean). Entrees ₩7,000–₩15,000. MC, V. Daily noon–10pm.

Samgyeori Dongchimi Makguksu KOREAN NOODLES ★★ This regional chain restaurant specializes in maemil gugksu (buckwheat noodles). The broth is made with dongchimi, a type of kimchi made from large cubes of radish, and served chilled. A regular bowl of mak guksu (noodles in a broth with some vegetables and seaweed) is only ₩4,500—hard to beat in terms of both price and flavor. The menu is simple, but offers good, chewy noodles and a cold broth that's refreshing, especially during the heat of summer.

144-2, Samgyeori-li, Jumunjin-eup, Gangneung-si, Gangwon-do. ☏ 033/642-3935 or 033/661-5396 (Korean). Entrees ₩4,000–₩15,000. No credit cards. Daily 10am–10pm.

3 ODAESAN NATIONAL PARK & PYEONGCHANG COUNTY

Located west of Gangneung, Odaesan National Park is nestled amid one of the best known mountain ranges in the country (along with Geumgangsan, Hallasan, and Jirisan), but doesn't draw nearly the same number of visitors. Less rocky and rugged than Seoraksan, its highest peaks still rise over 1,400m (4,593 ft.). Although its slopes are not very dramatic, its softer inclines make for good hiking trails through its thick fir forests. The name “Odaesan” means “Five Plains Mountain,” named after the five high plains between its five major peaks. Admission to the park is ₩3,400 adults, ₩1,300 teens, ₩700 children.

Once an isolated retreat for meditating monks, this is where the practice of Seon (Zen) Buddhism in Korea began. Its two major temples are located in the central valley, and short paths lead from the temples to their associated hermitages. There are hiking trails throughout the park, though you'll find fewer here than in most of South Korea's national parks.

The area is home to 25 species of mammals, including the Korean deer and wild boar. Odaesan also boasts the largest natural forest in the country. It has about 860 species of alpine flora, including the nuncheukbaek (Thuja) tree and thick groves of fir, some over 600 years old. It is well known for its sansam, a wild type of insam (ginseng) that grows deep in its forest. This rare root is supposed to have wonderful health benefits and can live to be quite old (some roots over 100 years old have been found here). The water from the mountain streams are also said to have curative effects.

According to a legend associated with the area, Joseon King Sejo visited Woljeongsa to cure an unusual disease he had. On the way up to the temple, he saw the clean water of the valley and was moved to take a bath. Suddenly, a boy appeared and the king asked him to wash his back. The boy did and the king asked him not to tell anyone that he’d seen the king naked. The boy in return asked the king not to tell anyone he saw the Munsu Bosal (the young Buddha). Surprised, King Sejo turned around but the boy had disappeared. It was at that moment that the king realized that he was cured of his disease. King Sejo ordered a statue of the boy Buddha be built and described how the boy looked in detail. The statue is now in Sangwonsa.

A part of Odaesan is located in Pyeongchang-gun, the third-largest county in the country. Well known for its various winter sports, it has been repeatedly vying to host the Winter Olympics, but was once again rejected for 2014. Because of their continual bids, the area has been built up with wonderful ski resorts, sledding, snow trekking, and other winter options.

GETTING THERE The easiest way to get to the park is to take a bus from the Jinbu Bus Terminal. Buses run about 12 times a day and it’s a 10-minute ride to Odaesan. To get to Jinbu, take a bus from the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal (take Seoul subway line 2 to the Gangbyeon Station). There are 29 buses daily from 6:30am to 10:05pm. The ride takes about 2 hours and 15 minutes and costs ₩11,600.

EXPLORING PYEONGCHANG COUNTY

Daegwallyeong (Yangttae Mokjang) Sheep Farm ★ Kids Nearby are many ranches that raise animals, but this is the only exclusive sheep farm in the area. The main attraction is the couple hundred sheep that are raised here, and you can trade in your admission ticket for a basket of hay to feed the sheep lounging in the barn (the building with the bright orange roof). You can also take a leisurely walk around the sheep’s grazing area—plan to spend about an hour walking up- and downhill and taking in the idyllic scenery. The sheep are out grazing from about early April to the end of October.

Geumdang Valley One of the best sites for rafting is the Geumdang Valley on Pyeongchang-gang (river). The 5km (3-mile) course goes along Geumdangsan and Geomunsan from Deungmaeji Village to Baekam-dong. There are occasional sandbanks where you can take a break, should you wish. The Pyeongchang-gang is also popular for fishing as well. It costs about ₩30,000 per person to rent a raft for nine people and you have to be 14 and older. For groups over 30, it’s ₩25,000 per person and includes a guide and insurance. You can also rent rooms starting at ₩60,000 on weekdays for two to three people.

1 Yupo 1-li, Bongpyeong-myeon, Pyeongchang-gun, Gangwon-do. ℡ 033/332-5533 (Korean only) or call the Korea Travel Phone at 033/1330 for assistance. www.irafting.co.kr (Korean only). Rafting daily 10am–4pm May–Oct. Take a taxi from the Jangpyeong Express Bus Terminal and it’ll take 5 min.

Herbnara Farm The country’s first herb farm, it opened in 1994. There are seven themed gardens on-site along with ponds and galleries. The farm’s restaurant, Birch House, offers meals made from the herbs grown right here. The best time of year to see the farm is between June and August and it takes about an hour to tour.

You can stay in the cozy condo-style accommodations as well. Doubles start at ₩80,000 for weekdays (₩100,000 Fri–Sat). All the facilities include private bathroom and a kitchen. E-mail jiin@herbnara.com for reservations.
Korean Botanical Garden  Created in 1999, this botanical garden is home to over 1,300 native plants. The gardens include the Indoor Exhibition Hall, Herb Garden, Cultivation Area, Ecosystem Garden, Singal Mountain Path, and Theme Garden. You’ll get a free packet of seeds when you buy your ticket and various native flowers are available for purchase (although you won’t be able to take them through Customs, it’s fun to look). Open only April 1 through October 31; the best time to visit is June through August, when the majority of flowers are in bloom.

Korean Botanical Garden

Samyang Daegwallyeong Ranch  A large green pasture on one of the plateaus in the area, it has been a meadow for dairy cows for centuries. Since it’s pretty high up, you can get a good view of the surrounding area and the sunrise over the East Sea beyond the peaks of Odaesan. It takes about 2 hours by car to tour around the entire ranch. The area is too large to explore entirely on foot, but the Daegwallyeong Trail (between the western and eastern parts of the province) is a nice trek, especially in the winter. You can also ride your bike around the ranch in about 5 to 6 hours. There is lodging for families and groups at the ranch, but you must make reservations in advance.

Sangwonsa (Sangwon Temple) ★ The actual origin of this temple, located 8km (5 miles) north of Woljeongsa, is unknown. Legend has it that it was built either in 643 (the 12th year of Shilla Queen Seon-deok) or in the 680s (during the reign of Shilla King Sin-Mun). Whatever the case, it was rebuilt in 705, during the fourth year of the reign of King Seong-deok. It was undisturbed until a destructive fire burned through the place in 1946. Only the original bell pavilion (and one of only three bells from the Shilla Dynasty) remained—the rest of the temple site was rebuilt in 1947. The oldest parts of the temple left today are the Dongjong (the bell), the Munsu Bosal (the child Buddha figure), and the Jungchang (written by seventh Joseon King Sejo).

Another legend involves King Sejo (again). He was visiting this temple, shortly after his encounter with the child Buddha, when he felt a cat tugging at his clothing. When he glanced down at the cat, he caught sight of a would-be assassin who was on the verge of making an attempt at his life and was able to stop the man. In gratitude, the king ordered a statue of a cat be made for the temple and ordered that no cats in Korea be killed from that point forward.
Wonju Bus Terminal, take bus no. 23 bound for Seongnam-li. The ride will take 70 min. From the Jinbu Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Sangwonsa, which runs about every hour (a 40-min. ride). By taxi, it should take 35 min.

Woljeongsa ★★★  A temple complex located in the forest valley east of Odaesan, it is made up of 60 small temples and eight hermitages. Established by Monk Jajang, it was destroyed by fire during the Korean War. The temple’s main hall was completely rebuilt in 1969 using wood from local fir trees. The headquarters of the fourth district of the Jogye sect, it leads most of the temples in the province.

The main front gate is on the side of the compound with the usual four gate guards. In front of the main hall is the nine-level octagonal pagoda dating back to the Goryeo Dynasty. Facing the pagoda is a Yakgwang Bodhisattva made of stone. The most recent additions in the early 1990s were the Preaching Buddha hall, a pavilion leading to the main hall, a bell pavilion, and a stone stele.

A Budo site and Sagoji for historic document storage are nearby. The Budo relic site is about a 15-minute walk from the temple on the way to Sangwonsa, just before crossing the Banya Bridge. There are 22 pagodas that contain the remains of monks who lived here. Sagoji is about an hour on foot from the temple toward Sangwonsa, near Yeonggamsa.

Admission includes both Sangwon and Woljeong temples. Mar–Oct daily 4am–8pm; Nov–Feb daily 4am–7pm. From the Jinbu Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Woljeongsa, which runs 12 times a day (a 15-min. ride). By taxi, it should take 15 min.

Yongpyong Ski Resort  This resort, whose name means the “land of snow,” sits at the foot of Balwangsan. It is considered one of the best slopes in the country because the mountain has naturally occurring slopes of varying inclines. Having hosted the 1999 Winter Asian Games, it’s good for professional skiing, but also has gentler slopes for beginners.

It takes 3 to 4 hours to hike up to the top of Balwangsan on foot, but only 20 minutes to get there via cable car. The peak is so high up that it’s almost impossible to see the resort from the top. Once you’re at the summit, there is a Korean restaurant, a Western-style restaurant, and a cafe. See Dragon Valley Hotel (p. 369) for accommodation information.

405-2 Byeongnae-li, Doam-myeon, Pyeongchang-gun, Gangwon-do. (☎) 033/332-7069 (Korean only). Admission W5,000 adults, W3,000 teens, W2,000 children, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Daily 9am–6pm. From the Jinbu Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Woljeongsa or Sangwonsa and get off at the Odaesan National Park Administrative Office. It is a 25-min. walk from there. By taxi, it should take 15 min.

WHERE TO STAY

There is only one upscale hotel in the area, and a couple of inns. However, there are plenty of minbak and a campsite near Woljeongsa. A larger campsite and more minbak are available at the entrance to Sogeumgang. A better option may be to overnight in Gangneung (only an hour’s drive away) and make your way to the mountains in the morning.

Also, the resorts and farms mentioned above offer accommodations (as noted).

Dragon Valley Hotel ★★★  Located in the Yongpyong Ski Resort, they have a wide range of accommodations to fit your budget. The hotel has both Western-style and ondol rooms available, but the Tower and Villa condominiums have only ondol rooms. The condo facilities have kitchens as well. The youth hostel has both ondol-style rooms and large bunk bed rooms, but it’s mainly designed for groups of schoolchildren traveling together and isn’t the Western-style “hostel.” The accommodations are great for groups and families, but not very economical for single travelers.

Kensington Flora Hotel (aka Hotel Odaesan) ★ Located at the entrance to Odaesan, this 17-story hotel has views of the surrounding mountains and natural scenery. With both ondol-style and Western rooms with beds, this is the only upscale hotel in the area. The rooms are nice, with good lighting and comfortable sofas. Ask for a room with a balcony, since not all of them have one. Discounts up to 50% are usual during the off season.

Phoenix Park ★★ A huge resort complex, Phoenix Park is like a small city in and of itself. It has hotels, Korean-style condominium facilities, a youth hostel, a ski resort, a golf course, a bank, a pharmacy, a bowling alley, a supermarket, swimming pools, and a huge cafeteria. It is located about 2 hours from Seoul, on the way to Odaesan. Other than the restaurants associated with the hotel and condo complex, there is also a food court with fast-food chains (Holly’s Coffee, Domino’s Pizza, and the like) and smaller Korean restaurants. The most popular times of the year are the summer and when the mountains are covered in powder, ready for hordes of skiers enjoying the slopes on winter weekends.

Hotel facilities have both ondol and standard rooms available. Condo facilities have combinations of bed and ondol rooms and kitchen facilities for cooking. The youth hostel has large rooms with bunk beds or ondol-style sleeping quarters for large groups. Not the most convenient for single travelers, it’s great for families or groups traveling together.

WHERE TO DINE

There are a number of restaurants near the minbak (some of them are a combination of both), about a 40-minute walk from Woljeongsa. One of the better restaurants between the entrance to the park and Jinbu is Odaesan Gagneun Gil ★★, 303-7 Ganpyeong-li, Jinbu-myeon, Pyeongchang-gun, Gangwon-do (① 033/333-9982), whose name means “On the Road to Odaesan.” The chefs here serve traditional Korean fare in a nice setting. The outside tables are in a flower garden, while the inside is decorated with paintings and Korean kites. You can get a bowl of kalguksu (handmade knife noodles) or sujebi (dough flake soup) for Ｙ6,000.
At the entrance to Woljeongsa is a cozy restaurant, Odaesan Sanchae, that specializes in wild vegetables grown in the mountains. Like all temple cuisine, the fare is strictly vegetarian and very affordable. Set meals go for ₩12,000 to ₩24,000.

A nice place at the entrance to the Yongyeong Ski Resort is Gohyang Iyagi, 348 Hoenggye 9-li, Doam-myeon, Pyeongchang-gun, Gangwon-do (☏ 033/335-5430), whose name roughly translates to “hometown story.” At this family-owned restaurant inside a lodgelike wooden building, the inside is decorated with photos of Seoraksan taken by the owner. One of the specialty dishes is a dolsot bap (stone-pot rice bowl) made with special fragrant herbs that grow only in Gangwon-do. The restaurant next door, Hoenggye, also specializes in the dish, as well as the osam bulgogi, a special marinated sliced beef dish.

Sigol Bapsang, 131-4 Nodong-li, Yongpyeong-myeon, Pyeongchang-gun, Gangwon-do (☏ 033/333-7724), which translates to something like “country dinner table,” is another good choice. The sigol bapsang jeongshik (country-style traditional set meal) is ₩30,000, but you can get the local gondre bap (a meal with steamed rice made with a local thistle and special seasoning) for just ₩7,000. Unfortunately, there are no bus stops near here, but it’s about 10 minutes by taxi (costing about ₩7,000) to the restaurant from the Jinbu Bus Terminal.

4 CHUNCHEON

The capital of Gangwon-do, the city lies in the northwestern part of the county in a basin formed by the Soyang and Han rivers. Called the “Lake City,” Chuncheon serves as the gateway to the northeastern corner of South Korea. The area was first occupied by tribal people about 1,000 years ago. It had several names before it got its present name, Chuncheon, in 1418. An important city even during the Shilla Dynasty, it served as one of the fortress cities, to protect Seoul in the 17th century. It has been the capital of the province since 1896. Like in many of the cities in the area, most of the infrastructure was destroyed during the Korean War, but it has been rebuilt since.

The city serves as the center for the agricultural products of surrounding communities. The main products in the area are soybeans and rice, but the area is known for its dak galbi (a spicy chicken dish cooked with vegetables).

The city hosts the annual Chuncheon Puppet Festival as well as the Chuncheon Mime Festival.

Although it has grown into a sprawling city in the past couple of decades, it has maintained the sleepiness of a small town. The older downtown section has remained compact, although it has become more modernized. It has seen a huge growth in domestic visitors ever since it was featured in the popular South Korean television drama Winter Sonata.

ESSENTIALS

GETTING THERE  Chuncheon is located at the end of the Gyeongchun Rail Line, which connects the city to Cheongnyangni Station in Seoul (which you can access via Seoul subway, line 1). Trains run every hour and take about 1 hour and 50 minutes.
EXPLORING CHUNCHEON
Cheongpyeongsa ★★★ Finds Getting to this temple is part of the fun, since the only way to access it is by water. First built in 973, during the reign of Goryeo King Gwang-Jong, parts of the temple were lost during the Korean War. The “revolving” door, which symbolizes the transmigration of souls, and the Geukrakbojeon remain today. Inside the temple is Jinrak-gong, the oldest garden from the Goryeo Dynasty.

There is a legend associated with the temple. It involves a young man who loved a princess. He was killed and was reincarnated as a snake, which stuck itself to the princess and would not leave her. The princess came to the temple to pray to make the snake let go. After holding a ceremony, the snake finally left and she had the three-level pagoda built here above the Guseong Waterfall before returning to her kingdom. The pagoda, which still stands today, is called the Gongju Pagoda (gongju means “princess” in Korean).

To get to the temple, you must catch a short boat ride (accessible from the top of Soyang Dam). Once you get off the boat, you pay an entrance fee to the island and the small Guseong Waterfall, which is on the scenic path on the way to the temple. Then, you'll have to pay another admission fee at the entrance to the temple.

Located just 1.5km (1 mile) from downtown, it is a popular leisure destination for the city’s residents. Several Iron and Bronze Age relics were unearthed here, as well as an ancient burial ground and living quarters. The wide bike and walking path are great for a leisurely ride or stroll. Namiseom (Nami Island) ★  This islet was formed when the Cheongpyeong Dam was built and a lake was formed. A small piece of land in the shape of a half moon, it houses the grave of General Nami, who led a great victory against the rebels in the 13th year of the reign of Joseon King Sejo. Well known for its beautiful tree-lined lanes, it is a popular weekend getaway for the people of Seoul. There are no telephone poles on the island, since all electric wires were run underground to preserve its natural beauty. There is a theme park and sports center in the middle of the island with swimming pools, facilities for watersports, a merry-go-round, a shooting range, and a roller-skating rink. There is also a campsite and resort facilities for overnight visitors. The most beautiful times of the year are May, July, August, and October, which are also the most popular.

Soyang-ho (Lake Soyang) and Soyang Dam  Built in 1973, the Soyang Dam is the largest rock-filled dam in Asia. Although it used to be a beautiful area for boating, the lowered water level, recent floods, and erosion have caused the surrounding hills to lose much of their former beauty. The valleys around the lake are well known for smelt fishing in the winter.

WHERE TO STAY
Growing into a popular weekend trip for those escaping the insanities of Seoul, the city has increasingly more sleeping options to fits all budgets. Lower-priced yeogwan are generally concentrated around the intercity bus terminal. There is also no shortage of love motels and higher-end and tourist-class hotels, condos, and resorts.

Expensive

Ladena Resort  Because this place is generally run on a membership basis, the rates are expensive for nonmembers, but there are very nice, upscale Korean condo-style facilities. The resort complex is located next to the dock leading to Jung-do. The eight-story building has a variety of room options with one common theme—everything in them is white. The Korean buffet restaurant is open only on weekends and holidays.

Moderate

Chuncheon Sejong Tourist Hotel  One of the best values in the city, the oldest hotel in town is set in a picturesque location at the foot of Bonguisan. The hotel has great amenities for the price and even an outside garden area. It is centrally located near both the train and the bus stations. The rooms are spacious and clean with nice views of the surrounding area.

Chuncheon Tourist Hotel  Centrally located, this hotel is just 5 minutes away from the train station. It has comfortable and clean rooms with delightful rain shower heads. There are highly polished hardwood floors and old-fashioned paper-screen windows in the ondol rooms (regular Western-style beds are also available). Unfortunately, there is no sign in English, but you can find it located behind the Gukmin Bank, not far from Myeong-dong and city hall. Just look for the beige four-story building with a sign that reads HOTEL in white letters on a blue background.

Gangchon LG Resort ★★ This ski resort offers over 100 ski slopes and a condominium complex with 222 rooms. The easiest way to get here from Seoul is to take a train to nearby Gangchon Station. Free shuttle buses are available outside the train station every 20 minutes. You can also take a bus from the Dong Seoul Station or the Sangbong Station. Open all year, the popular ski season is from mid-December to mid-March.

The regular condos have two bedrooms, which have small, but serviceable, beds. Bathrooms have bathtubs and flexible shower heads but no shower curtains. The kitchens include dining tables and the living rooms have a sofa and TV.

Inexpensive

Gangchon Youth Hostel Although it’s often booked by school groups on field trips, it is one of the least expensive places to stay in the area. Especially good for solo travelers on a budget, the hostel offers a surprisingly large array of amenities, including a library and sports facilities.

WHERE TO DINE

As I’ve mentioned earlier, Chuncheon is the home of dak galbi, a dish made with chunks of chicken, garlic, vegetables (onions, sesame leaves, cabbage, sweet potato), and rice cake sticks all mixed with a dollop of spicy gochujang (chile paste) and cooked on a tabletop griddle. There is even a street behind Chuncheon’s Myeong-dong street called Dakgalbi Golmok (Dakgalbi Alley) because of all the restaurants there. You can't really go wrong with any of the restaurants in the area, and the prices are all comparable, ranging from W16,000 to W20,000 for a meal for two.

The other dish that the city is famous for is mak guksu, which is sometimes cooked with the leftovers from the dak galbi.

Expensive

Petersburg ★ RUSSIAN The only Russian restaurant in Chuncheon (and one of just a few in the entire country) is worth checking out. The interior is decorated in the old Russian style, with a plethora of elaborate paintings, a fireplace, and high ceilings. And, happily, the food is as nice as the ambience. Try the lobster or the galbi steak dinner, and you won’t be sorry. On top of that, you’ll get wonderful service from the English-speaking staff and forget you’re in the middle of South Korea. If you get a window seat, you’ll get nice views of the river below.

Hongcheon Wonjo Hwalogui ★★★ Value KOREAN PORK  Traveling on interstate 55 south from Chuncheon is the small town of Hongcheon off of highway 44 and a cropping of restaurants specializing in hwalogui, samygypsal (three-color sliced pork belly), that has been coated in spicy gochujang. This is the restaurant that started it all. They also have galbi marinated with ginseng, but why not try the house specialty with an order of mak goksu (spicy mixed noodles) to top it all off.

Myeong-dong’s Number 1 Dakgalbi ★★ KOREAN CHICKEN  Another restaurant known for Chuncheon’s two famous dishes, dak galbi and mak guksu. It is one of the many restaurants located in Dakgalbi Alley. Two orders of dak galbi easily feed three people.

131-9 Joyang-dong, Chuncheon-si. ☎️ 033/256-6448. Entrees starting from W8,000. MC, V. Daily 10am–10pm.

Inexpensive

Shigol Makguksu ★ KOREAN NOODLES  Located in front of the Soyang Bridge, this restaurant has been serving the local noodle dish for over 30 years. The prize-winning noodles are made from buckwheat flour and are delicious. If you’re not in the mood, there are other things on the menu besides noodles (and I’ll concede that the dubu jeon-gol [tofu hot pot meal] is very good), but what else would you order in place whose name translates to “country-style rough noodles”? There is even a 10% discount to seniors over 65.

278-3 Yulmu-li, Sinbuk-eup, Chuncheon-si, Gangwon-do. ☎️ 033/241-5999. W5,000–W10,000. MC, V. Daily 10am–10pm, but closed every other Tues. Parking available.

SHOPPING

The most popular shopping area in Chuncheon is Myeong-dong Street. Originally called Joyang-dong Street, its name was changed to model Seoul’s most popular shopping district. Located in downtown, the district is packed with over 300 shops, including boutiques, restaurants, fast-food joints, nightclubs, and movie theaters. Other than the alleyways filled with shops, there is an underground shopping district. The traditional market, Jung-ang Shijang, also in the area, dates back to 1962. Unlike the hip fashions in the boutique shops, the open-air market caters more to middle-aged tastes and also has shops that sell hanbok, Korean traditional clothes.

To get to the area from the bus terminal, take bus no. 7, 9, 64, or 64-2. From Chuncheon Train Station, take city bus no. 63, and from Namchuncheon Station, take bus no. 1, 32, 32-1, 35, or 67.
5 THE REST OF GANGWON-DO

Gangwon-do and its North Korean counterpart, Kangwon, are together called the Gwandong region. The area west of Taebaeksan is called Yeongseo, while the part east of the mountains is called Yeongdong. Other than the main cities highlighted earlier, other major cities in the province include Donghae and Wonju, which are discussed below.

Now that the government has removed most of the barbed wire along its coasts, its beaches have lost some of their hard military edge. There has been a strong push for further development in the region, so be sure to visit before the entire province is ruined by the industrial signs of “progress.”

ESSENTIALS

Getting There  Other than the airport at Yangyang, the only airport in the province is Wonju Airport (WJU), 366, Toegye-dong, Chuncheon-si (033/344-3311). Located between Wonju and Hoengseong, it has one flight daily to and from Jeju-do and one from Seoul, served by Korean Airlines. City bus no. 62 goes from the airport to the Hoengseong Intercity Bus Terminal, as well as the train station and Wonju Bus Terminal. The bus stop is located to the right after you come out of the airport.

Bus lines to Gangwon-do start from Seoul’s Express Bus Terminal, 19-3 Banpodaegyo-ro, Seocho-gu (02/535-4151), or the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal, 546-1 Guigyero, Seongdong-gu (02/446-8000), for locales in the northern part of the province.

The Jung-ang Rail Line cuts across the southwestern corner of the province running through Wonju on its way down to Busan. Two rail lines cut through the Taebaek Mountains to the coast. The older, more scenic route is the Yeongdong Line that runs south. It starts in Yeongju (in Gyeongsangbuk-do) and goes via Cheolam to Gangneung. The Taebaek Line branches off from Jecheon (in Chungcheongbuk-do) and goes through Yeongwol, meeting the Yeongdong line at Baeksan. The short Gyeongchun Line connects Chuncheon to Cheongnyangni and the Jung-ang Line.

Driving through the province, the two expressways are the 50 that runs from Seoul through Wonju to Gangneung, connecting to the short 65 expressway that goes north to Hyeonnam and south to Donghae. The Jung-ang Expressway (road 55) starts from Chuncheon and runs through Wonju all the way south down to Busan.

Getting Around  Intercity buses connect cities and small towns to each other, but local buses run less frequently through much of the province. If visiting far-flung sites, plan ahead and check the time of your return bus so that you’re not stranded in some remote mountain locale at the end of the day. Taxis are available outside of all bus and train stations and airports, but you’ll pay a bit more than you would in Seoul or the larger cities, since the drivers know that sometimes you don’t have a choice but to use their services. Negotiate your price with the driver before heading off in any direction.

Visitor Information  The Gangwon-do Tourist Information Office (033/244-0088) provides booths and information centers in front of most major transportation hubs and main tourist attractions. Most of them are staffed by helpful, English-speaking guides. Be sure to get maps and local bus schedules. You can also dial the Korea Travel Phone (1330) anywhere in the country for travel assistance in English.
The city of Donghae was created in 1980 by consolidating the two small port towns of Mukho and Bukpyeong, as well as surrounding residential and industrial areas. It runs along the coast of the East Sea and includes the country’s largest beach, Mangsang Beach, and serves as a major transportation port for the area. Though it’s not the prettiest city, its best feature is that it’s so close to the ocean.

The Donghae Station (☎️ 033/521-7788) is located on the Yeongdong Rail Line and connects the city to Dongdaegu, Yeongju, Cheongnyangni, Busan, and Daejeon. Additional train service is added during the popular summer months from mid-July to August. Express buses run from Seoul’s Gangnam express bus station 24 times a day (three additional buses on weekends) from 6:40am to midnight and take about 4 hours. From the Dong Seoul Station, buses run only about nine times a day from 7:50am to 7:30pm (one extra run on weekends, until 11:20pm) and also take 4 hours. Bus service is also available to and from Chuncheon, Wonju, Sokcho, Busan, Daeju, Taebaek, Gangneung, Samcheok, Ulsan, and Uljin. You can catch a ferry to Ulleung-do from here.

The tourist information center (☎️ 033/533-3011; daily 9am–6pm) is just in front of the entrance to Cheon-gok Donggul.

Exploring Donghae

Cheon-gok Donggul (Cheon-gok Cave) The most famous attraction in the city, this cave is unusual in that it is located within walking distance from the downtown area. Discovered in 1991, it is well lit and contains some unusual calcified formations. Only about 700m (2,297 ft.) of this place, about 4 to 5 million years old, is open to the public.

1004 Cheongok-dong, Donghae-si, Gangwon-do. ☎️ 033/532-7303. Daily 8:30am–6:30pm, except in the winter, when it closes at 5pm. It’s a short walk from downtown Donghae.

Chuam Beach ★ Also called Haegeumgang Beach, this sandy beach is surrounded by beautiful scenery created by the rocky cliffs that surround it. The quiet and shallow waters attract vacationing families, especially in the summer months.

This large, sandy beach has clean and shallow waters ideal for families with children. The most popular time of the year is summer, from July to August. There are plenty of hwae restaurants, pubs, inns, and a small amusement park. There are shower rooms, volleyball courts, campgrounds, parking facilities, and even a post office nearby.

Mureung Gyegok (Valley) ★★  Surrounded by Dutasan and Cheongoksan, legend has it that this lovely valley west of the city is where fairies strolled. Given its idyllic beauty, it’s easy to see why. Just a short way from the park’s entrance, there is a large boulder with a poem from the 1570s engraved on it in Hanja (Chinese characters).

A little bit farther you will reach Samhwasa (aka Mureung Dowon; ☏ 033/534-7676), the main temple of the area. Surrounded by granite peaks, you can do a temple stay focused on slow living. It was founded by Monk Jajang during the reign of Shilla Queen Seon-deok. A thousand-year-old temple, it was completely destroyed by the Japanese army in 1907. It was rebuilt the following year, but moved to its current location in 1977. The Vairocana Buddha statue and the trilevel pagoda from the Shilla period survived and were moved intact.

8-tong, Samhwa-dong, Donghae-si, Gangwon-do. ☏ 033/534-7306. Admission to the valley is free, but entry to Samhwasa is W1,000 adults, W700 teens, W500 children. From the Donghae Express Bus Terminal, take bus no. 12-1, 12-2, 12-3, 12-4, or 12-5 and get off at Mureung Gyegok.

SAMCHEOK

Samcheok city and county is the southernmost of Gangwon-do’s coastal areas. It is made up of a loose conglomeration of fishing villages, harbor districts, and a business center. The harbor here is being rapidly overshadowed by Donghae to the north. Express buses run from Seoul and Dong Seoul terminals. Intercity buses run to and from Donghae, Gangneung, Taebaek, and Uljin. The tourist information booth (☏ 033/575-1330; Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm, Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm) is located just to the side of the Samcheok Express Bus Terminal (☏ 033/573-9444). There is also a tourist info center at the Samcheok Municipal Museum.

There are some nice beaches in the area, all reachable by local bus. Samcheok Beach is the largest swimming beach. It has shallow waters and convenient facilities, and a beachside resort. Maebang Beach is more scenic and popular with families due to its shallow, clean waters. Farther south is Yonghwa Beach and nearby Jangho Beach, which is a good place to get fresh seafood.

Exploring Samcheok

Daegumgul (Cave) ★★  Although believed to be as old as nearby Hwanseon-gul, Daegumgul wasn’t discovered until the early 21st century and not opened to the public until 2007. What is unusual about the cave is the amount of water that flows within it creating waterfalls and an underground lake. A 610m-long (6,000-ft.) monorail takes you into the cave, and then you’ll see various stalactites creating pillars, shields, and smaller caverns. Only 40 people are allowed in at a time and the entire tour takes about 90 minutes.
San 25 Dae-i-li, Singi-myeon, Samcheok-si. ☎ 033/541-9266 (Korean only). Admission ₩12,000 adults, ₩8,500 teens, ₩6,000 children. Entry every 30 min. 8:30am–5pm (18 times daily). Parking ₩1,000 for cars.

Haeshindang Park ★ Samcheok is home to the only place in the area where the Korean phallic tradition continues. Indeed, large-scale penis sculptures are the big draw here. Originally created to appease the soul of a dead virgin, there are over 50 phallic statues in this surprisingly picturesque park, located along the shore. Called the Sinnam Village of Wondukeup, the park has the Haeshindang shrine and a pretty extensive Fishery Village Tradition Exhibition Center. This folk museum shows some interesting shamanistic rituals observed by traditional fishermen in order to get a good catch. Unfortunately, the displays lack English explanations, but they are still fun to look at nevertheless. The park complex is about 20km (12 miles) south of Samcheok.

167-8 Seongnam-dong, Samcheok-si, Gangwon-do. ☎ 033/570-3568 (for the Fishery Village Tradition Exhibition Center). Free admission to park; admission to exhibition center ₩3,000 adults, ₩2,000 teens, ₩1,500 children. Mar–Oct Tues–Sun 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb Tues–Sun 9am–5pm. From the Samcheok Express Bus Terminal, take a bus to Sinnam. The ride takes just under an hour.

Hwanseon-gul (Cave) ★★ The longest limestone cave in the country, Hwanseongul is located in the hills west of town. There are a number of waterfalls and pools within the cave, as well as a variety of rock formations, which have been given names like the “royal seat.” It also contains a number of stalactites and stalagmites. It’s about a 30-minute, uphill walk from the ticket booth to the cave’s entrance. It’s a lovely place to visit on a hot summer day, as the temperature inside the cave remains a constant 50°F to 59°F (10°C–15°C). The cave is part of Dae-i-li County Park.

San 117 Dae-i-li, Singi-myeon, Samcheok-si. ☎ 033/541-9266 (Korean only). Admission ₩4,500 adults, ₩3,500 teens, ₩2,500 children. Mar–Oct daily 8am–5pm; Nov–Feb daily 8:30am–5:30pm. Parking ₩2,000 for cars.

Jukseoru Pavilion Jukseoru, whose name means “bamboo west pavilion,” is the most important historical site in the city. Originally constructed in 1275, it served as an entertainment center for scholars and royalty during the Goryeo Dynasty. The pavilion was rebuilt in 1403, and that structure still stands today. Sitting on the edge of a cliff overlooking the stream, Oship-cheon, you get a fantastic view of the sunset. There is a small bamboo forest, a garden, and a tiny folk museum with artifacts (mostly pottery) from the area.

9-3 Seongnae-dong, Samcheok-si. ☎ 033/570-3670. Free admission. Daily 9am–7pm. From the Samcheok Express Bus Terminal, take a right at the intersection. Walk straight for 2 blocks past the Samcheok Medical Center to the alley next to it. It should take 5–7 min. on foot.

Where to Stay

Although most people don’t overnight in Samcheok, you can find a handful of motels around the intercity bus terminal. Most accommodations around here are cheap and not fancy, but serviceable. One of them is the Crown Motel, 94-8 Namyang-dong, Samcheok-si (☎ 033/573-8831), which has standard rooms for ₩30,000 to ₩40,000.

Where to Dine

Since Samcheok is a coastal town, it’s known for its hwae and gul (oysters). There are several places to get good seafood in the area. At Haedoji Hwaetjib, 1-beonji, Jeongha-dong, Samcheok-si (☎ 033/574-1575 or 574-7785), you can get your fill of fresh fish, from ₩10,000 for ice hwae to up to ₩100,000 for a huge platter to share with your friends. Open daily 10am to 10pm, it’s located on the bottom floor of the Viking building (look for white Korean letters on a dark blue background).

Another nice place to enjoy the local raw fish is Bada Hwae, 41 Jeongha-dong, Samcheok-si (☏ 033/574-3543), which has mixed fish platters you can share from ₩30,000 to ₩50,000. They’re open daily 7:30am to 10pm, except holidays and every second Monday.

For oysters, try the Gwaneum Gul Shikdang (whose name means “oyster restaurant”), 2-bang, Daei-li, Singi-myeon, Samcheok-si (☏ 033/541-1624). They have spicy seafood hot pots for ₩20,000 and even a roasted chicken meal for ₩30,000.

For a more economical oyster meal, head over to Gulpajib, 203 Daei-li, Shingi-myeon, Samcheok-si, where oyster flatcakes, mixed rice bowls, and potato flatcakes will cost you only ₩3,000 to ₩5,000.

If you’re hungry for a big Korean meal, head over to Sae-eunhwa, 1-6 Seungnae-dong, Samcheok-si (☏ 033/573-7969), which is located right in front of the Samcheok Medical Center. Open daily from 10am to 10pm, the place is popular with Japanese tourists. The best deal is the yonsama (which means Japanese royalty) meal for ₩10,000, which includes a generous variety of banchan (side dishes). If you’re not that hungry but want to cool off in the summer, you can get a bowl of naengmyeon for only ₩5,000.

Also, the road up to Hwanseon Cave is lined with casual restaurants, all of which have fresh local offerings with comparable prices.

WONJU

The most populous city in the province, Wonju is located near the border of Gangwon-do and Gyeonggi-do. During the United Shilla period, the city was one of five secondary capitals. It served as the provincial capital from 1394 until the capital was moved to Chuncheon after the Korean War. Still an agricultural center, it has maintained more ties to Seoul than cities in its own province. Home to a large South Korean army base, Wonju also has several universities, including a satellite campus for Yonsei University.

The small Wonju Airport (WJU), 106 Gokgyo-li, Hoengseong-eup, Hoengseong-gun, Gangwon-do (☏ 033/340-8310), is located between Wonju and Hoengseong and has one to two flights daily from Seoul, served by Korean Airlines (☏ 033/345-2041). Despite its name, the airport is much closer to Hoengseong than Wonju. City bus no. 62 goes from the airport to the Hoengseong Intercity Bus Terminal, as well as the train station and Wonju Bus Terminal. The bus stop is located to the right after you come out of the airport.

Wonju Station (☏ 033/742-6072) is one of the major stops on the Jung-ang Rail Line, and several trains arrive and leave the station in both directions. Trains from Seoul’s Cheongnyangni Station run nine times daily, costing around ₩7,600.

Express bus service runs from Seoul’s Gangnam Station to Wonju Express Bus Terminal (☏ 033/747-4181) about every 10 to 15 minutes daily from 6am to 9pm. The 90-minute ride costs ₩5,900 to ₩8,600. From the Dong Seoul Bus Terminal, daily buses run every hour 8:40am to 5:30pm and cost ₩5,700. From the Sangbong Intercity Bus Station, express buses run 14 times daily 6am to 4:50pm. The almost-3-hour ride costs ₩6,500. Regular nonstop buses (which actually take less time than the express buses that make stops) from Sangbong run 7am to 8pm 14 times daily and cost ₩6,500. Wonju has another bus terminal; the regular Wonju Bus Terminal is located toward the northern end of town, just a couple of kilometers from the downtown area. Bus no. 90 goes from the regular bus terminal to the express bus terminal. Fare for local buses is currently ₩1,100.
The city’s old business district is located in the area between the train station and Wonju Ganyeong Sajeok Park. The center of town is where the Central Market is located. An underground shopping district also lies below the main intersection. Wonju is best known as the gateway city to Chiaksan National Park.

Chiaksan National Park

Chiaksan is located in the Charyeong Mountain ranges and is one of the range’s highest peaks. Much smaller and less dramatic than Seoraksan or Odaesan, Chiaksan does have its own charms. Within a forested nature preserve on its slopes, the remains of mountain fortresses belie its past as a defensive stronghold. At the height of its Buddhist fervor, there were 76 temples in the area, but only 8 of them remain today. From the top, you can see Taebaeksan to the east and Sobaeksan to the south.

The name of this park, designated a national park in 1984, means “Pheasant Peak Mountain.” The name was changed from Jeokaksan to Chiaksan because of a myth about a man who saved a pheasant from being eaten by a snake. Later when the man was looking for a place to sleep, a woman let him into her house. In the middle of the night, she turned into a serpent and accused him of having killed her husband. She said that if she heard the bell of Sangwon Temple ring three times before sunrise, she would let him go—otherwise, she would kill him in revenge. By some miracle, the bell did ring three times, and his life was saved. When the man reached the temple, he found the pheasant dead by the bell. It had rung the bell with its head to save his life and sacrificed its own in return.

From in front of Wonju Station, take bus no. 41 bound for Guryongsa, no. 21 bound for Geumdae-li or Seongnam-li, or no. 82 headed for Hwang-gol. Get off at the entrance to Chiaksan. Admission to the park is ₩1,600 adults, ₩600 teens, ₩300 children. Entrance to the Guryong area (including fees for cultural assets) is ₩3,200 adults, ₩1,300 teens, ₩700 children.

The mountain range has a long ridge that runs from north to south and acts as the main hiking course. Most of the trails start at the main entrance in the Guryong district and follow short routes centered on the highest peak, Birobong. It’s best to pack a meal and bring water since there are no restaurants located inside the park.

Gukhyangsa (Gukhyang Temple) Although it’s a small temple, its view of the forests nearby attracts many visitors. The location of the “festival of defense of the fatherland,” it was the place where the second daughter of Joseon King Jeongjong, Princess Huihu, recovered from a seemingly incurable lung disease. At the suggestion of the doctors, she was sent to recover in Chiaksan. The princess began a 100-day prayer, during which she dreamed about an old man with long white hair who told her that he would cure her. She continued to pray and at the end of the days she was cured. As a token of appreciation, the king had the temple built.

Guryongsa (Guryong Temple) Located on the north side of Birobong, this temple was built by Monk Uisangsansa in the eighth year of the reign of Shilla King Munmu. It got its name, which means “Nine Dragon Temple,” because of a legend that nine dragons lived at the pond, Guryong-ho, which used to be where the main building is now. The name was later changed during the Joseon Dynasty to “Turtle Dragon...
Temple,” but the pronunciation is the same. It takes about an hour on foot from the entrance of the park to the temple. Trees from the thick pine forest that surrounds the temple were used to build the royal palace during the Joseon Dynasty. It is one of the oldest temples in the country.

As you climb up past the temple, you’ll see Guryong Waterfall, the Guryong Pond, Nymph Bath, and the Seryeo Waterfall.

Ipseoksa (Ipseok Temple)  Ipseoksa is where Uisangdaesa dug a cave and came to meditate. It is a small temple, located in a valley on the way to Hwang-gol from Chiaksan. It is home to the Mae Yeoran Jwasang (a seated Buddha statue). The pagoda in the temple was built by King Taegjong, who had come to the temple looking for his master, but was unable to see him. The king built the pagoda, thinking of his master, Ungok Won Cheonseok. Right underneath Ipseoksa is the Ipsook-dae, a large rectangular stone sitting up on a cliff.

Free admission. Daily 24 hr. From Wonju, take bus no. 82 (which runs 10 times daily 6am–8:20pm) to Hwang-gol and Ipseoksa.

Sangwonsa  Located at the foot of Namdae-bong (peak) of Chiaksan (don’t confuse it with the one in Odaesan by the same name), it is one of the highest temples in the country. The walls of the temple have a mural depicting the story of a man whose life was saved by a pheasant (for the full story, see this section’s introduction, above). Hiking up the mountain from the Seongnam-ni entrance, it would take 2 to 2½ hours to reach it. There are three rare cinnamon trees growing from the rocks in front of the temple.

1061, Seongnam-li, Shillim-myeon, Wonju-si, Gangwon-do. 070/8621-3739 or 011/377-2926 (Korean only). Free admission. Daily 24 hr. Take the bus to Yeongwonsa (see below) and hike.

Yeongwonsa  Originally built by Uisangdaesa in the 16th year of Shilla King Munmu, it was closed shortly afterward and remained so until Monk Kim Gyeongjun reopened it in 1964. Unfortunately, no relics from the past remain today.

North of the temple is what remains of the Yeongwonsanseong (fortress), which was built to defend the lands from outside invaders. This was a point of strategic importance during the Imjin Waeran and the Korean War.

Where to Stay

For lower-priced sleeping options, many yeogwan are in the area north of the bus terminal. A few nicer and quieter yeogwan are also located around the main post office. There are also some motels near the central market, including the Wonju Tourist Hotel, 94-8 Namyang-dong, Samcheok-si (033/743-1241; www.wjhotel.co.kr), which has rooms going for W72,000 for doubles or singles, with a 20% discount if you book online. Suites start at W96,000. With both Western-style and ondol rooms, the 10% VAT and service charge are included in the price.

There are plenty of inns and minbak around Chiaksan—most are located in the Guryong district, but there are a few in the Shillim area as well. The most upscale accommodation in the area is the Koresco Condominium, 539-1 Owon-li, Hoengseong-gun, Gangwon-do (033/343-8730).
Where to Dine

Although there are no famous dishes from Wonju, it is a good place to get sanchae bibimbap, since it’s so close to Chiaksan. A good place that specializes in the rice dish is Unchae in Haenggu-dong (☎ 033/747-1993).

Spicy-seafood lovers will enjoy the Alaskan pollack at Hwangtae Haejang-gook ★★, 865, Dangye-dong, Wonju-si (☎ 033/745-7722), which specializes in all things hwangtae, running ₩5,000 to ₩25,000 for a meal.

For an unusual experience try the mud roasted duck at the Hayan Jib Garden (White House Garden), 556-3 Botong-li, Jijeong-myeon, Wonju-si (☎ 033/732-4882). Supposedly very healthy for you, the duck is cooked for 2½ hours with medicinal herbs and sweet rice. Be sure to call ahead since it takes them so long to prepare the tender bird. Another place that specializes in duck is Jandibat, Maeji-li, Heungeop-myeon, Wonju-si (☎ 033/762-4480), whose name means “grassy field.”

Most of the restaurants around Chiaksan can be found in the Guryongsa district.

JEONGSEON

Jeongseon is the name of both a small town and a county, and is famous for the origin of the classic folk song “Arirang.” First sung as a lament for the former king and homeland as the country was moving from the Goryeo Dynasty to the Joseon Period, the song became very popular during the Korean War, when families were split up, never to see each other again. Declared an intangible cultural asset in 1971, it is the Korean version of the blues, and there are more than 1,500 lyrical variations. The Jeongseon Arirang Festival happens annually in the fall, but free performances are held at the Jeongseon Arirang Performance Hall from mid-April to late November. If you time it right, visit the Jeongseon O-il Jang (5-Day Fair) ★★★, which is held on the 2nd, 7th, 12th, 17th, 22nd, and 27th day of every month. What started as a 5-day market has grown into a local event, with folk performers, artisans, and the usual vendors selling dried herbs and products cultivated from the nearby mountains.

Buses run from the DongSeoul Bus Terminal 13 times a day, from 7am to 6pm, and take about 3½ hours. Two buses run daily from Chuncheon, 6 from Wonju, and 11 from Gangneung. Located on the Taebaek Rail Line, Mugunghwa trains run from Seoul’s Cheongnyangni Station, from Wonju, Jecheon, Yeongwol, and Jeungsan. On the Jeongseon line, you can catch trains from Jeungsan, Pyeryegok, Seonpyeong, Jeongseon, Najin, and Auraji. The website for Jeongseon is www.ariaritour.com.

The Jeongseon area has gotten famous for white-water rafting, but most of Jeongseon’s attractions are concentrated in the Hwaam Tourist Area, which includes the pretty river valley of Sogeumgang (Little Diamond Mountain). It includes 12 waterfalls, fun-shaped rock formations, and nice scenery.

Nearby in Gurim Bawi forest is the Hwaam Yaksu (Mineral Spring Water), which emerges from the rocks there. Full of iron, calcium, fluoride, and other minerals, the waters are supposed to help cure minor ailments like eye infections, stomachaches, and skin problems. The water is naturally carbonated and has a bit of a sour and sweet taste.

One of the most popular sites is Hwaam Dong-gul ★, a natural limestone cave. The caverns were discovered between 1922 and 1945 during gold-mining operations. The abandoned mine has been redeveloped into exhibits on mining, a history of the cave, and ore and geological processes. There are artificial lights that highlight the stalactite and stalagmite formations. There are a small folk museum and a replica of a mining camp.
below the cave’s entrance. Entrance to the cave is W5,000 for adults, W3,500 teens, W2,000 children with additional fees to ride the monorail.

Located on the road to Taebaek is the temple Jeongamsa, about 350m (1,148 ft.) down from the peak of Mahangjae, toward Gohan. The temple was founded by Monk Jajang in a.D. 636, during the fifth year of the reign of Shilla Queen Seon-deok. He built the Seoknamwon, the former shrine of Jeongamsa, by building a gold, silver, and Sumano pagoda 9 years later. The most interesting relic is the Sumano Pagoda, which stands on the mountainous slope above the temple. It is said that the Monk Jajang brought the stone on a ship from China. Unfortunately, there are no buses that run to Mahangjae. You’ll have to take a taxi from Gohan or Jeongseon.

For a different form of transportation, spend the afternoon biking on railroad tracks, specifically the Jeongseon Auraji Rail Bike (✆ 033/563-8787, Gujeol-li, Buk-myeon, Jeongseon-gun). For W18,000, you and a friend can pedal a two-person “rail bike” from Auraji to Gujeol-li, an easy 7.2km (4½-mile) ride. You get to rest your legs on the free train ride back. Four-person vehicles cost W26,000 and the rail bikes are available 9am to 6pm. From the Jeongseon Bus Terminal take a bus to Yeoryang (they run 21 times daily). From Yeoryang, take a local bus to Gujeol-li, where you’ll find the boarding platform (you can’t miss the Grasshopper Dream cafe, which is shaped like its namesake bug).

Where to Stay
The most upscale and fun place to sleep in the county is Gangwon Land Casino and Hotel ★★, San 1-139, Gohan-li, Gohan-eup, Jeongseon-gun (✆ 033/590-7700; fax 033/590-7330), which is closer to Taebaek than Jeongseon-si. Opened in 2000, it is the only casino in the whole country open to South Korean natives. The casino hotel has 199 rooms, while the adjacent large Gangwon Land Hotel has 676 rooms. The casino has 960 slot machines and over 100 tables, where you can play blackjack and other games. The hotel is part of the High 1 Resort Complex (✆ 02/1588-7789 or 033/590-7811; 1-139 Gohan-li, Gohan-eup, Jeongseon-gun; www.high1.co.kr), which has other accommodation options. The resort has steep slopes for skiing and snowboarding, an 18-hole golf course, and the usual luxury amenities like fitness centers and indoor swimming pools. Standard rooms start at W157,300 at the ski resort and W242,000 in the main hotel. Discounts of up to 50% are not unusual. There is a W5,000 admission fee for the casino. The shuttle bus from the Gohan Train Station takes about 10 minutes or you can get a cab from the Gohan Express Bus Terminal, a 10-minute ride that should cost about W5,000.

Lower-priced yeogwan and other accommodations can be found near the Jeongseon Train Station and Hwaam Cave. Standard rooms go for about W30,000.

Where to Dine
The specialty of the area is gondre rice, which people relied on during times of famine. Today it’s a popular local dish, made by boiling rice and gondre (a type of thistle that grows in the area) with perilla oil, sesame, and a spicy sauce. You can get it at Jeongwong Wangjiang (✆ 033/378-5100), in the small town of Yemi, which is on the way to Hambaeksan.

Another good restaurant in the area is Jeongseon-gol Hwanggibossam, 359-3, Bongyang 1-li, Jeongseon-eup, Jeongseon-gun (✆ 033/563-8114), located about 25 minutes from the Jeongseon Terminal (about 5 min. by taxi). The specialty is hwanggi bossam, a special sliced pork dish in which the pork is marinated with ginger, and served with cabbage leaves for you to wrap and eat. A small order is W15,000 and the larger order W20,000. Don’t miss the bossam kimchi (a special kind of kimchi made with chestnuts, pears, and pine nuts). The place is open daily, but the sign isn’t in English. Just look for a white sign with black and red writing.

If you’re in the mood for meat, one of the best (and largest) places in the county is Wonju Shikdang ★★, 330-7, Bongyang 1-li, Jeongseon-eup, Jeongseon-gun (☎ 033/563-0117), which is within walking distance from Jeongseon Terminal, in front of the county office. You can get bookgogi baekban (marinated sliced beef) for W10,000, or samgyupsal (sliced pork belly) for W8,000.
Jeju-do (Jeju Island)

Jeju-do is a volcanic island located 85km (53 miles) off the tip of the Korean peninsula. The name “Jeju” refers to the island (Jeju-do), the province (which includes nearby islands), and Jeju city (Jeju-si), which can make things a bit confusing for the casual visitor. South Korea’s largest island, Jeju-do was formed by an outpouring of lava about 2 million years ago, and 90% of its surface is covered by basalt. In the center of the island is Hallasan (Mt. Halla), the highest mountain in South Korea. The island and its lava tubes (cavelike formations formed when erupting lava cools) were designated a natural World Heritage site by UNESCO in June 2007. Indeed, Geomunoreum is regarded by some as the best lava tube system in the world. And not only do they give the island a unique natural beauty, but they provide insight into the history of our planet and its geological processes.

Jeju-do has been called many names in its long history, including the “Hawaii of Korea,” a name that I must admit is not completely deserved. Still, its tropical beauty attracts thousands of Korean newlyweds to honeymoon on the island, and in summer months you’ll find droves of them, usually tailed by hired photographers, filling hotel rooms and making the beaches something less than a peaceful getaway.

Jeju-do is a different kind of volcanic island. In fact, locals say that its three resources are wind, rocks, and women. The island’s beauties attract the largest group of tourists—Japanese businessmen who are looking to get away from their salary-man lives and enjoy some eye candy while they’re at it. And yet, the Jeju-do’s women are famous for more than their beauty. The most interesting women on the island are the haenyeo, the women divers who dive for seafood and seaweed. Although they’re a dying breed, their incredible skills (being able to dive to great depths without any scuba gear) are legendary throughout the country.

Although the island is now a vacation spot, it has a long and bleak history. In 1273, invading Mongols used the island as a training ground for their horses. It later became the site of a prison for those banished from the royal court, and subsequently a fort to protect the rest of the peninsula from Japanese pirates. What little the natives could produce in horses, tangerines, and abalone were taken as tribute taxes for the king.

The Korean War brought more trouble to the island as hundreds of refugees flocked here, taxing its already scarce natural resources. However, in the 1960s and 1970s, the island began its transformation into a tourist destination. The main road was widened, and transportation improved with increased arrival of boats and planes. This relatively recent modernization and influx of people has brought the island more into the mainstream. Yet signs of the island’s traditions remain, not only in the stone walls surrounding humble houses, but in the open and trusting personalities of the people who populate the island.

Today, Jeju-do is regarded as a tropical island paradise and ideal vacation destination. With its expansive beaches, rocky cliffs, and dramatic waterfalls, Jeju-do is a destination not to be missed.
ARRIVING

By Plane

Jeju International Airport (CJU; ☏ 064/797-2114 or 797-2525; jeju.airport.co.kr) is located about 4km (2½ miles) from Jeju City. The Jeju-do Tourist Association Tourist Information Center (☏ 064/742-6051) is on the first floor of the domestic terminal, in front of the arrival gates. There is also a Korean Tourism Organization (KTO) Information Center (☏ 064/742-0032) on the first floor of the international terminal, in front of the arrival gates. Both have helpful, English-speaking staff and provide maps, brochures, and hotel information.

Seventeen airlines fly in and out of Jeju-do, and three domestic airlines fly to Jeju from 13 cities, including Seoul’s Gimpo Airport (GMP). Airlines making regular flights include Korean Air (☏ 064/1588-2001; www.koreanair.com), Asiana Airlines, 2031, Yongdam 2-dong, Jeju-si (☏ 064/1588-8000; http://us.flyasiana.com), Jeju Air (☏ 070/1599-1500; www.jejuair.net), Dongbang Airlines (☏ 064/711-9834 or 5), and Buheung Airlines (☏ 064/747-9093 or 4). Jeju Air’s website contains limited information in English, so it’s best to call or e-mail them for reservations. Flights from Seoul arrive every 15 to 30 minutes, cost about ₩170,000 to ₩185,000, and take about an hour and 15 minutes. Flights from Busan’s Gimhae Airport (PUS) cost about ₩135,000 to ₩150,000.

International flights from Japan and China depart less frequently. Each week, there are six flights from Tokyo, four from Osaka, three from Hong Kong, and two from Beijing. Since about 94% of visitors to the island come by air, they are planning a long-term expansion of the airport to be completed in 2020. The first phase, which will expand landing and takeoff capacity, should be completed by the end of 2010.

By Ferry

You can travel to and from Jeju-do via passenger ship from various ports in South Korea. The Jeju city harbor is the only one with access to ports on the peninsula. There are three terminals; the first two are right next to each other and the third is about a kilometer down the road. Terminal 1 has boats to Busan, Incheon, and Mokpo. Terminal 2 has ferries to Wando and Yeosu, while the International Terminal 3 has service to Wando, Mokpo, and occasional trips to Japan.

The most popular way to arrive by boat is traveling overnight from Busan’s Domestic Terminal, with boats leaving around 7pm and arriving 11 hours later. There are two different lines and at least one of them departs every day except Sunday. I prefer the Seolbongho (Orient Star; ☏ 064/751-1901), which is newer and cleaner than the Cozy Island (☏ 064/751-0300), which runs Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at 7:30pm. The Seolbongho, run by the Dongyang Express Ferry Co. (☏ 051/751-1901), has service Wednesday through Friday at 6:30pm. A second-class room (for three) will set you back around ₩50,000, but it’s worth it if you plan on getting a good night’s rest. If you want to splurge, book a private VIP room for ₩220,000. Rates on the Cozy Island are a bit cheaper than those on the Seolbongho, but you get what you pay for. Call to check current rates. You can catch the return trip from the Jeju City Terminal 1 at 7:30pm for another 11 hours back to Busan.

From Incheon Ferry Terminal, the ferry leaves at 6pm and arrives about 15 hours later in Jeju-do. Boats run Monday through Saturday. The return trip to Incheon also starts at 6pm from Jeju-do. Fares start at around ￦36,000 for third class, but you may want to pay the extra fees to upgrade to second or first class.

You can also get a ferry from the Mokpo Ferry Terminal (☎ 061/240-6060). Service is available daily on the Pegasus, but there is no service Mondays on the New Sea World Express, and no Sunday service for the Car Ferry Rainbow. Weekday ferries leave twice a day (usually around 9am and 2pm) and weekend ferries once a day. The ride is just over 3 hours (unless you decide to take the Pegasus, which takes the scenic route and lasts about 5 ½ hr.) and starts around ￦14,000 for a third-class ticket.

Boats from the Yeosu Ferry Terminal (☎ 061/663-0117) are run by Namhae Express (☎ 061/665-3399) and run daily (with reduced service Sun–Mon). There are two ferries, one that starts at 6pm and one at 8am, running 6 ½ hours and 5 hours, respectively.

Service to and from Wando Ferry Terminal (☎ 061/554-4207) is available daily (though the car ferry doesn’t run Sun). The ferry from Wando, which starts at 7:30am, costs ￦24,000 for adults, ￦12,000 for children. Most rides last about 3 hours.

Other than destinations listed above, you can also travel to Udo, Sangchujado, and Hachujado from the Jeju Ferry Terminal.

With all of these ferries, you can just buy a ticket the day you leave, but book in advance if you’re traveling during the popular summer months or Chuseok. Of course, schedules are subject to change, especially during inclement weather.

GETTING INTO TOWN

The Airport Limousine Bus (☎ 064/713-7000) from Jeju Airport can be found outside gate 1 (turn left). The Limousine Bus no. 600 costs ￦3,500 to Jungmun and ￦4,700 to Seogwipo (half-price for children) and stops at all the major tourist hotels, ending at Seogwipo’s KAL Hotel. Service runs 6:20am until 9:50pm, every 15 minutes. Regular airport buses include numbers 100, 200, 300, and 500 (to Jeju City Hall) and are cheaper than the limousine bus, starting at ￦1,000.

If you’d like to rent a car, there is an Avis car rental (☎ 064/749-3773) on the first floor of the airport, right outside of the domestic flight exit. There is also a Geumho Rent-a-Car (☎ 064/743-8107) at the airport.

On average, a taxi from the airport to Seogwipo will cost approximately ￦30,000 and last just under an hour. Expect to pay 20% extra after midnight.

VISITOR INFORMATION

Jeju-do Tourist Association Information Center (☎ 064/742-6051; daily 6:30am–8pm) is located at the airport in front of the arrival gate on the first floor of the domestic terminal, where you can get free Internet access. You can find the KTO Tourist Info Center (☎ 064/742-0032; daily 6:30am–8pm) there as well.

There are also tourist information centers, all open daily, at the Jeju-si Ferry Terminal (☎ 064/758-7181; 6:30am–8pm), the Yongduam Rock (☎ 064/728-3918; 9am–8pm) parking lot, Jeju-si Intercity Bus Terminal (☎ 064/753-0353; 9am–8pm), Jeju-si Underground Mall (☎ 064/750-7595; 9am–6pm), Shin-Jeju (☎ 064/755-5959; 9am–6pm), Tap-dong Outdoor Performance Hall (☎ 064/751-8111; 9am–6pm), inside Jeju City Hall (☎ 064/710-3314; 9am–6pm), at the Seogwipo Bus Terminal.
Jeju-do isn’t as small as you might think. Most people book at least 3 days and 2 nights to get a general overview of the island, since most tourist locations are about an hour from Jeju City. Jeju-do is best explored by car or taxi, if you’re not on a strict budget. It’s also one of the few places in South Korea where I would recommend renting a car (although it’s still not the least expensive way to get around), since traffic is minimal and roads are easily marked. Easier and even cheaper than renting a car is to get a tour taxi for the day.

Buses are available and reliable, but are slower and require the exact fare, making it important to carry a pocketful of W1,000 bills and loose change wherever you go. There is no rail or subway system on the island.

BY CAR The island’s destinations are clearly marked in both English and Korean and some of the remote places are most easily explored by car. You can take your pick from among the following reputable agencies: Jeju Ok Rent a Car (☎ 064/743-4000; www.jejuokrent.co.kr), Jeju Rent a Car (☎ 064/742-3307), Geumho Rent a Car (☎ 064/743-8107), Avis Rent a Car (☎ 064/749-3773), and Jeju Rental Car Service Association (☎ 064/747-4301). There are several more rental-car agencies in Jeju-do, but those I’ve mentioned are all available at the airport. If you’re undecided about whether you want a car, you can rest easy. There’s generally no need to make advance reservations—there is a

Jeju Trolley Limousine Tour Bus

Don’t be fooled by the name, since this tour is neither a trolley nor a limousine, but rather a climate-controlled bus. Comfortable, nevertheless, this is a great way to get an overview of the island, especially if you’re on a tight schedule. There are two courses: one that tours the east side of the island and another that goes around the west side of the island, including Seogwipo. Both courses start between 8:30 and 9:30am from the island’s major hotels. The eastern course includes Seong-eup Folk Village, Manjang Cave, and Seopjikoji, a scenic peninsula where many movies have been filmed. The eastern course has an option to visit Elephant Land for an additional W12,000 (W9,000 for kids). The western course covers the O’Sulloc Tea Museum, the Soingook Theme Park, and Cheonjieon Waterfalls, with an option to ride the Seogwipo Ferry for an additional W16,500 (W9,000 for kids). Both courses end around 6pm and you can arrange to have them drop you off at the airport, if you wish. You must make reservations at least a day in advance by calling (☎ 064/763-8879). A 1-day pass costs W35,000 adults, W28,000 children, and 2-day passes are W55,000 adults, W44,000 children.
rental-car information desk when you arrive at the airport (on the first floor of the domestic terminal) and they usually have cars available. That said, I highly recommend reserving in advance if you’re visiting during the summer or during a national holiday.

Tip: If you’re staying at one of the resort hotels, it’s best for you to rent a car at the hotel’s rental office, since they usually offer 50% discounts to guests.

You have to be at least 21, have been driving for at least a year, and have both your International Driving Permit and your passport with you in order to rent a car. You can get free maps at either the car-rental company or the tourist information desk at the airport. All the rental-car companies have comparable prices (Avis is a little pricier but their employees speak better English), starting at W76,000 for a small compact like the Hyundai Avante, W117,000 for a midsized car like the Hyundai Sonata, and W250,000 for an SUV like the Hyundai Grandeur. The per-day rates get lower the longer you rent.

The maximum speed limit on Jeju highways is 80kmph (50 mph), but most roads are 50kmph to 60kmph (31–37 mph). As on the mainland, the roads have high-tech cameras ready to catch you speeding, so be careful.

BY TAXI Getting around by taxi is easier in Jeju-do than other parts of the country, since there is comparably little traffic (except a bit in the evenings). Tour taxis are popular among South Korean honeymooners, since they get a driver, tour guide, and photographer all in one. It may be a good option for you too if you don’t want to drive, but still want access to out-of-the-way scenic destinations (although most taxi drivers speak limited English, if at all). The good thing about Jeju-do’s taxis are that they are all the same price, with regular fares starting at W1,500 and going up W100 every 213m (1/8 mile). The night fare (midnight–4am) is 20% more. If you decide to use a tour taxi, it will cost about W80,000 to W120,000 per day. You can negotiate with the taxi driver to try to get a better rate.

BY BUS The bus system is reliable, though it’s neither the most convenient nor the fastest way to get around Jeju-do (especially if you have limited time on the island). The buses do travel to most tourist destinations, but some (like the Manjang Caves) will require an additional bit of walking or hiking on your part. Most bus routes radiate from terminals in Jeju City or Seogwipo, covering most of the island, with service every 20 minutes or so. Be sure you get a copy of the current bus schedules at the tourist information center.

There are two buses that run on Highway 12, which circumnavigates the island. One bus starts at Jeju-si and goes to Seogwipo via Seongsan (going east), while the other starts at Jeju-si and goes to Seogwipo via Hallim (going west). They both start running at 5:40am every 20 minutes until 8pm. After 8pm, there are two more buses every half-hour until 9pm. Regular bus fare is W1,000 adults, W800 for junior high students, W400 for elementary school kids. You can get additional info on the intercity buses by calling ☎️ 064/753-3242 for Jeju-si and ☎️ 064/762-3248 for Seogwipo-si.

BY BIKE Outside of Jeju City and Seogwipo, biking is common. In fact, there is a continuous bike lane on both sides of Highway 12. Cycling the entire 182km (113 miles) will take about 3 to 5 days, depending on your skill level. Some shore roads also have bike lanes, but many of them aren’t continuous and are inconvenient. Rentals are W5,000 to W8,000 per day and are available near the Jeju-si Bus Terminal, Yongduam (Dragon Head Rock, a basalt formation carved into its dragon-head shape by the wind and the sea), or the beachfront.

You can rent both bicycles and scooters, but bikes are more eco-friendly, of course. In Old Jeju, there is a motorbike shop where the owner speaks English well. Go to Soesara Jeju-do, go 1 block south, and look for Keumsung Motorcycle (☎ 064/758-5296; http://jejubike.co.kr, in Korean) on the east side of the street. They rent a scooter for about W20,000 per day.

Fast Facts Jeju-do

Banks, Foreign Exchange & ATMs Normal banking hours are Monday to Friday 9am to 4pm. There are currency exchange bureaus at the airport and inside major hotels. ATMs can be found all over the island, but look for the Global logo, since those are the most foreigner-friendly. ATMs in department stores are usually the most user-friendly.

Business Hours Most offices and businesses open from 9am to 6pm Monday to Friday. Shops are generally open 9am to 10pm Monday through Saturday, while most offices and government buildings are open 9am to 4:40pm on weekdays.

Doctors & Dentists Most first-class hotels can refer you to a doctor or dentist. In an emergency, dial ☎ 119 or call one of the recommendations under “Hospitals,” below.

Hospitals Those with English-speaking doctors and 24-hour emergency care include Halla Medical Center, 1963-2 Yon-dong, Jeju City (☎ 064/740-5266, ext. 0, or 740-5102); Cheju National University Hospital, 690-716, 3-do 2-dong, Jeju City (☎ 064/717-1114); and the Seogwipo Medical Center, 1530-2 Dongheung-dong, Seogwipo-si (☎ 064/730-3109). The Seogwipo Public Health Center (☎ 064/735-3550) is open weekdays.

Hot Lines Tourist information is available in English from the Korean Tourist Assistance Center (☎ 1330). For directory assistance in English, dial ☎ 00794.

Internet Access Most high-end tourist hotels, love motels, and even some hostels have Internet access, but if yours doesn’t you can use one of the PC bahngs (PC rooms) in Jeju-si or Seogwipo for about W1,000 to W1,500 per hour.

Newspapers The Jeju Times (http://jejutimes.co.kr) is available in English online, and two English-language daily newspapers, Korean Herald (www.koreaherald.co.kr) and The Korea Times (http://times.hankooki.com), are available on the island.

Pharmacies There are no 24-hour drugstores in Jeju-do. Most of them can be found in Jeju-si or Seogwipo, displaying a large green cross symbol or the Korean word for medicine (₩). Convenient stores and a few stores in luxury hotel lobbies are open around the clock and carry simple remedies, like aspirin.

Police Dial ☎ 112 for the police; although their English will be limited, they will assist you. Police stations are clearly marked in English.

Post Offices There are 40 post offices and 21 postal agencies in Jeju-do. All are open Monday through Friday 9am to 5pm. The Jeju City post office and the Seogwipo post office are also open Saturday 9am to 1pm. If you have questions, or to find the nearest post office, call ☎ 064/739-4503.

Weather Call the Korean Tourist Assistance Center at ☎ 1330 or ☎ 131 for the latest weather (especially useful for planning ferry excursions).
Jeju-do is popular among honeymooners and vacationing Japanese, which means that hotel prices are higher here than on the mainland, especially during the summer high season and during holidays. If you’re planning to visit during those times, be sure to make reservations well in advance. Weekend prices are a bit higher, too. Luxury accommodations are centered in Jeju-si and Seogwipo (which is home to the newer, more modern resorts), but there are some lower-end minbak (private homestays) and pensions scattered throughout the island. The condo-style pensions can be reserved in advance, but the minbak generally operate on a walk-in basis—again, not a problem except during high season.

JEJU-SI

Jeju KAL Hotel ★★★
Rising 18 stories above the center of Jeju City, this hotel is run by Korean Airlines (so you can get a deal if you book your hotel and airfare at the same time). Although it’s not located right on the water, you do get wonderful views of the mountains or the city, and a handful of the rooms have ocean views. The beds are standard for South Korea, meaning that they’re harder than the ones you’re probably used to finding in Western hotels, but they all have down comforters. You can also opt for a traditional ondol room. In addition to courteous service, the hotel offers a sky bar on the top floor. There’s also a sister location in Seogwipo.

Ramada Plaza Jeju
Located just minutes from the airport, this “floating” hotel is literally right on the water. Built with 100% investment funds from the Korean Teachers Credit Union, the nine-story building’s design was inspired by luxury cruise ships. More Western-style rooms are available, but there are also ondol rooms and kids’ suites (which come complete with bunk beds, toys, TV, and PlayStation to keep the children occupied). You can choose between mountain- and oceanview rooms (for W40,000 more).

Jeju Pacific Hotel ★
Conveniently located in central Jeju City, this triangular and vaguely Egyptian-themed building offers rooms with ocean and mountain views. The colorful (and gigantic) ceiling light in the lobby is fun in a kitschy sort of way. The rooms are comfortable and clean, but the bathrooms aren’t anything to write home about. This older hotel offers both Western-style and ondol rooms. Unfortunately, the staff’s English is not so great and their sauna is available only to men.

Inexpensive\n\nJeju Marina Hotel ★ Finds Although the staff’s English is not so great, they’ll make up for it in service and hospitality. The location is not near the coast, but there are some shops and bars within walking distance. You’ll find simple and spotless rooms here, along with a nice array of facilities, especially for a hotel in this price range.

SEOGWIPO\n\nExpensive\n\nHyatt Regency Jeju ★★★ This resort hotel is located in an ideal spot, right on Jungmun Beach—it’s the closest hotel to the beach in the area. Although it’s one of the older ones around, it’s still very clean and elegant in an understated way. The outdoor pool is nicer than the indoor one (especially since it includes a swim-up bar), but is usually closed in the off season. Mountain- or oceanview rooms are available, with the ocean views costing a bit more (around W$50,000) and including very nice balconies. All rooms come with two beds with feather duvets, and they are the typical Korean-style hard mattresses. The service is fantastic, and not at all overwhelming.

Jeju Lotte Hotel ★★★ The newest addition to the Lotte chain, the Jeju location is probably the best of the bunch. Supposedly modeled after the Palace of the Lost City resort in South Africa, the grounds are expansive and well manicured. The Las Vegas-type water show draws a crowd, but is a bit cheesy. The restaurants are worthy of the hotel, but still pricey. It’s a bit farther from the ocean than the Hyatt, but still within walking distance. Both Western-style beds and ondol rooms are available—ask for one with an ocean view. The rooms are very spacious and comfortable with perhaps the best bathrooms in South Korea (the toilets even warm up for you).

Moderate\n\nLittle France Hotel ★★ Value Don’t be fooled by the name, because there’s nothing French about this place. The modern-looking building belies the cozy rooms inside. There are four types of rooms (listed from least expensive to most): the modern room, oriental, antique, and the royal classic. All rooms have double beds only and are artfully decorated with decidedly feminine touches. Bathrooms are clean, but have showers only. The on-site restaurant serves simple Korean meals starting at W$5,000. The amicable owners will even pick you up from the airport, if you make arrangements in advance.

In room: A/C, TV, fridge, hair dryer.
Inexpensive
Shinsung Hotel ★ This is an inexpensive spot with clean rooms and a central location in Seogwipo. Although the rooms on the second floor are the cheapest, you can get a computer and Internet access if you get a room on the third or fourth floors for just W10,000 more. Both bed and ondol rooms are available, but there’s no restaurant on-site.

Ocean Grand Hotel ★★ Located on the ocean overlooking Hamdeok Beach and the mountains nearby, this eight-story building has a modern lobby. The rooms aren’t huge but they are very spotlessly clean and decorated with dark wood furniture; as an added bonus, all rooms have balconies. Both Western-style rooms and ondol rooms are available, with the latter being a bit less expensive, if you don’t mind sleeping on the floor.

IGH Pension ★ Located on the western shore of the island, this pension has condo-style accommodations and two properties. One is especially marketed toward couples on their honeymoon while the other is good for families or groups traveling together. With convenient kitchenettes, the spacious apartment-style accommodations have large windows that face the ocean. Beds are comfortable and set on the usual Korean ondol flooring. Most of the bathrooms have spacious tubs. Not your sandy beach-type resort, the “pension” is on a beach composed mostly of the lava rocks famous on Jeju-do. Located away from the major city, it’s a secluded getaway from the touristy parts of the island. The only drawback is you’ll need a car and good directions in order to get here.

Jazz Village (Maeul) ★★★ Kids Finds You might wonder about the name, but you’ll understand once you arrive and hear the soft jazz music being piped outside the buildings. This “pension” is located just a few miles outside of Seogwipo and is especially convenient if you plan on renting a car (though the taxi ride is fairly short and inexpensive). Staying here is a lot like renting a condo—there are two-story spaces complete with kitchenettes and loft. They also have hotel-style rooms without kitchens for less. Facilities are great for vacationing families and there’s even an open-air cinema with movies showing once a week during the summer. The website is only in Korean, but the staff does speak some English.

4 WHERE TO DINE

Since this is South Korea’s largest island, Jeju-do is well known for its hwae (raw fish) and I highly recommend the local sea bream or the sea urchin if you’re an adventurous eater. But the culinary excitement doesn’t stop there. Other local specialties include galchi (hairtail fish) and junbok (abalone), which used to be so prized it was usually reserved for royalty. No more. Now it is made into jook (porridge), eaten raw, or added to a variety of other dishes. Heuk dwaeji (pork from native black pigs) and pheasant are also local specialties. A holdover from the island’s Mongolian days is bing ddeok (rice cakes) made with buckwheat and radish instead of rice, which is quite bland. Give it a try, but bear in mind that it may take a couple of tastings before you appreciate its very subtle flavor.

Nearly all of the luxury hotels serve Western cuisine, if you must have a hamburger and don’t mind paying ₩17,000 for one. Otherwise, your best bet is to go for the local offerings, which may not be gourmet (at least not yet), but which are generally delicious.

If you’re looking for an ocean view and extremely fresh seafood, head for the restaurants along the shores of Jeju-si, which attract crowds of tourists and locals with their straight-out-of-the-water offerings and live performances. My favorites are the haenyeou jip, which translates to “house of women divers,” seaside restaurants run by the haenyeo themselves. Most of them are found along the coast, near major tourist attractions, and feature abalone jook, octopus, sea cucumbers, and other fresh seafood on their menus. There are locations in Seopjikoji, Jungmun Beach, Seongsan, and Sehwa. You can also see the female divers selling their freshly caught wares at stands in Yongduam or Jungmun Beach.

JEJU CITY

Donjigae Hwaejib ★ KOREAN SEAFOOD Visiting businessmen and tourists alike come here for the fresh offerings, not the stark atmosphere. A great place for fresh hwae, this joint is on the western side of the city. Although their specialty is raw fish, their grilled godeung-uh (mackerel) is pretty tasty, too.
2618-11 Dodu 1-dong, Jeju-si. 064/742-5200. Hwae jeongshik (raw fish meal) ₩25,000 and up. MC, V. Daily 10:30am–10:30pm. Small parking lot.

Jeju Haelyong ★ KOREAN SEAFOOD Specializing in local fish dishes, this two-story restaurant sits on a bed of lava rocks. The patio dining is nice in good weather, or opt for the second floor for a good view. Well known for fish jolim (spicy stewed dishes), like the fabulous godeung-uh jolim (spicy stewed mackerel), Jeju Haelyong also offers dishes like donkatsu (fried pork cutlet) for the kids (and those who don’t love fish). Prices may seem a bit high, but larger dishes can be shared. The menu is posted in Korean on the wall, but the colorful pictures help you decide.

2526-4 Yeongdong, Jeju-si. ☏ 064/744-5380. Entrees ₩8,000–₩20,000. MC, V. Daily 9am–9pm.

Yeonnoonae KOREAN VEGETARIAN  Known for their vegetarian bibimbap (mixed rice bowl), this inviting restaurant has a limited menu, but tasty dishes. Try the gamja buchim (potato pancakes) or the nokcha deulggae sujebi (dough flake soup with green tea and perilla-seed broth). Perfect for vegetarians or anyone looking for an inexpensive meal in a cozy environment. Both floor and chair seating are available, but no English is spoken.

Across from the entrance to the Halla Arboretum, Yeon-dong, Jeju-si. ☏ 064/712-5646. Entrees ₩4,000–₩6,000. No credit cards. Daily 9:30am–9pm. From Jeju-si, take the bus bound for Jeju Agriculture High School.

SEOGWIPO

Expensive

Keun Gaetmul Hwaejib ★★★ JAPANESE SUSHI In the middle of Daepohang Hwae Town, this sushi restaurant is expensive but worth every last penny. To get the best view of the ocean, ask for a table on the second floor. With probably the freshest fish in town, their hwae comes with more side dishes than you’ll be able to finish. Everything comes in several courses with sliced raw fish and spicy hot pot at the end, so make sure you have time for a leisurely meal.

Seong-eup Chilshimli Jumak ★★★ (finds) KOREAN TRADITIONAL  Near the Seong-eup Folk Village is this traditional restaurant, well known for its barbecued black pig. For many years, this thatched-roof joint has been serving up some of the best local cuisine around. Don’t miss the pheasant potato noodles—they boil the pheasant bones for 24 hours to enhance the flavor. Their homemade makgeolli (milky rice wine) is also worth a special trip.

Moderate

Daeyoo Land Sikdang ★ KOREAN PHEASANT  Located inside the Jeju-do hunting grounds, this restaurant specializes in all things pheasant. Try the pheasant shabu shabu (boiled pheasant, very popular with Japanese tourists), the naengmyeon (cold buckwheat noodles), buchingae (flapcakes), or even the pheasant dumplings. If you want to splurge, you can go for the multicourse menu, while dining in a distinctly hunting lodge–like environment, complete with wooden paneling and rock walls. The staff speaks English and Japanese.

144 Sangye-dong, Seogwipo-si. ☏ 064/738-0500. www.daeyooland.net (very little English). Entrees ₩7,000–₩13,000; set menus ₩30,000–₩50,000. AE, MC, V. Daily 9am–6pm (until 9pm with reservations). From Seogwipo, take Hwy. 12 to Jungmun Gwangwang Danji, or call for the Daeyoo Land shuttle bus.
Geumho Garden ★ KOREAN BARBECUE  You’ll forget the dated decor once you start eating the heuk dwaeji barbecue at this Jeju standard. You can also have beef to cook on your tabletop grill, or just get the haemul ddukbaegi (seafood in a stone pot). The staff speaks English and Japanese.

Sehwali Haenyeoi Jip ★★★ KOREAN SEAFOOD  At one of the few joints run directly by the women divers (haenyeo), you can taste fresh jeonbok jook (abalone porridge), baemul pajeon (seafood flatcakes), and other specialties directly from the divers themselves. Not only will you be getting some of the freshest fish on the island, you’ll be directly supporting an endangered art.

Inexpensive

Hang-gu Shikdang ★ KOREAN SEAFOOD  Located right across from the water, this hwae joint serves up fresh seafood without breaking the bank. On cold days, you might enjoy the spicy seafood hot pot while watching the fishermen bring in their boats.

Moseulpo, Seogwipo-si.  064/794-2254. Entrees ₩9,000 and up. No credit cards. Wed–Mon 9am–9pm.

Hwasoon Jungnang Galbi ★ KOREAN BARBECUE  This galbi (short ribs) restaurant specializes in pork barbecue at a bargain price. You can also get naengmyeon or dwenjang jjigae (fermented soybean paste hot pot), if you’re feeling particularly adventurous.

243-3 Donggyang-ri, Andeok-myeon, Seogwipo-si.  064/794-8954. Reservations not necessary. Entrees ₩5,000–₩7,000. AE, MC, V. Daily noon–10pm. Located right across the street from the Andeok Junior High School, just east of the Hwasoon Sageoli (4-way).

OUTSIDE THE CITIES

Inexpensive

Malgorejumak ★ KOREAN TRADITIONAL  Specializing in native Jeju cuisine, this restaurant serves up food that is as tasty as it is cheap. When the season is right, you can find local pheasant or the island’s black pig on the menu. Start out with buckwheat mung-bean pancakes, only ₩3,000, or a bowl of pheasant buckwheat noodles. Wash it all down with some local rice wine.

826-1 Seong-eup-li, Nam-jeju-gun.  064/787-0624. Entrees ₩6,000 and up. No credit cards. Daily 9am–6pm.

Namokdo Shikdang ★ KOREAN TRADITIONAL  For seriously down-home Korean food, you can’t beat the handmade noodles or pork at this unassuming restaurant. You’ll wish that your halmunbi (grandma) could make dishes half as good as this one, especially for the ridiculously low prices. Unfortunately, the menu is only in Korean, but it’s limited and the dishes I recommend are soondae goksu (Korean sausage noodles), saeng gogi (unmarinated meat/pork), and myulchi goksu (noodles in anchovy broth).

1877-6 Gashi-li, Pyeosunmyeon, Nam-jeju-gun.  064/787-1202. Entrees ₩5,000–₩7,000. No credit cards. Daily 11am–7pm. From Jeju-si, take Hwy. 97 to Hwy. 16 (toward Pyoseon). When you arrive in Gashi-li, take a left at the 1st 4-way and the restaurant is there behind a large tree.
5 EXPLORING JEJU-DO

There's no shortage of activities to keep you busy on the island. Be it climbing the tallest mountain in South Korea, exploring a cave, hiking to a waterfall, or just lounging on a sandy beach, you'll find plenty to do.

HALLASAN (MT. HALLA)

At 1,950m (6,398 ft.), Hallasan is the highest peak in South Korea. This now-dormant volcano (which erupted during the fourth Cenozoic Era) sits at the center of the island and can be seen from anywhere on Jeju-do—unless, of course, it's hiding behind the clouds, which happens often. Locals say that like a woman, the mountain is constantly hiding her face. The mountain also changes with the seasons, putting on bright pink azaleas in the spring and a beautiful white coat of snow in the winter. The crater at the summit is now a lake, Baengnokdam (which is also the old name for Hallasan), though the area directly surrounding the lake is currently closed to give the natural setting time to recover from all the climbers who've visited in the past few years. The name Baengnokdam came from the legend that the gods came down from the heavens to ride their white deer (baengnok) on the mountain.

There are four trails leading up to the top of the mountain, each varying in difficulty and length. None of them is easy, and you should set aside a whole day if you wish to reach the summit. Although there is natural spring water available on the way up, I highly recommend packing some extra water and a meal to enjoy once you get there. In cooler weather, bring a windbreaker since it will get colder and windier as you climb higher. The Yeongsil Trail is the easiest, but it still will take just under 4 hours to reach the top (and another 3 down). You can take an intercity bus to the Hallasan National Park management office to pick up the trail head—it starts at the southwestern side of the peak and is 6.5km (4 miles) long. Personally, I think the Eorimok Trail is the most scenic (especially in May when the azaleas are in bloom). The entrance is 15km (9 ¾ miles) from Jeju-si and takes about 40 minutes via intercity bus. It’s 7.8km (4.8 miles) long and will take you a little longer than the Yeongsil Trail. If you want a real challenge, take the Gwaneumsa Trail, which is steeper than the others. The entrance to the trail is at the Tamna Education Institute, about 11km (6 ¾ miles) from Jeju-si. From there it’s about an hour to Gwaneum Temple, a total of 3 hours to reach the peak and another 2½ down. The Seongpanak Trail is an easier climb with several resting spots. Another great trail for enjoying the azaleas, it takes about 4½ hours to climb and another 4 to return.

Admission to the Hallasan National Park (☎ 064/713-9950; www.hallasan.go.kr) is W1,600 for ages 25 to 64, W600 for ages 13 to 24, and W300 for children. It’s free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Open all year-round, the park will be closed only for inclement weather. The park is open 5am to 10pm in the summer and 6am to 9pm in the winter. Overnight camping is prohibited. From the Jeju Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Seongpanak. Daily buses run every 10 minutes 6am to 9:30pm. The 35-minute ride costs W1,700. Alternatively, you can take an Eorimok-bound bus from the terminal, which costs W2,200. Those buses run daily from 6am to 4:50pm every 80 minutes.

JUNGMUN RESORT COMPLEX

Located on the seashore in Seogwipo, this is the largest resort area in South Korea. If you’re staying nearby, you can explore on foot, but from Jeju-si, take the Jungmun Express Bus (about 50 min.). For additional information, check out www.jungmunresort.com. All the attractions listed below are within the resort complex and are walking distance from Seogwipo.

Cheonjeyeon Waterfall ★★★ Cheonjeyeon means the “pond of the Emperor of Heaven” in Korean, since Jeju-do legend says that the seven nymphs who helped the Emperor of Heaven descended every night to play and bathe in the waters of the three waterfalls. You can see the seven nymphs carved on the bridge that crosses over the valley (whose lanterns are quite pretty at night). Another legend says that if you swim in the water on the 15th day of the seventh lunar month, you will be cured of whatever diseases you have by the eighth lunar month. But since swimming is prohibited there now, you won’t be able to test the myth. The Chilseonyeo (Seven Nymphs) Festival is held here in May of even-numbered years.

Teddy Bear Museum Kids Built in 2001, this is the world’s largest museum dedicated to teddy bears (but the museum houses other stuffed creatures as well). You’ll learn everything you’ve ever wanted to know about teddy bears, since there are displays on teddy history, luxury bears, and more (I have to say that seeing teddy bears in traditional Korean hanbok is pretty hilarious). There is a cafe and an outdoor garden filled with (what else?) teddy bear statues.

☎ 064/738-7600. www.teddybearmuseum.com. Admission W6,000 adults, W5,000 youth, W4,000 children and military. Aug 26–July 15 daily 9am–7pm (last tickets at 6pm); July 16–Aug 25 daily 9am–10pm (last tickets at 9pm).

Yeomiji Botanical Garden The largest arboretum in Asia, the Yeomiji gardens house over 2,000 varieties of plants and trees in the greenhouse and over 1,700 semi-tropical plants in the outside gardens. You can view the traditional landscape styles of Japan, France, Italy, Korea, and, of course, Jeju Island. If you’re tired of walking, you can take a tour train around the international gardens.

☎ 064/735-1100. Admission W6,000 adults, W4,500 teens and military, W3,000 seniors 65 and over and kids 12 and under. Train W1,000 adults, W500 kids. Apr–Oct daily 9am–6:30pm; Nov–Mar daily 9am–5:30pm. Last ticket sales 1 hr. before closing.

BEACHES

Although Jeju-do is called the “Hawaii of Korea,” its narrow, rocky beaches are distinctly different from those of the American islands—you won’t find wide, fine-sand beaches here. However, there are plenty of sandy spots for you to sunbathe or take in the scenery. I’ve listed some beaches for your seaside pleasure.

Gwakji Beach ★★★ This wide beach is not as popular as the other beaches on the island, but still offers shallow waters and pristine white sand. There are showers and even an outdoor bathroom at one corner of the beach, where the water is extremely cold. You can even catch clams when the season is right. There is a campsite and minbak nearby. Gwakji-li, Aewol-eup. Take the Seohwaeseon line from Jeju Bus Terminal.

Hamdeok Beach ★★★ Perhaps one of the best beaches on the entire island, Hamdeok beach is on the northeastern coast. Since it’s big—the sands stretch for about 500m (1,640 ft.)—it’s quite popular with the locals. The water is shallow and generally safe (watch for volcanic rocks, though—they can leave nasty cuts on your feet and legs).
There are parking and camping areas available, as well as dressing rooms, showers, and restrooms. You can also have sushi on the pier or have a drink at the cafe on the water. Hamdeok-li, Chocheon-eup. ☏ 064/783-6003. Take an intercity or express bus from Jeju-si Bus Terminal.

Hyeopjae Beach
Located right next to Hallim Park, this cozy beach has white sand and shallow, turquoise waters (1.2m/4 ft. average depth with no sudden drops, making it the perfect spot for families who want to swim). Shower and restroom facilities are provided. The beach connects to Geumreong Beach, but locals refer to both beaches as “Hyeopjae Beach.” Overnight camping is allowed in the adjacent pine forest. Hyeopjae-li, Hanrim-eup. www.jejufolk.com. From Jeju-si or Seogwipo-si, take the bus to Hallim Park.

Shinyang Beach
A great place for windsurfing, this beach is on a small peninsula with plenty of sand for sunbathing on both sides. Located on the eastern coast of the island, it’s also ideal for sailing (with the best views on clear days in the spring and autumn).
40-1, Pyoseon-li, Pyoseon-myeon, Seogwipo-si. Buses from Jeju Bus Terminal drop you off about 2km (1¼ miles) from the beach. An hourly bus runs to and from the beach.

Natural Wonders

Bijarim Forest
Designated a natural monument, this pine forest has about 2,800 trees, ranging from 500 to 800 years old. This is the largest bija namu (torreya tree) forest in the world. The oldest tree of all of these beauties can be found in the middle of the forest. Looming over 25m (82 ft.) tall with a girth of about 6m (20 ft.), it is called the ancestor of all the bija trees. There is a nice path provided for a leisurely walk through the forest.
San 25, Pyeongdae-li, Gujwa-eup, Jeju-si. Admission ₩1,600 adults, ₩880 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and kids 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. From Jeju Intercity Bus Terminal, take a bus on the Donghae Line (runs every 20 min.) to either Pyeongdae-li or Sehwa-li. From there, take a shuttle bus to Bijarim Forest (runs every 15 min.).

Cheonjeyeon Waterfall ★★
Not to be confused with the Cheonjeyeon waterfall in the Jungmun Resort, the Cheonjeyeon Waterfall is located in a narrow valley in the coastal hills near Seogwipo Port. Its name means “where the sky (cheon) meets the land (ji).” Especially nice in the evening (when they light the water), the path to the waterfall is through a lush garden of subtropical plants. The pond into which the water falls is home to migrating ducks and the Korean marbled eel, one of many national treasures.

Jeongbang Waterfall ★★
One of the three most famous falls on Jeju-do, the Jeongbang Waterfall is said to be the only one in Asia in which the water falls into the ocean. The water falling from 23m (75 ft.) is a dramatic sight to behold. Be sure to wear shoes with good traction since the only way down is a set of steel steps and the rocks get slippery from the water. If you walk about 300m (984 ft.) east, you’ll see a smaller fall, the Sojeongbang Waterfall, a cool place to beat the summer heat.
Jusangjeolli Cliffs  Thousands of years ago, when Hallasan was an active volcano, the lava flowing down to the ocean created the Jusangjeolli Cliffs, off the Jungmun Daepo Coast. The rocks that make up these cliffs have been sculpted by the elements into a series of hexagonal and cubic pillars. The rock formations look like they’ve been hard-carved, though they are solely the work of Mother Nature.

Ilwon 2579 Daepo-dong. Seogwipo-si. 1330 (Korea Travel Phone). Admission W2,000 adults, W1,000 ages 18 and under. Mar–Oct daily 8am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–6pm. From the entrance to the Jungmun Folk Museum (in the resort), walk along the farm road west for 7–8 min.

Manjang-gul (Manjang Cave) ★★★ The world’s largest lava cave, Manjang-gul was created centuries ago, back when Hallasan was still an active volcano. Only the first kilometer (half mile) of the 13km (8-mile) cave is open to the public, but that’s enough to give you a good glimpse of its impressive rock formations and stalactites. The inside temperature is always cool no matter how hot it is outside. Although the cave is well lit, watch your step because the humidity makes the rocks slippery.

7-1 Gimmyeong-ilsan, Donggimmyeong-li, Gujwa-eup, Jeju-si. 1330 (Korea Travel Phone). Admission W2,200 adults, W1,100 teens and children, free for seniors over 65. Summer daily 9am–7pm; winter daily 9am–5pm. From Jeju-si (30 min.) or Seogwipo (1 1⁄2 hr.), take the intercity Donghoe line bus to the Manjang-gul parking lot. Take a local bus or taxi to the cave entrance (or walk 30 min.).

Sanbang-gulsa (Sanbang Grotto) ★★★ Local legend has it that the top of Mt. Halla was taken off and thrown away, and that piece became Mt. Sanbang. On the southwestern side of Sanbangsan is Sanbang-gul, which used to be called Sanbang Cave, but now is called a grotto since it houses a Buddha statue. This 5m-high (16-ft.) cave is where monk Hye-II lived during the Goryeo Dynasty. From inside the cave, you can see Marado (Mara Island) and Yongmeoli Haebyeon (Dragon Head Beach) ★★★★, where Sanbangsan stretches into the ocean and looks as if a dragon’s head is going underwater. The entrance fee includes both Sanbang-gulsa and Yongmeoli Haebyeon.

Andeok-myeon, Sagye-li, Seogwipo-si. 1330 (Korea Travel Phone). Admission W2,500 adults, W1,500 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and children 6 and under. Daily 8am–7pm (until 6:30pm Nov–Feb). From Jeju Intericty Bus Terminal, take the bus bound for Sanbangsan, which runs every 30–40 min., 6:40am–9:25pm, a 55-min. ride. From Seogwipo terminal, take the bus bound for Sagye and get off at Sanbang-gulsa (40-min. ride). It’s about a 4-min. walk to the beach.

Sangumburi Crater One of three major craters on the island, Sangumburi crater was, like the rest, a result of volcanic activity. But unlike Hallasan, this one exploded quickly, spewed relatively little lava, and left barely a trace of cone behind. In other words, if you want to see an extinct volcano, but don’t feel like climbing, this is the one to visit. There is a well-paved path from the parking lot to the crater’s rim. You can walk around part of the rim, but the rest of it and the crater itself are off-limits. Around the grounds are several traditional Jeju-style grave sites as well. Unfortunately, none of the buses from Seogwipo stops here, so you’ll have to take a taxi.

Gyorae-li, Jocheon-eup, Jeju-si. 1330 (Korea Travel Phone). Admission W3,000 adults, W1,500 teens and children, free for seniors 65 and over and children 6 and under. Mar 1–July 14 and Sept 1–Oct 31 daily 8am–6pm; July 15–Aug 31 daily 8am–7pm; Nov 1–Feb 28 daily 8:30am–7pm. From Jeju City, take the bus bound for Pyoseon or take a taxi (30 min.). Driving from Jeju-si, take national road 11 to local road 112 at Gyorae.

Sarabong (Sara Peak) ★★ This mountain rises above nearby Jeju port with a lighthouse that sits on the shore at its foot. A small temple Sarasa is also nestled on its hillside. You’ll find the area dotted with young couples coming to watch the romantic Jeju-do’s 10 Beauties

Ask any Jeju native and they’ll be able to quickly tick off to you the top 10 natural beauties of the island. (I swear, I didn’t come up with this list myself.) Here they are—some visitable, some not:

- Gosumokma: Gosu means old, primitive forest, and there is some disagreement whether the area adjacent to Hwangsapyeong is the “Gosu.” But the name “Gosumokma” refers to the view of horses roaming around the foot of Hallasan.

- Gyulrimchusaek: The name comes from the autumn landscape of mandarin orange orchards around the Ohyeondan Shrine in old Jeju City. There had been some talk about officially designating this orchard, but an ancient document states that “Gyulrimchusaek” refers to mandarin trees on the whole island, not in one particular place.

- Jeongbang hapok: On the edge of the ocean, Jeongbang Waterfall is said to have housed a holy dragon that lived underneath it. People believe that the water contains the dragon’s spirit and can cure diseases and bring rain during a drought. The small waterfall nearby is said to look like a servant waiting on a dignified lord.

- Nokdam mansel: The snow on Baekrokdam, the crater lake on top of Hallasan, doesn’t melt until late spring/early summer. Legend has it that immortal beings drank the water underneath the snow and it is considered a sacred place.

- Sabong nakjo: The sunset viewed from the city of Sarabong (or Sara Peak) is called sabong nakjo. The Jeju people say it is like the sun and the sky are burning themselves together.

- Sanbang-gulsa: Inside the cave, water drops from the ceiling and the natives say it is the tears of the goddess Sanbangdeok, who guards the sunset over the ocean. But the show doesn’t end when the sun goes down; stay a bit longer to watch the lights go up on Tap-dong and the lights of the fishing boats dotting the nearby waters. On the southeastern (inland) side of the mountain is the shrine Mochungsa, built in commemoration of those who fought against the Japanese occupation of Korea during the early part of the last century.

From Jeju Airport take bus 200 or 300 and get off at Dongmun Rotary. From there, take a local bus (nos. 1, 2, 3, or 10) to Jeju Port or Jeju National Museum and it’s about a 10-minute walk from there. If driving, take circular road no. 12.

Seongsan Ilchulbong (“Sunrise Peak”) ★★★  This parasitic volcano rose from the sea about 100,000 years ago. The southeastern and northern side of the crater are cliffs, but the northwestern side is a grassy hillside that connects to Seongsanpo (Seongsan Village). The ridge is good for a nice walk or a horseback ride. Bright yellow with rapeseed flowers in the springtime, it’s worth an early-morning climb to see the spectacular sunrise from the peak.

114 Seongsan-li, Seongsan-eup, Seogwipo-si. ☎️ 1330 (Korea Travel Phone). Admission W2,000 ages 24–64, W1,000 ages 7–23, free for seniors over 65 and children 6 and under. Winter daily 5am–9pm; mountain. Legend has it that the beautiful daughter of Mt. Sanbang was in love with a youth, Goseong. An official in town had a crush on her and confiscated Goseong's property and sent him into exile. In despair, Sanbangdeok returned to the cave and turned herself into a rock. You can hear her teardrops falling as you look at the ocean from inside the grotto.

- Sanpojo-eo: Sanpojo-eo refers to the view of the sea scene while one is leisurely fishing (the water, other fishing boats, seagulls, white herons). Some say the word should be changed to reflect the fishermen's hard work, but that's the last thing you'll be thinking about as you see the reflected lights of hundreds of fishermen lighting their lamps at night in Jeju harbor.

- Seongsan ilchu: Seongsan, which means “holy mountain,” got its name because the 99 rocks around its crater form a castle or crown. The view of it at sunrise is one of the sights not to be missed.

- Yeong-gu chunhwa: Yeong-gu means “a hill where an immortal being lives” and is in the Pangeonmun area of Odeung-dong. Chunhwa means “spring flowers,” specifically referring to the azaleas that bloom there every spring. Looking at hillside flowers, the Jeju ancestors supposedly got a feeling of being close to the immortal beings.

- Yeongsil Giam: In a remote part of the Yeongsil trail up to Hallasan, there are about 500 oddly shaped rock pillars. They are said to be the 500 sons of a mother who drowned in the soup pot while making dinner for said 500 sons. Or 500 arhats (great monks who have reached nirvana). Or 500 generals guarding the island against enemies. Whatever they are, they are quite a sight to behold.

HISTORICAL SITES
The island has an isolated history sometimes akin to and at other times different from that of the rest of Korea. Buildings and structures have characteristics unique to Jeju-do and the people have interesting folklore and superstitions associated with almost all rock formations and natural phenomena that occur on the island.

Jeju Folk Village ★★ Created to preserve the island's historical culture, the village is actually a collection of historically re-created buildings that was designed with consultations from historians and preservationists. In addition to these modern re-creations, several structures, ranging in age from 100 to 300 years old, were relocated here, intact, for visitors to enjoy. You’ll get to explore life-size models of mountain villages, fishing villages, and shaman villages. Various artifacts are on display, and there are also folk performances and traditional craftsmen who still practice their art and sell their wares.
Although it’s a bit touristy, it’s a lot of fun to try on traditional wedding outfits or ride the native ponies.

40-1, Pyoseon-li, Pyoseon-myeon, Seogwipo-si. ☎️ 064/787-4501. www.jejufolk.com. Admission ₩6,000 adults, ₩4,000 teens and military, ₩2,000 seniors 65 and over and kids 12 and under. Oct–Mar daily 8:30am–5pm; Apr–July 20 and Sept daily 8:30am–6pm; July 21–Aug daily 8:30am–6:30pm. From Jeju Intercity Bus Terminal take the bus bound for Jeju Folk Village, which runs every 30 min.

Samseonghyeol Shrine This garden contains three holes in the ground that, according to legend, are the origin of Jeju-do’s inhabitants. The story goes that three demigods emerged from these three holes and became the ancestors to the three clans of the island—the Goh, Bu, and Yang families. One day the clans found a box sealed in purple clay floating in the ocean. When they opened it, a messenger in purple appeared and said that he was sent by a king from the Byeoklang state. The king wanted his three daughters to marry the three demigods living on a western seashore of Jeju-do, and to create a new kingdom there. Then, the messenger flew away. Inside the box was another box in blue. When they opened it three princesses in blue dresses emerged, along with a calf, a pony, and five kinds of seeds. The three demigods married each of the three princesses and divided the island into thirds (who got which third was determined by where arrows shot by each of the three gods fell). The stone marker, known as the Samsaseok, where this archery supposedly took place, is near the Jeju Folklore Museum, just a few kilometers east of the Samseonghyeol.

Legend has it that the descendents of these three couples populated the island and ruled it as an independent kingdom called Tamna-guk until A.D. 937, when the people from the Goryeo Kingdom invaded and took control.

Every year, on the 10th day of the 4th and 10th lunar months, members of these three original families gather here to perform the jesa (ancestral honoring ceremony). On the 10th day of the 12th lunar month, they have a public ceremony, the Samseonghyeol-je, to celebrate the history of the island’s founders.

There are marking stones and altars surrounding each of the three holes. The gate and walls were built in the 1920s and a newer museum building also sits in the gardens.

1313 Ido 1-dong, Jeju-si. ☎️ 064/722-3315. Admission ₩2,500 adults, ₩1,700 teens, ₩1,000 children and seniors 65 and over, free for children 6 and under. Mar–Oct daily 8am–7pm; Nov–Feb daily 8am–6pm. It’s a 3-min. walk from the Jeju KAL Hotel.

Sancheondan Located in a grove of trees just 8km (5 miles) from Jeju-si, this former altar site sits along the first trans-island road leading to Seogwipo-si. This is the spot where the winter rites for the Mountain Spirit are performed every year. This ceremony used to be held on top of Mt. Halla, but it was moved here during the Goryeo Dynasty because so many people froze to death during the long ceremonies. Today, rituals are held during the first lunar month. It’s worth a stop to check out the eight 600-year-old “bear” pine trees, so-named because their bark is the same dark brown as bear’s fur, surrounding the place.

Ara 1-dong, Jeju-si. ☎️ 064/710-3312. Free admission. Daily 24 hr., but best to visit in the daytime. From Jeju Intercity Bus Terminal take a bus to the Jeju College of Technology stop (takes 20 min.).

Seong-eup Folk Village Located at the foot of Mt. Halla, this preserved (as opposed to re-created) folk village shows how traditional people of Jeju-do have lived for centuries. There are about 3,000 original thatch-roofed houses here, with lava stone and clay walls, and villagers still live in them, although some have added modern comforts. Still, like an outdoor museum, this simple mountain village is a testament to the people of the island. You can see stone statues, which are prevalent throughout the island, as well as old Confucius government buildings and traditional tombs. Most of the signage is in Korean only, but the displays are not difficult to decipher.

Pyoseon-li, Pyoseon-myeon, Seogwipo-si. [Tel] 064/787-4501. Free admission. Daily 24 hr., but best to visit in the daytime. From Jeju Intercity Bus Terminal take the bus bound for Dongbogwangong Rd. and get off at Seong-eup 1-li (daily 6:10am–9:30pm). The buses run every 20 min. and take an hour. From Seogwipo Intercity Bus Terminal take the bus that runs on Il-ju Rd. to the east and get off at Seong-eup 1-li (daily 6:30am–8:30pm). The buses run every 20 min. and take 50 min.

MUSEUMS
Jeju-do has very few traditional museums per se, but several unusual places that call themselves museums have sprung up on the island in recent years. Most of them, like the Chocolate Museum, the African Museum, and the aforementioned Teddy Bear Museum (see the Jungmun Resort Complex section), seem to be designed solely to amuse tourists, rather than particularly enlighten them. But just because you won’t learn all that much doesn’t mean they’re not worth visiting—after all, there’s nothing wrong with a little amusement when you’re on vacation.

Jeju Folklore and Natural History Museum  Just as the name suggests, this museum displays both the folk history and the natural history of the people and animals who have lived on the island. Its displays include shellfish fossils, bird footprints, cave miniatures, and a variety of plants and animals found (or once found) on Jeju-do. Two halls are dedicated to the folklore of the Jeju peoples, and feature dioramas of how people used to live and work.

996-1 Ido, 2-dong, Jeju-si. [Tel] 064/710-7708. http://museum.jeju.go.kr. Admission W1,100 adults, W500 youth and military. Mar–Oct daily 8:30am–6:30pm; Nov–Feb daily 8:30am–5:30pm. Closed national holidays and May 24. Take bus no. 100 or 500 and get off at the Jeju KAL Hotel. The museum is about a 5-min. walk about a block down from the hotel (on the opposite side of the street). Or 5 min. via taxi from the center of Jeju-si, about a block from the Jeju KAL Hotel, near city hall.

Jeju Folk Museum ★ At the Jeju Folk Museum, a public museum that houses folk treasures from the island’s people, all of the items are actual objects used by regular people. Although there are about 10,000 items in the collection, only about 3,000 of them are on exhibit, and some of the more interesting include tools used by Jeju-do’s women divers, an ancient musical instrument, and a personal sundial.

Outside on the museum grounds are 143 Mushin statues. The Mushin are gods whom natives believed would bring them happiness if they prayed to them with all their hearts. The local people sometimes still hold sacrificial ceremonies in their honor. If you happen to be there at the right time, you may get to see one of these ceremonies. 2505 Samyang 3-dong, Jeju-si. [Tel] 064/755-1976 (Korean only). Admission is free, but you have to buy a W1,000 brochure. Daily 9am–6pm. From the Jeju Airport take bus no. 705 bound for Hamdeok. From the Jeju Bus Terminal, take a regular bus headed for Jocheon and get off at the Jeju Haenyeo Japan Resistance Movement Memorial Park in Hado-li, Gujwa-eup.

Jeju Haenyeo Museum The haenyeo are the women divers who dive deep underwater without any sort of gear to collect shellfish and seaweed. Particular to the island, they are slowly becoming a dying breed. This museum was created to honor the divers and educate visitors about these specially trained women.

Jeju Museum of Art  The building itself is a work of art, surrounded by a shallow pool of water, giving the illusion that it's floating. Inside, there are two small floors of exhibition space displaying a variety of contemporary works (mostly sculptures and paintings by both Korean and international artists), with a rotating exhibition space highlighting everything from photographers to potters. Don't miss the rooftop garden, where you can enjoy the scenic view. The admission fee following June 2010 wasn't known at the time of writing, so check ahead.
401 Shinbiro, Jeju-si. 064/710-4300, http://jmoa.jeju.go.kr. Admission free until end of June 2010. Tues–Sun 9am to 6pm (until 8pm July–Sept); last admission 30 min. before closing. Closed Jan 1, Chuseok, and Lunar New Year. Take bus no. 46 or 1100 and get off at Jeju Museum of Art.

Jeju National Museum  ★  This museum focuses on the archaeology and history of the island, but the exhibits, displaying mostly objects and relics from excavations from various points throughout Jeju-do, are a bit cramped and oddly organized. Still, it offers a good introduction to the history and culture of the island, including Jeju's time as the “Kingdom of Tamna” before it was absorbed by the Joseon Dynasty (in 1404). The collection includes the usual pottery, tools, and other artifacts, but they also have some interesting costumes, old maps, and displays explaining the origin myth and other legends of Jeju. The modern building has a traditional-looking house in its front yard surrounded by various stone statues. Excavated relics range from prehistoric finds to those from the Joseon Dynasty.
387 Ara 1-dong, Jeju-si. 064/720-8000, http://jeju.museum.go.kr/en. Admission 1,000 adults, 500 youth, free for seniors 65 and over and children 6 and under. Tues–Fri 9am–6pm; Sat 9am–9pm; Sun 9am–7pm (last tickets sold 1 hr. before closing). Closed Jan 1. Take city bus no. 1, 2, 3, 10, 14, 24, 25, 27, 28, or 38 and get off at Kounimoru (it takes 10 min. from the Dongmun Rotary). Cross the street and walk 5 min. If you're driving, from Jeju International Airport, drive to the Seomun Rotary, then to the Dongmun Rotary, and then to the Sarabong 5-way (O-geoli). The museum is on local circular road 12 (about 6km/3½ miles east of the airport).

Museum of Sex and Health  Since Jeju-do didn't have enough sex museums (Love-land and the Museum of Erotica notwithstanding), they decided to build another one. This one, however, is more of an educational institute than a place of amusement. The displays are tastefully presented for the most part, but do watch where you sit in the periodical room, or else you might be unpleasantly surprised by the wooden seats' appendages.

Trick Art Museum  Kids  This “museum” was designed to showcase the visual tricks and optical illusions created by its various works of art. Although the price is a bit inflated and the place isn't great fun for single travelers, it is a fun photo op for the whole family. So don't forget to bring your camera.
2381 beonji, Seong-eup-li, Pyoseon-myeon, Seogwipo-si. 064/787-8774. www.trickart.co.kr. Admission 8,000 adults, 7,000 teens, 6,000 children, free for children 3 and under. Daily 9am–7pm; last admission 1 hr. before closing. About a 40-min. drive from Jeju-si off Hwy. 97.

World Automobile Jeju Museum  Housing 59 classic cars from all over the world, this collection, started by a businessman with a vision, includes a 1928 Hillman Straight 8 (the automobile of choice for the British royal family), a Model T, and the first diesel-powered car from 1886.
TEMPLES

Gwaneumsa ★ Located on the north side of Hallasan, just east of the Gwaneumsa campsite, is this small temple. One of many smaller temples popping up on the island, the current building was erected in 1969 in an attempt to revive Buddhism, which was abolished from the island during the Joseon Dynasty, in the 15th century. The major temple on the island went into a steady decline and closed down for good in 1653, leaving only a handful of hermitages on the island. The original temple at this site, which was destroyed in a fire, was built in 1909. There is no direct bus here, but the temple is located about a kilometer from the park’s north entrance.

THEME PARKS

In the past couple of years, Jeju-do has become an island of many “lands,” as unusual theme parks have popped up in hopes of attracting the thousands of tourists who visit every year. Most of them, like “Elephant Land” or “MiniMiniLand” can be tourist traps, but some give a bit of insight into Korean culture, while others are just plain fun.

Jeju Loveland In a country where you rarely see couples holding hands or even kissing on television, this sex “theme park” may seem terribly out of place. Started by 20 art school graduates from Seoul’s Hongik University, it’s actually a sculpture garden featuring an unusual, sometimes downright puzzling, display of over 140 works of art. There are also monthly exhibits and a display of sex toys. Definitely not the place to bring the kids.

680-26, Yeon-dong, Jeju-si. ☎ 064/712-6988. www.jejuloveland.com. Admission W7,000. Daily 9am–midnight (last entry 11pm). From Jeju Airport, take road 95 to road 99 at the Nohyung intersection. It’s a 10-min. drive from the airport.

Jeju Soingook Theme Park Kids The name doesn’t really describe what you’ll find here—there aren’t any rides, for example. It’s not so much a theme park as an architectural park, featuring miniaturized replicas of everything from Korea’s Bulguksa Temple to the Eiffel Tower and the Leaning Tower of Pisa. You’ll find over 100 miniature structures here, perfect for kids to explore.

725, Seogwang-li, Andeok-myeon, Seogwipo-si. ☎ 064/794-5400. www.soingook.com. Admission W6,000 adults, W4,000 teens, W3,000 seniors 65 and over and kids 12 and under. Summer daily 8:30am–7:30pm; winter daily 9am–5:30pm. Take bus no. 12, 16, 95, or 1116 and get off at Seogwang 4-way (Sageoli). It’s near where roads 95 and 16 meet.

Jeju Waterworld ★★ Kids Although this water park is a great place for children to have some water-related fun, it also has good facilities for adults who want to just relax. They also have an herb sauna, a jjimjilbang (Korean sauna), a food court, an herb village, fitness facilities, and outdoor spas. Aromatherapy and massages are available, with prices ranging from W10,000 for 20 minutes to W30,000 for a 30-minute foot massage and W50,000 for a 60-minute sports massage.

14 Beop-hwan-dong, Seogwipo-si. ☎ 064/739-1930. www.jejuwaterworld.co.kr (Korean only). Admission W35,000 ages 13 and over, W28,000 kids 2–12. Herb sauna and jjimjilbang W9,000. Daily 10am–10pm, with reduced hours off season; herb sauna daily 5:30am–midnight. Take bus no. 7 from Seogwipo-si and get off at the Samju Apt. stop. You’ll be able to see the water park from there.

Psyche World Theme Park
Kids Pronounced “Puh-see-keh” in Korean. What started as a place to highlight butterflies has morphed into a general amusement park for kids. Attractions include “Maze Park,” a big white outdoor maze; “Parody World,” with dozens of dioramas depicting historical and cultural events using preserved insects; and (my favorite) “Live World,” where visitors get to hold live animals, including bunnies, hamsters, cats, birds, and even stag beetles.

155-101 beonji, Sogil-li, Aewol-eup, Jeju-si. ☎ 064/799-7272. www.psycheworld.net. Admission, 8,500 adults, 7,000 teens, 6,000 children and seniors. Daily starting at 8:30am—closing times vary. About a 10-min. drive from Jeju-si off Hwy. 1135.

OUTDOOR PURSUITS

Jeju-do’s various beaches and rocky terrain make for a variety of watersports options. You can scuba dive, go wind sailing, paraglide, water-ski, or just enjoy swimming in the ocean. For the less aquatic of us, there are also ground sports options, like horse riding, golf, pheasant hunting, or badminton. If you’re more of a spectator than a participant, check out the Jeju Racecourse or see if there’s a game on at the Jeju World Cup Stadium.

Hiking

There is no shortage of hiking opportunities on Jeju-do. The most challenging is the ascent up the island’s (and South Korea’s) highest peak, Hallasan—a round-trip trail to the peak takes about 9 hours. There are four major trails on the mountain, but only two actually go to the peak. You can get information on trails at the visitor’s info booth at the entrance to Hallasan National Park. But for easier hikes, there are 368 secondary volcanoes on the island (all of them extinct, of course), including Wollan Crater, Yongnuni Crater, Sonja Crater, Byando Crater, and Tarabi Crater. There are plenty of coastal trails to choose from as well, including Seongsan Ilchulbong (Sunrise Peak) and the Dragon’s Tail trail.

A group of volunteers, who call themselves the Jeju Olle exploration team, led by a retired journalist, have discovered and renovated walking trails on the Seogwipo side of the island. Since September 2007, over a dozen trails (covering over 200km/124 miles) have been opened. The Jeju Olle Trails

A ★★★ (olle is the Jeju word for the road that connects your front door to the street, loosely translating to “Will you come . . . ?”; www.jejuolle.org/eng) are generally scenic walking roads that explore the best little-known parts of the island. The trails all lead into each other, so those with the luxury of time can explore half the island’s coasts and extinct volcanoes on foot.

Siheung to Gwanchigi Beach (Route 1)
Starting at Siheung Elementary School, this trail climbs up to the extinct volcanoes Malmi Oreum and Al Oreum, with views of Seongsan Ilchulbong and U-do. Then, it continues along the salt fields of Jongdal-li to Siheung-li (you may want to stop at the Siheung Haenyeo Jip, ☎ 064/782-9230, for a seafood lunch), past Seongsan Gapmun, Sungsan shijang, Dongamsa, and ends at Gwangchi Beach. The 15km (9.3-mile) route takes 5 to 6 hours.

Gwanchigi to Onpyeong (Route 2)
From Gwangshi Beach, this road climbs up Siksan-bong (peak) through Ojo-li Village along the coast and inland to Goseong Village. Then, it climbs up to Daesusan-bong past an old cemetery, then around the legendary Honinji (“Wedding” pond) and down to Onpyeong Port. The 17km (11-mile) route takes 5 to 6 hours.

Onpyeong to Pyoseon (Route 3) Beginning at Onpyeong Pogu, this trail goes up to the great views from Tong Oreum and Dokjo-bong. Then, it leads to Samdal-li, past Kim Young-gap Gallery (an elementary school that’s been converted into a gallery for the now-deceased photographer), and down to Bada Mokjang (a beachside livestock farm). The road continues through Sincheon Village and Baegopeun “Hungry” Bridge” to Pyoseon Beach. This 22km (14-mile) route takes 6 to 7 hours.

Pyoseon to Namwon (Route 4) From the port, the trail goes down to Gatneup (marsh) to Nubeureum. In Gama-li, you can stop and enjoy some fresh seafood from the haenyeo, then continue past Geomunmoeje to Tosan New Village. Then head up to Mang Orum and pass the Geoseuseansaemi (fresh water springs) to Yeongcheonsa. The trail heads down, passes Samseokgyo (bridge), and goes to Taheung and Namwon Port. The 23km (14-mile) route takes 6 to 7 hours.

Namwon to Soesoggak (Route 5) This is the best route for seaside views. Starting from Namwon, the route takes you along small villages past the Sea Lie Research center, inland through the Camellia plant community, past Jobae Museul Koji to Wimi hang (harbor). Then, it continues along the shore through Gongsheonpo (a beach known for its black sand) past Mangjang Port, ending at Soesoggak estuary. The 15km (9.3-mile) route takes 5 to 6 hours.

Soesoggak to Oedolgae Rock (Route 6) Starting at Soesoggak, this trail takes you through Seogwipo-si. The road goes past Bomok and Gudumi Ports past Geomeunyoe and the KAL and Paradise hotels. Then, it goes past Sojeongbang falls, Sora Seng, the gallery of painter Lee Joong-seop, and Cheonjiyeon falls, and curves around to end at Oedolgae. The 14km (9-mile) route takes about 5 hours.

Oedolgae to Wolpyeong Pogu (Route 7) Another seaside course, this route goes past Beop-hwan Pogu (port) and Poonglim Resort to get to Wolpyeong Pogu. This 15km (9.3-mile) route takes 4 to 5 hours.

Wolpyeong to Daepyeong Pogu (Route 8) This coastal route continues through palm tree forests and garlic fields to Daepo Pogu and Jusangjeolli (a formation of stone pillars created when the lava erupted from Hallasan and reached the seawater). This route, which was used only by local divers, ends at Daepyeong Port. This 18km (11-mile) route takes about 5 to 5½ hours.

Daepyeong to Hwasun Beach (Route 9) This shorter route is perfect for a half-day hike. It goes from the port up to Molijil and down along the coast to Hwanggaecheon (stream), past the Hwasun Prehistoric Sights. From there, you can choose to go up through the valley to Jinmoreu Dongsan around Gasegi Village and down to Dongha-dong (village), or just take the shortcut from Hwasun to Dongha-dong and around to Hwasun Beach. This 15km (9.3-mile) route takes 4 to 5 hours.

Hwasun to Moseulpo (Route 10) This seaside trail follows the edges of the land going past salt fields and dipping into the small peninsula where Songaksan sits. This is the first time this route has been accessible to the public, and the view from Songaksan is pretty spectacular. The 15km (9.3-mile) route, which ends at Moseulpo, takes 5 to 6 hours.

Moseulpo to Mureung (Route 11) One of the few inland-only trails, it leads from Moseulpo past Jeju-do’s largest cemetery and various historic sites, to end at the Jeju Culture and Ecology Experience Village in Mureung 2(i)-li. This 20km (12-mile) route takes 6 to 7 hours.

Mureung to Hangyeong (Route 12) This trail completes the connection between Seogwipo and Jeju cities, going through fields and along the coast, passing parasitic cones and ending at Jolbuam Rock at Yongsu Pogu (port). This 18km (11-mile) route takes 5 to 6 hours.

Horseback Riding
Jeju Island used to be a breeding and training ground for the ponies used by Mongol invaders. The horses you’ll see on the island are the descendents of native horses which were interbred with the Mongolian ponies. They’re smaller than the horses you may be used to riding at home, but they’re quite hardy and can carry loads of up to 104kg (230 lb.).

There are about 20 horse ranches on the island, most of them on hillsides and mountains. One of the best is the Chowon Seungmajang Ranch (☎ 064/738-0344) in Seogwipo. It’ll cost you about W35,000 for a 30-minute ride.

Paragliding
Jeju-do is one of the best places in the country for paragliding because there are a large number of launch sites, regardless of your skill level. Because the island has over 360 oreum (parasitic volcanoes), there are suitable sites for launching no matter which way the wind is blowing. The best flying conditions are from September to October, but you can fly year-round (except during typhoon season). Equipment rentals are about W30,000 and a full training for beginners costs about W200,000. Contact the Jeju-do Paragliding Association (☎ 064/723-9224) for more info.

Parks & Gardens

Bunjae Artpia ★ The world’s largest botanical garden, the Artpia was started over 30 years ago as a labor of love by a dedicated farmer. There are now more than 100 rare tree species on display here, along with 100,000 wildflowers and native Jeju plants. Stroll through and enjoy.

Hallim Park ★★ A botanical garden located alongside a beach, this park is divided into 16 areas, categorized by the types of plants grown there. The two most popular sites in the park, though, are the two caves. The Hyeopjaegul is one of many lava caves in the park, but is unusual in that it has stalactites and stalagmites. The Ssangyong-gul ★ (ssangyong means twin dragons) is the only spot in the world that is actually a cave within a cave—in other words, a second cave opens within the first cave’s caverns. There is also a children’s amusement park, a folk village, and an outdoor resort facility.

Hyeopjae-li 2487, Hallimeup, Jeju-si. ☎ 064/796-0001. www.hallimpark.co.kr. Admission W5,000 adults, W4,000 teens, W2,500 children and seniors. Mar–Oct daily 8:30am–6pm; Nov–Feb daily 9am–5pm. From the Jeju-si Bus Terminal, take a bus bound for Hallim (takes 50 min.). From Seogwipo-si, take a westbound bus to Hallim and get off at Hallim Park (takes 80 min.).

Halla Sumogwon (Halla Arboretum) This arboretum, located at the foot of Hallasan, was established for the study and preservation of Jeju-do’s natural environment. There are over 2,700 endangered rare plants and over 900 native and subtropical plants.

Tamna Mokseogwon  This rock and plant garden is home to a whimsical mix of oddly shaped rocks and sculptures set amid native trees. A private collection started in 1960, the stones were gathered one by one from beaches around the area. Among these stones are about 500 that are shaped like human heads.

1795-1 Ara 1-dong, Jeju-si. 064/702-0203 (Korean only). www.moksokwon.com (Korean only). Admission W3,000 adults, W2,000 teens and military, W1,500 children. Free tours offered in Jan, Apr, and Oct. Nov–Feb daily 8:30am–5pm; Mar–Oct daily 8am–6pm. From Jeju Airport, take bus no. 500 and get off at Tamna Mokseogwon (about a 35-min. ride). From the Jeju Intercity Bus Terminal, take bus no. 502 headed for Jeju University and get off at the Tamna Mokseogwon stop (bus no. 502 runs daily every 30 min. and the ride should take about 20 min.).

Scuba Diving

Already well known for its amazing women divers, the underwater scene around Jeju-do is spectacular. Because it gets both cold and warm ocean currents, the biodiversity of the marine life here is hard to beat. There is a wonderful mix of colorful tropical coral and temperate species, as well as unusual underwater rock formations formed by lava flows that quickly cooled when they hit the water. There are great dives all around Jeju and its surrounding islands, but the best known is Udo, off the eastern coast. There is also a group of four small islands off of the coast of Seogwipo that are popular with divers. The clearest waters are found off Seogwipo, Udo, Sibling Island, Chagwido, and Gwantal Island.

Water temperatures are generally quite chilly, especially compared to other tropical areas in Asia. The best conditions are from September to November, when there are more fish and visibility is excellent. It is a bit difficult to find English-speaking instructors, but check the diving directory on Scuba in Korea (www.scubainkorea.com) for dive trips. You can also contact Big Blue 33 (064/733-1733; www.bigblue33.co.kr) or Pacific Diving School (064/762-2220) in Seogwipo.

Surfing

Jeju-do is popular with Japanese surfers, since the island’s southern coast catches the same Pacific swells that make Okinawa so popular. Jungmun Beach is the main surfing area on the island. If you don’t want to lug your board, you can rent one there for about W20,000 per day. Surfers say that the best waves are on the next beach to the west (at the bottom of the cliffs below the Hyatt Regency). During typhoon season, it’s reported to have 3.6m (12-ft.) tubes. Another good location is Sagye Beach, at Hwaseon, near Sanbangsan.

Windsurfing

The Korean Windsurfing Association Cheju Training Center (064/782-7552) at Shinyang Beach is your best bet for reliable information about windsurfing or boardsailing on Jeju-do. Although their main business isn’t rentals, they have a pretty good selection of boards to rent. The best time for windsurfing is around mid-September through March, when the strong winds from the northwest create good conditions. Another popular spot is Hamdeok Beach on the north coast.
BOAT TOURS
A fun way of exploring the island is to take a tour around it. Most popular are the underwater submarine tours, but the glass-bottom boats are more economical. Unfortunately, guided tours are generally only in Korean.

Daeguk Submarine Tour (Kids) This long, white submarine is a cross between a submarine and a boat. The passenger area is fully submerged underwater and you can see the underwater display from round fisheye portals. The top part of the submarine remains above water. The ride lasts about 30 minutes and starts from Seogwipo.
707-5, Seohong-dong, Seogwipo-si. (064)732-6060. www.submarine.co.kr (Korean). W45,000, W39,600 junior high/high-school students, W29,700 children. Daily 7:20am–6pm; departs every 45 min., depending on weather conditions.

Jeju Submarine Tour (Kids) For those of us who don’t scuba dive, this is a great way to see the beautiful underwater flora and fauna around the island. If you’re lucky, you may even catch a glimpse of one of the famed women divers of Jeju-do. This yellow submarine ride lasts about 80 minutes and goes around Mara-do.

Seogwipo Pleasure Boat (Kids) A nice way to enjoy the scenery around Seogwipo and its surrounding waters, these glass-bottom boats are specially equipped to show you not only what’s over the water, but also what’s under it. You can also enjoy a beer or another drink from the boat’s bar while letting the sea breezes whip through your hair during this 80-minute ride. Boats depart 18 times a day during high season, but check schedules since weather is a determining factor. There are two types of tours: the more expensive “Romantic Cruise,” which caters to newlyweds, and the “Paradise.” Both have similar schedules.
Seohong-dong 707 (dock at Seogwipo Port), Seogwipo-si. (1330) (Korea Travel Phone). Paradise: W15,000 adults, W7,500 ages 7–18. Romantic Cruise: W21,500 adults, W15,000 ages 13–18, W9,000 ages 7–12, free for children 6 and under. Boarding 11am, 2:10pm, 3:20pm, 4:30pm. Bus no. 600 from Jeju Airport stops directly at the port.

SHOPPING
Given that Jeju-do is such a major tourist destination, there is no shortage of shops or shopping areas. You can buy local products in specialty shops and traditional markets, or shop for jewelry or high-end fashion at department stores and duty-free shops. If you can time it right, try and visit the 5-day markets, so-called because they’re held every 5 days at the same location. For more information, see the “Markets” section, below.

Some of Jeju-do’s offerings include products inlaid with mother-of-pearl, black coral pipes (and other things made of coral), sculptures and souvenirs made from lava rock, shells, and locally made shawls and sweaters. You can also take home a jar of the famous Jeju honey (made from local mandarin orange or clover flowers).

BEST SHOPPING AREAS
One of the major shopping areas in Jeju-si is Tap-dong, which is located in the center of the city. There is an underground shopping center there, dedicated mostly to women’s fashions. Another, newer shopping area is the Ildo District in Jeju-si, where there are some great places to eat too. The oldest shopping area in Jeju-si is the Chilseong-lo area, which used to be the center of town under Japanese occupation. There are still many shops here and the addition of bars and game rooms has revitalized the area.

In Seogwipo-si, the streets of Jungjeong-lo are filled with shops great for browsing, including the Dongmyeon Department Store and the Maeil (“Everyday”) Market. The area is located between Jungjang-dong and Jeongbang-dong. The department store has more expensive and name-brand merchandise. The rest of the Maeil Market is bustling with small vendors selling their wares on the street. Most of them specialize in women’s clothing.

More diverse and unpredictable are the O-il Jang (“5-Day” Markets), which happen every 5 days (of course) in fixed locations throughout the island. There are markets in Jeju city, Seogwipo, Hallim, Jungmoon, Sehwa, Hamdeok, Goseong, Daejeong, Seongsan, and Yeoseon. They sell everything from seafood, agricultural goods (such as Jeju’s famous mandarins when they are in season), clothes, and household goods.

For inexpensive and large-scale shopping, try the Hanaro Mart in Seogwipo or the E-Mart in Tap-dong.

SHOPPING A TO Z

Arts & Crafts

Jeju Folk Arts Complex Although you’ll find souvenirs and tchotchkes all over the island, if you want authentic handicrafts made by artisans, this is the place to shop. Don’t be fooled by the name; the building is really just one big gift shop. The island’s craftsmen often have a number of workshops and displays showing off their traditional methods and talents. It’s open daily from 9am to 6pm. ☎️ 064/713-7142. Take the intracity bus bound for Joseon and get off at the Hwabuk Jugong Apartments. The Jeju Folk Arts Complex is right across the street from the bus stop.

Fashion

Jung-ang Underground Shopping District Be prepared to bargain at this crowded arcade of shops. The small stores specialize in women’s fashions or groceries. The district opens daily at 9am and closes at 10pm, but individual shop hours tend to vary depending on the whims of the owners. Take one of the local buses in Jeju-si and get off at the Gwandeokjeong, Jung-ang-no, or Dongmun Market stops.

Markets

These traditional markets are mostly good for looking (how are you going to take 10 pounds of seafood on the plane with you?). They are still a fun way to experience the flavor of the island. Although there are O-il Jang (“5-Day” Markets) in Sehwa, Hamdeok, Hallim, Goseong, Daejeong, Seongsan, and Pyoseon, I’ve listed only the ones in the major areas. Those markets not listed as 5-day open daily.

Dongmun Market This traditional market used to be a beast to navigate, since the moving carts and street vendors were chaotic, to say the least. With recent “restructuring,” goods are a bit easier to find as similar vendors have grouped together. Along with smiling pigs’ heads, you’ll see piles of chile powder, and rows and rows of glistening fresh fish from the ocean nearby. The market is located in the Jung-ang-no area of Jeju-si, around Sanjicheon, and is open daily from 8am to 6pm.
Jeju O-il Jahng (5-Day Market)  The vendors at this market sell mostly homegrown foods and local seafood. You can see dried fish and seaweed piled high as locals bargain for their dinner staples. The market is open on the 2nd, 7th, 12th, 17th, 22nd, and 27th of each month. Vendors’ hours are from 8am to 1 hour after sunset.

Jungmun O-il Jang (5-Day Market)  Located in the Jungmun area of Seogwipo-si, this market specializes in agricultural and marine goods, medicinal herbs, livestock, and other foods. Updated in 2000, the market is now run by the Youth Association of Jungmun. Open on the 3rd, 7th, 13th, 18th, 23rd, and 28th days of each month; vendors’ hours are from 8am to 1 hour after sunset.

Seogwipo Daily Market and Arcade  In the middle of the commercial district of Seogwipo city, this traditional market has been modernized and enclosed in a covered arcade. With over 200 stores and almost 150 street vendors, it’s still a bustling marketplace where you can find everything from clothes to dried seaweed. Open 5am to 11pm, they even have a children’s playground and four stories of free parking (1 hr.).

Seogwipo O-il Jang (5-Day Market)  For over 50 years, this market has been a trading center for local goods. Located in the Jungmun area of Seogwipo-si, this market specializes in locally grown foods, fresh seafood, medicinal herbs, and other local specialties. With almost 1,000 vendors, there’s plenty to see. The market is open on the 4th, 9th, 14th, 19th, 24th, and 29th day of each month. Vendors’ hours are from sunrise (usually around 6am, but later in the winter) to 1 hour after sunset.

7 JEJU-DO AFTER DARK

The main tourist district in Jeju-si is Tap-dong-lo (Tap-dong St.), which starts near Jeju port. You can enjoy a late dinner, shop the night street vendors, ride the handful of amusement park rides at Topland Amusement Park, or just walk along the boardwalk. Many bars and places in the area stay open until 4am.

Other than that, most of Jeju-si’s bars are located in the “old city” near city hall. This is where the young college kids and Jeju-do’s English teachers hang out.

In Seogwipo, the nightlife is centered around the luxury hotels and resorts. The Jungmun Tourist Complex has a bunch of upscale hotel lounges and karaoke bars. Also, many major hotels have casinos.

PERFORMING ARTS

Jeju Culture and Arts Center  Located in the middle of Jeju-si, the center was built in 1988. It has a large 902-seat theater for major performances, two smaller theaters, and an exhibition hall. Various exhibits and performances by both local performers and international acts are held throughout the year. 852 Ildo 2-dong, Jeju-si. 064/754-5231 or 754-5251.

Jeju Magic World  This 2,000-seat performance space features acts by acrobats, stunt riders, magicians, and other performers (including about 40 actors from Shanghai). Performances are at 10am, 2pm, 4pm, and 6pm daily March through September (the last two performances are at 3:30 and 5:20pm Oct–Feb). 064/746-9005 (Korean only) or call the Korea Travel Phone (1330). Tickets W15,000 adults, W10,000 teens, W7,000 children. Best to take a taxi from downtown Jeju, since no buses go directly there. About a 10-min. drive from the airport.
CASINOS
Many of Jeju-do’s luxury hotels have casinos, which are open 24/7 to visitors only, so don’t forget to take your passport. Hotels in Jeju-si, which have casinos, include the Hyatt, Jeju KAL, the Jeju Oriental, Crowne Plaza, and the Paradise. In Seogwipo, the Jeju Shilla and the Lotte are the only hotels with casinos.

BARS
Jeju City
Several small pubs line the streets in the “old city” opposite Jeju’s City Hall. A fun bar in the area that’s friendly to women is the Bull’s Darts ★★ (☏ 064/759-5559; www.dartskorea.co.kr), whose founder runs a monthly women’s darts league. Games start at ₩500 and cocktails are ₩7,000. Open at 7am daily, it closes at 4am on weekdays and stays open an extra wee hour on weekends. To get to this underground bar, head down the street to the left of Holly’s Coffee Shop and take the first right. Walk to the building with the flashy neon lights, and then head down the stairs on the far left of the building.

One of the few places in the country where you can get a genuinely good beer is at Modern Time ★ (☏ 064/748-4180), a microbrew run by a German-Spaniard and his Korean nephew, which is located in ShinJeju, about a block from the Jeju Grand Hotel. It’s located on the second floor—you can’t miss their large sign and stainless steel brew tanks, visible from the window. Open daily noon to 2am.

The flashiest club in Jeju-do (if not all of South Korea) is the Jeju Aroma Super Dome Nightclub (☏ 064/749-8990), a four-story extravaganza with Vegas-like performers, DJs, bands, and 100 private “booking” rooms (for those on blind dates set up by “booking” agents). Best to go with a group and get a set drink/anju (drinking snacks) menu (for example, a plate of fruit and three bottles of beer for ₩50,000). Open daily 7pm to 2am (the dome opens up nightly at 10:30pm and 1:30am, and one extra time on summer nights).

Seogwipo City
Seogwipo’s nightlife is mostly found in the luxury hotels in the Jungmun resort complex. One of the more relaxed is the Ollae Library Bar at the Shilla Hotel, with jazz music and an upscale atmosphere, or the lobby lounge at the Shilla, which is popular for people-watching. You can belt out a song at the J3 Karaoke Bar or have a mixed cocktail in the Island Lounge of the Hyatt Regency.

For those missing a hamburger or fish and chips, Seoul’s famed Gecko’s (☏ 064/739-0845; www.geckosterrace.com; 2156-3 beonji, Saekdal-dong, Seogwipo-si) now runs a location just outside the Jungmun resort complex in Seogwipo. Play a round of pool or darts while you enjoy a beer on tap. Open daily noon to 2am.
Although the classification of the Korean language is debated, many believe that it belongs to the Altaic language group, which includes Turkish and Finnish. Others describe it as a “language isolate,” which is exactly what it sounds like—a language unrelated to any others. The spoken language bears similarities to Mongolian and shares some words with Chinese and Japanese, but the written language is unique.

About 2,000 years ago, there were two distinct dialects on the peninsula, one spoken by the Goguryeo people up north and the other by the Baekje and Shilla residents in the south. When Shilla leaders unified the peninsula, they also produced one homogenized language from which modern Korean originated. Still, due to the difficulty in travel, regional dialects remain even today (about six major ones in all).

Korean grammar, pronunciation, and sentence structures are generally standard with fewer exceptions than English. The basic sentence structure is subject-object-verb, with verbs always ending a sentence. Many pronouns are understood and not often used, and there are no articles. Based on its long Confucian history, the language has two basic levels of speech—one to be used with your elders or superiors, and the other with your equals or subordinates. Most often the honorific is added to the verb endings. When in doubt, it’s always best to use the polite form.

1 THE KOREAN ALPHABET & PRONUNCIATION GUIDE

The Korean alphabet (Hangeul) was invented in 1441 by a team of scholars under the reign of King Sejong. It is made up of 24 letters—14 consonants and 10 vowels. It is what is known in linguistic circles as a syllabary, which means that no letter can stand alone. At least one vowel and at least one consonant are combined to make a syllable, and each syllable is written separately.

There are two problems with Romanizing Korean: (1) there is no standard and (2) some of the sounds in Korean don’t exist in English. In the past few years the Korean government has tried to introduce a new, better standard for approximating Korean sounds with the English alphabet. I’ve generally followed this standard in the book.

The following is a simple guide to help with some pronunciation.

THE CONSONANTS

| ೎ | A cross between “g” and “k,” pronounced like in the word “go,” now spelled with the letter “g” (old spelling was “k”). |
| ೏ | A double consonant, the sound of a hard “g” or “k” as in the Spanish “queso,” spelled “kk.” |
| ್ | Pronounced the same as “n,” and spelled with an “n.” |
| ೐ | A cross between “d” and “t,” as in “dark,” spelled with a “d” (old spelling: “t”). |

NUMBERS

Koreans have two ways of counting. One system is based on the Chinese counting method and the other is the traditional Korean way. In general, the Chinese system is used to count objects and money and the Korean system is used to count people.

DRINKING LAWS

The legal drinking age is not strictly enforced in South Korea. Underage drinking is curbed more by the reluctance of bartenders to serve youth than by strict enforcement of the law. Still, the legal drinking age is 20 (or more specifically Jan 1 of the year the person turns 20, since everyone is considered a year older when the year turns). The legal drinking age for U.S. military stationed in South Korea is 21. Bars and nightclubs generally open from 6pm to midnight daily with longer hours (some opening from noon to the early-morning hours) on Friday and Saturday. In some areas of Seoul (like in Itaewon or Hongik) and other large cities, some bars stay open 24 hours. Beer and soju (South Korea’s infamous vodka-like liquor) are widely available in grocery and convenience stores, while wine is more likely to be found at specialty wine shops. Traditional Korean liquors (like makgeolli) can be found in traditional restaurants and some trendy bars. Alcohol is sold in department stores, supermarkets, and convenience stores.

There are no open-container laws in South Korea, so you may see plenty of people enjoying their beverages on the beach, picnicking in the park, or walking out of a bar. However, don’t even think about driving while intoxicated.

DRIVING RULES

See “Getting There & Getting Around,” p. 28.

ELECTRICITY

Most of South Korea is on a 220-volt, 60-cycle system (the plugs with two round prongs), but a few major hotels have 110-volt, 60-cycle systems. Check before plugging in any electronics. It’s very difficult to find universal plug adapters, so it’s best to buy your own before you arrive.

EMBASSIES & CONSULATES

The following are in Seoul: U.S. (02/397-4114; http://seoul.usembassy.gov), U.K. (02/3210-5500; http://ukinkorea.fco.gov.uk/en), Canada (02/3455-6000; www.korea.gc.ca), and Australia (02/2003-0100; www.australia.or.kr). There are Honorary British (051/7733-1055), Canadian (051/246-7024), and Australian (051/647-1762) consulates in Busan. See the Seoul and Busan chapters for addresses and directions.

EMERGENCIES

Dial 112 anywhere in the country for the police. Dial 119 for the fire department and medical emergencies, or ☏ 1339 for medical emergencies (although most operators speak only Korean). Hotel staff can also arrange for a doctor or an ambulance.

INTERNET ACCESS South Korea’s Internet connectivity is legendary as it leads the world in Wi-Fi (wireless fidelity) hot spots. Internet service is offered in public places such as airports. PC bangs (PC rooms), where you can rent an Internet-connected PC, and Internet cafes are easy to find throughout the country. Love motels often offer in-room PCs with high-speed Internet. See the “Staying Connected” section in chapter 3 for details.

LANGUAGE Korean is the official language of South Korea. Although most schoolchildren learn rudimentary English starting from elementary school, your regular Korean on the street will not be able to speak it. The government has taken great pains to make sure English signs and announcements are available on subways, city streets, and highways, but bus signs, menus, and other signage are usually only in Korean. Consider picking up a Korean-English dictionary and/or phrase book, such as the Lonely Planet Korean Phrase Book. See chapter 13, “Useful Terms & Phrases.”

LEGAL AID If you need legal assistance, contact your embassy or consulate immediately. Although they aren’t lawyers, they may be able to refer you to an English-speaking attorney. If you’re arrested, you’re not entitled to your one phone call. Although the police are required to contact your embassy, they may do it in writing, which may take up to a week.

MAIL Post offices in South Korea can be easily spotted by their red signs with a white symbol of three stylized swallows on it, and they say post office in English. They’re open 9am to 6pm Monday through Friday (until 5pm Nov–Feb). International rates are as follows: postcards W350; airmail letter up to 10 grams W480; printed matter up to 20 grams W500; and registered mail up to 10 grams W1,780. Airmail to North America takes about 5 to 10 days, but delays are not uncommon. For sending packages overseas, UPS (☏ 02/1588-6886; www.ups.com),
FAST FACTS SOUTH KOREA

For Residents of the United States To find your regional passport office, either check the U.S. State Department website or call the National Passport Information Center toll-free number (877/487-2778) for automated information.

POLICE Dial 112 anywhere in the country for the police. Police stations are clearly marked in English.

SMOKING Although South Korea has one of the highest smoking rates in the world, the government has been aggressive in its antismoking campaign. Smoking is banned in public buildings, hospitals, schools, subway platforms, bus stops, office hallways, stadiums and restrooms. If you're caught violating the smoking ban, you may be fined 20,000 to 30,000.

TAXES Value-added tax (VAT) is levied on most goods and services at the standard 10% rate and usually included in the retail price. You can receive a refund on your VAT if you purchase your item at a shop with a tax-free shopping sign. Ask for a Global Refund Cheque payment slip at the time of your purchase. You can get your refund, within 3 months of purchase, at the Cash Refund Office located at Gate 28 of Incheon Airport.

TELEPHONES See “Staying Connected” in chapter 3.

TIME South Korea is 9 hours ahead of GMT (Greenwich Mean Time). The country does not observe daylight saving time.

TIPPING Tipping is not customary in South Korea, but feel free to do so if you’ve received extraordinary service. In most tourist hotels, a 10% service charge is added to your bill (on top of the VAT). In some major restaurants, a 3% to 10% service charge may be added to your bill. When riding a taxi, it’s not necessary to tip, but let him keep the change.

TOILETS There are free public rest-rooms available at most subway stations, bus terminals, train stations, and tourist Federal Express (080/023-8000; www.fedex.com/kr_english), and DHL (02/716-0001; www.dhl.co.kr) have branch offices in Seoul and a few other major cities.

NEWSPAPERS & MAGAZINES English versions of two Korean newspapers, the Korean Herald (www.koreaherald.co.kr) and The Korea Times (www.koreatimes.co.kr), can be found at convenience stores; street stalls; hotels; or bus, train, and subway terminals for about W600. News magazines issued abroad can be found in most large hotel bookstores.

PASSPORTS Allow plenty of time before your trip to apply for a passport; processing normally takes 3 weeks but can take longer during busy periods (especially spring). And keep in mind that if you need a passport in a hurry, you’ll pay a higher processing fee. See www.frommers.com/planning for information on how to obtain a passport. attractions. However, many restrooms vary from the usual Western-style toilets to the traditional squat toilets. It’s best to carry a small packet of tissues with you at all times.

Visas A visa is not needed for most visitors staying for 30 days and under.

British, Australian, and New Zealand citizens can visit for up to 90 days without a visa. Canadian citizens can visit for up to 90 days without a visa and can extend their stay for up to 6 months.

U.S. and South African citizens visiting for fewer than 30 days do not require a visa. For trips up to 90 days, Americans need a C-3 short-term visitor visa. For short-term business trips (up to 90 days), you’ll need a C-2 short-term business visa. Both are valid for multiple entries within a 5-year period (or until your passport expires). In order to get the visa, you’ll need to file the application (available for download at www.mofat.go.kr), along with a photo and fee (generally $45 for U.S. citizens, though you should check the website to see if additional fees apply). Business travelers need an additional letter, invoice, or contract showing the nature of their business in South Korea. Submit visa applications by mail or in person to a South Korean embassy or consulate near you. I’ve listed many of those offices in the planning chapter.

Visitor Information The Korea Tourism Organization (KTO) has an info desk between gates 1 & 2 and 12 & 13 on the arrival floor of the Incheon Airport (032/743-2600, ext. 3; daily 9am–10pm).

The main KTO office is located off of Jonggak Station B1, KTO Building (T2 Tower), level B1, 40, Cheonggyecheon-no, Jung-gu, Seoul 100-180 (02/729-9497, ext. 499; daily 9am–8pm; http://english.visitkorea.or.kr). It publishes a variety of free brochures and maps, as well as providing transportation reservations and other travelers’ assistance.

One of the best services the KTO provides is what they call Goodwill Guides. These English-speaking volunteers will provide free translation and travel assistance to you. Visit the KTO website (see above) at least a week in advance of your trip, click on “Goodwill Guide” in the “Travel Tools” box on the right, and input the dates you are traveling. If you didn’t do any advance planning, you can see which guides are available for the upcoming 3 days. You can also e-mail them at goodwillguide@mail.knto.or.kr for additional assistance.

The Tourist Assistance Center can be reached at 1330 (or from a cellphone, dial the area code of the region plus 1330). In areas other than the 22 registered cities, call 080/757-2000 (toll-free).

The KTO has offices all over the world, including several in the U.S.: Chicago, 737 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 910, Chicago, IL 60611 (312/981-1717; chicago@kntoamerica.com); Hawaii, 1188 Bishop St. Ph1, Honolulu, HI 96813 (808/521-8066); Los Angeles, 5509 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 201, Los Angeles, CA 90036 (323/634-0280; la@kntoamerica.com); and the New York metropolitan area, 2 Executive Dr., Suite 750, Fort Lee, NJ 07024 (201/585-0909; ny@kntoamerica.com). There are also offices in England (New Zealand House Haymarket, 3rd Floor, London SW1Y 4TE); Canada (700 Bay St., Suite 1903, Toronto, Ontario M5G 1Z6); Australia (Australia Square Tower, Level 16, 264 George St., Sydney, N.S.W. 2000); and major cities throughout Asia.

Water Drinking tap water in South Korea is not recommended. Filtered or bottled water is always available in restaurants and convenience stores usually for about W500.
